ORDER BOOK OF GEN. ARTHUR ST. CLAIR.

The joint resolution (S. R. 26) authorizing the Secretary of War to negotiate with John T. Dolan, of Portland, Oreg., for purchase of original manuscript copy of "Order book of Gen. Arthur St. Clair" was announced as next in order; and the Secretary proceeded to read the joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, to save further reading, at first glance it seems clear that this "Order book" ought to be and must be already the property of the Government. As the Senator who is in charge of the joint resolution is not present, I ask that it go over without prejudice.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator is entirely mistaken in supposing this "Order book" to be the property of the Government.

Mr. HALE. I want an opportunity to look into it at any rate.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is the property of a citizen of my State who lives in Portland, Oreg., and it comes down to him as an heirloom. I have it in my possession here in this building. It has been exhibited to the Committee on Military Affairs, and the result was a favorable report of this joint resolution.

The whole thing, I will state to the Senator, as shown by the joint resolution, is left in the hands of the Secretary of War. If, upon examination, he thinks that it would not be proper for the Government to purchase the book, of course he is not bound to do it. If he believes it is in the interest of the accuracy of history and would be a good thing for the Government to have, then the Secretary of War is authorized to purchase it at a sum not to exceed $500.

Mr. HALE. Let the joint resolution go over for the present, and I will take an opportunity to look into the matter with the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. All right. I ask that the joint resolution may retain its place on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over without prejudice.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, that is the last bill on the Calendar, except pension bills and those which have been passed over. I have never known before in my service, either at this time in the session or even later, when the Senate has succeeded in considering all the cases on the Calendar, and has reached the last case. That is an indication that the Senate is doing business.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am sorry that when the Senator said that there was not a full Senate that they might have all heard it. Therefore, I suggest the propriety of a roll call.

PROMOTION OF COMMERCE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1348) to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and the common defense; to promote commerce and to encourage the deep-sea fisheries.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I trust Senators who have been summoned to the Chamber will not labor under the impression that I had anything to do with the call of the Senate, as I propose to address the Senate a few moments.

Mr. COCKRELL. I take the responsibility for the call.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Commerce, from which the bill under consideration was reported, it is perhaps proper that I should occupy a few minutes in its discussion before the final vote is taken. I do not propose to discuss the details of the measure, which have received careful and able consideration from both sides of the Chamber. I have listened very attentively to the debate, and while some objections urged against the bill have disturbed me somewhat, I am nevertheless satisfied that the enactment of the measure into law is demanded by the best interests of the American people.

It has been well said that if the law works satisfactorily great good will come to the country, while if it fails to meet the expectations of its friends, it can, and doubtless will, be repealed.

Mr. President, I have little patience with the suggestion that Congress will never be able to repeal this legislation if it becomes law, and I have no patience whatever with the charge made in this Chamber that the moneyed interests of the country would prevent such repeal.

Mr. President, I have been a member of this body for eleven years, and as yet no attempt has been made to influence any vote of mine—at least, I have no knowledge of such attempt—by the railroads or steamship lines, or any other combination of capital, nor do I believe any other vote has been influenced by mercenary or other dishonorable considerations, and I suggest that no such intimations have a place in this Chamber.

Congress repealed the law granting a bounty to producers of American sugar, and Congress will repeal this law if it works disadvantageously to the best interests of the people of this country.

I am not troubled, Mr. President, about the constitutionality of the proposed legislation or the charge that the subsidy is a gift to private interests. Even if it shall prove to be a gift, it will be no worse than other legislation that has had the support of some Senators who seem to be greatly disturbed over the pending measure. At every session of Congress we vote a gratuity to the Southern railroads for the carriage of so-called fast mails. It is subsidy, and nothing but subsidy, infinitely less defensible than the provisions of this bill.

Millions upon millions of dollars have been expended on the Missouri and Mississippi rivers, ostensibly for the benefit of commerce, but in reality largely to protect private property. Very soon a river and harbor bill will reach this body carrying appropriations aggregating $60,000,000 or $70,000,000. Some of those appropriations will be for the deepening and enlargement of streams that can never be made of any real advantage to the commerce of the country. The Trinity River, with its $1,000,000 largess and its artesian wells, and our old friend, the Ouachita River, will again be on deck, and numerous insignificant streams will be here demanding and receiving recognition by way of an appropriation. The capacious and rapacious maw of the Mississippi River will be wide open, and additional millions will be poured into it above New Orleans, not for commerce, but for the protection and preservation of the plantations along that mighty stream.

Senators on both sides of the Chamber will vote for those appropriations, but when it comes to this bill, designed to rehabilitate the merchant marine of the country in the hope that the American flag may be seen in foreign ports and on the high seas, Senators on the other side work themselves into a frenzy and indulge in wild denunciation of the proposed legislation as an improper, unjustifiable, and unconstitutional expenditure of public money. Out on such inconsistency!

The able and erudite senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] says this legislation will do no good, because England, France, and Germany will retaliate by increasing their subsidies, and thus our legislation will be nullified. That may be so, and yet, at best, it is a prophecy. My answer to that is that they may or may not do it. If they do it, I would then favor increasing our subsidy, and, to use an expression not exactly nautical, I would have our Government "play the game to the limit" until such time as we secured the desired result. We can not always submit to a condition that enables foreign governments to carry more than 90 per cent of our products in foreign vessels. We shall never see a more propitious time to try the experiment than in this era of marvelous industrial and commercial prosperity.

Foreign governments may increase their subsidies, but it is absolutely certain that at the present time some of them are greatly disturbed over this proposed legislation. The Boston Herald editorially opposes this bill, yet I find the following dispatch in its news columns:

FEAR OUR SUBSIDY BILL—BRITISH SHIPOWNERS BELIEVE IF IT BECOMES LAW IT WILL BE A BLOW TO BRITISH SHIPBUILDING.

LONDON, February 4, 1902.

British shipowners have been watching with great interest the efforts of the United States to foster the growth of the merchant marine. They believe that if the subsidy bill in Congress becomes a law it will deal a severe blow to British shipbuilding. To-morrow the chambers of shipping of the United Kingdom will meet. Colonel Ropner, M. P., will be reelected president. In the speech which he will deliver he will point this out as a danger which is threatening Great Britain's supremacy in the ocean carrying trade.

The London Times, in a recent editorial, sounds a note of alarm and calls on British shipowners to make the best defense they can against what that great paper calls "a very serious attack." The Times also says that it will be "even more severely felt by the subsidized mercantile marine of the Continental nations."

Mr. Tyrrel E. Biddle, in a recent communication to the Washington Post, gives an interesting sketch of a conversation in the Liverpool Exchange, participated in by British capitalists and shipowners, the significant remark of one of them being:

If that shipping bill is passed, it will be the last straw on the back of British commerce. Your protective duties have injured our trade immensely. All we have left is our ships. Take them from us, and good-by to England's commercial supremacy.

Mr. President, it goes without saying that if this bill is bad for Great Britain and the Continental nations it must be good for the United States.

In the interests of commerce it is proposed that the Government shall build an interoceanic canal, the cost of which will be hundred of millions of dollars and the value of which to the commerce of the United States is largely problematical. No one is wise enough to state with any degree of accuracy the cost of the canal, its value to commerce, or its cost of maintenance. One thing, however, is known about it, and that is that the construction will take at least $200,000.000 out of the Treasury, and many thoughtful people are prepared to see that amount doubled before the enterprise is completed. But even those startling figures do not seriously disturb the American people, who have decreed that the canal shall be built and who are willing to take chances in the matter of its construction.

Equally have the American people decreed that the American merchant marine shall be restored to the seas, and it is incredible that such intense opposition is shown to this bill, which, at most, will take from the Treasury a comparatively small sum, which expenditure can be terminated at the will of Congress.

Mr. President, I shall be glad of an opportunity to give my vote to this bill. Experiment though it be, it appeals to my Americanism. I am willing to risk something in the attempt to restore our flag to the ocean and to put lines of steamships on the great highways of commerce. If it succeeds, it will be the grandest achievement of the century, while if it fails it will be no reproach to those of us who made an honest effort to bring about the desired result. I have faith to believe that it will succeed, and in that faith I give my unqualified support to the bill under consideration, which has received the mature and patient consideration of the Committee on Commerce, a committee which is presided over by a Senator who has made this question a life study and on whose judgment and integrity this Senate can safely rely.

Mr. President, my purpose was to say a single word on the general propositions of this bill, and, with this single word, I am content to listen to other Senators who desire to occupy the brief time remaining between now and the hour fixed for the final vote.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I want to say a few words in behalf of the amendment which I have offered to the bill. That amendment provides:

SEC. 16. That none of the compensation, subsidy, or allowance herein provided for shall be paid for or upon any vessel for any voyage thereof that has employed in its crew any Chinese person not entitled to admission to the United States or to the territory thereof.

That amendment, Mr. President, was offered, and is urged at the request of the American Federation of Labor, the Chinese-exclusion commission of California, and the International Seamen's Union of America. Under our shipping laws as they are American seamen have been driven from the Pacific coast. I desire to distinguish between American seamen and white seamen, but American seamen have been driven by the Dingley maritime act of 1884 from the Pacific coast.

Under the provisions of that act the shipmaster may ship his crew in any port in the world, and the American lines upon the Pacific coast, taking advantage of that permission, ship their crews for the round voyage at Hongkong, and not less than from 75 to 80 per cent of the crew of the vessels that ply between ports on the Pacific coast and Chinese ports are Chinese sailors. The chief purpose of the subsidy bill, as stated by the honored Senator from Maine, is to equalize by subsidy the larger cost of sailing American vessels in the foreign trade with the lesser cost of sailing foreign ships in the same trade.

I deny the existence of any such difference, for under the act to which I have referred the owners of lines upon the Pacific coast may go to the cheapest market in which sailor labor is supplied and there secure the crews that are necessary to man and sail their vessels.

Captain Seabury, one of the captains in the employ of the Pacific Mail Steamship Line, testified before the Committee on Immigration of the Senate but a few days ago, and he was asked what were the wages paid to American seamen. His reply was:

We have not had any American crews. We can not get them. We could not get Americans, and I could not tell.

It is perfectly plain why that company employs Chinese crews, when we remember that the Chinese sailor is paid but from $7.50 to $9 per month in American money, while the white sailors must be paid anywhere from $25, which is the lowest, to $35 and $40 per month.

It is claimed, Mr. President, that it is impossible to secure white crews upon the Pacific coast. I start out with the admission that American crews can not be secured, for the simple reason that the better wages for land labor and the inherent dignity of the American citizen will not permit an American to work side by side with the slavish race across the Pacific. But that white crews may be secured at the average and usual price paid for white sailors has been amply proved by the testimony before the committee of the Senate.

There are but two lines upon the Pacific coast—American and British—which carry Chinese crews. The Pacific Mail Line has three vessels. The North Pacific Line has two vessels. Upon these five vessels from 75 to 80 per cent of the entire crew are Chinese. The Canadian Pacific Line carries Chinese below the decks, but they have no Chinese upon the decks, for their officers belong to the royal navy reserve, and Great Britain, mindful of the necessity of competent men to man its navy, will not permit Chinese to be carried under its blue flag. There is a Japanese line called the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, a subsidized line, and this line carries none but Japanese sailors. The carrying of Chinese sailors is prohibited. Then there is the Oceanic Steamship Line, which plies from San Francisco to Australia and to the South Seas. It touches at the harbors of Sydney, Melbourne, and other ports in those seas, and this line carries not a Chinese person upon or below decks. The reason is, Mr. President, that none of the subsidy which is given by New Zealand to its ships will be paid to ships that carry Chinese sailors, and then again the laborers of both Sydney and Melbourne uprise whenever a Chinaman is known to have been brought into those ports upon ships of any nation.

Then we have an American line which plies from San Francisco to San Diego and way up north to Alaska and the Klondike, and upon the ships of this line not a Chinese sailor is carried. The testimony before the committee was that there was no trouble whatever in getting Caucasian crews in any of the ports of the United States or the ports of the Orient. In Hongkong or wherever American or other ships touch if white crews are desired they are available. So that the plea of necessity does not exist. It is purely a matter of dollars and cents to the owners of the ship lines, and, permitted to follow the dictates of their greed, naturally they secure the cheapest seamen whom money will hire.

It is true, Mr. President, that Chinese sailors are desirable for some purposes. They are obedient, they are sober; but while they possess traits such as these, it has been the experience from the time that Chinese sailors first manned vessels between the Pacific coast and China that in times of emergency they have always proved miserable failures. We know from those who testified before the Senate committee that in cases of wreck or collision where it required bravery and presence of mind in the crews, the Chinese have always proved a failure, and ships have been lost and hundreds of lives sacrificed in the waters of San Francisco simply because in times of peril the Chinese crew were stricken by panic, and for that reason there has been a failure to save lives which otherwise would have been saved.

Mr. Furuseth, who testified in behalf of the Seamen's Union, speaking of the supply of Caucasian sailors, said:

> There never was in the last forty years any time in which white seamen could not be obtained in the ports of the United States by paying for them nor in any ports of the Orient, and no one has known that any better than the American shipmaster, as attested by his practice.

He finds it cheaper to drive men to desert in oriental ports, that he may replace them with cheaper men.

We have a proposition by which millions of money are to be provided for shipowners. There is not a dollar nor a measure of relief suggested in this bill for the American sailor or for the white sailor. The white sailor must continue to contest for employment at fair wages with the cheapest and poorest paid sailors upon the face of the earth; and I suggest that if we are to improve American shipping, if we are to increase the number of American ships that ply between the United States and foreign ports, some measure should be adopted to elevate the character of the crews that may now be employed, giving to them better wages and more comforts, in order that the tendency of the American man and boy away from the sea may be turned toward the sea, and we may thus be enabled to man American ships with American or Caucasian crews.

We know, Mr. President, that even in our coastwise trade, by reason of the illiberal laws applicable to the man before the mast and the stoker in the hold, while there are 40,000 seamen engaged in that trade there are not 75 per cent of them American citizens. They are from every country except the United States, and I suggest to the Senate that it is time that its attention be turned to the encouragement of American seamanship as well as to the encouragement of American shipowners and shipbuilders.

As has been said time and time again, and no greater truth can be uttered, that in the hour of peril, when this country may be assailed from without and its life or its integrity threatened, we must depend upon the American sailor, and if our ships are manned by aliens above decks and between decks, members of a a servile race, what is to be the outcome when this country may be matched upon the sea, perhaps with several of the largest naval nations in the world?

Germany to-day is the only nation whose men have a tendency toward the sea. The men of Great Britain seek the land rather than the sea. Men of the United States remain upon the land rather than take to the sea for a living. The reason is our legislation has tended against the interest, the upbuilding of the character and dignity of those to whom we must look to man American ships. This has been the trend rather than to build them up and to strengthen them, to give them the pay they should receive, and to instill into them that self-respect and love of home and country essential to creating great and brave and competent seamen.

Mr. President, I pray that I may live long enough to realize that our country is spontaneously recognized as the greatest on the planet. I will glory when the time comes that our ships will speed through every sea, bearing the commerce of the world between all its ports. But, Mr. President, ill fares the nation that mans its ships with foreign sailors. To do so is unassailable proof that it treats its citizen sailors meanly, and in its system are the seeds of decaying manhood and valor.

Let us have brave ships carrying the flag of freedom and commerce to every wharf laved by the rising and ebbing tides. But let not those ships be manned by an alien and degraded race, but rather by men of our own citizenship, sailors who brave the storms of the ocean, grateful for the protecting laws of a watchful and generous country and so deeply imbued with love for it that, if needs be, when that country may be assailed they will crimson the white foam of the ocean's crested waves with the last drop of blood from their patriotic hearts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Colorado has expired.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I supposed some one on the other side in the fifteen minutes allowed under the rule, would reply to the remarks made by the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MONEY. If no one on the other side desires to speak, I will occupy fifteen minutes.

Mr. President, this bill is obnoxious to me in principle and objectionable in its details. It has been so thoroughly discussed and has been attacked with such force that I see nothing for me to do but to thrash the old straw a little. There are some deficiencies which perhaps have been overlooked, but in the main the argument has been exhaustive, and the report of the minority of the committee itself, if read by the public and by Senators, is sufficiently convincing, it seems to me, without any argument here. There are some things, however, which have been passed unnoticed, and without any attempt to go into the bill in detail in the short space of fifteen minutes, I wish to call attention to one or two of them.

In the first place, we have heard a good deal from the other side of the Chamber about the great loss we are suffering every year, amounting to a hundred and sixty or a hundred and sixty-five million dollars a year, paid to foreign carriers for transporting our products from our shores; and I suppose it might be added for transporting other people's products to our shores, because commerce is not a one-sided affair. It means an exchange of products, an exchange of human service, in which the merchandise or the produce is the concrete; and it must be two-sided.

Have we lost money by that transaction? Do Senators speak advisedly when they say we have lost anything by paying foreign bottoms for carrying our commerce—that is, the outgoing commerce, or the incoming commerce, for that matter? We have never paid a solitary dollar for which we did not get full value received; else we would not have paid it. You might just as well say that you have lost a hundred thousand dollars in building up a plant of any description, or $20,000 which you have paid a contractor for building you a house, because you have parted with the money. You may say when you pay the servant at your house, or your grocery bill at the corner, that you have lost so much money because you have paid for some human service rendered or some article that is the product of human labor. You have gotten the value of your money and you have lost nothing. But on the contrary you have gained a great deal. In other words, you have hired a man or a number of men to do a certain thing cheaper than you could do it yourself, and you have made money by the transaction.

Then in what sense have we lost anything? It is said because our cash has gone into other hands. If we want the home market for ourselves, and if then we want to legislate in such a way as to secure the foreign market as well, by enabling the American manufacturer through the protective tariff to sell his goods abroad from 40 to 60 per cent cheaper than he sells them to his own fellow-citizens at home, in the neighborhood of his factory, are we on top of that not to permit the man who comes here to buy our products to carry home in his own ship what he wants? So we have lost nothing in this regard. But on the contrary we have been a great gainer.

We do not hesitate to employ the foreigner, who comes here at the rate of a million or so a year, to follow the plow and to work in the factory, and we do not think the money paid him has been lost, but we are gainers by it. If his labor was not worth it, he would not receive the pay. We have paid for services that were more valuable to us than the price asked or we would not have paid it, and whenever the pay is not adequate then we will not be able to get anybody to perform it for us, and we will of necessity have to perform it for ourselves.

But it is said we want to build up the shipbuilding industry. Here we have the testimony not only of the Commissioner of Navigation but of the shipbuilders themselves and all the papers that represent the shipping interest, and the Commissioner says that for the past three years we never have had such prosperity in our shipbuilding yards. Does it make any difference, as it seems to to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA], whether the ships are for the coasting trade or for the foreign trade? Why keep up shipyards at all? To have ready the personnel and the material to do anything that may be required by the needs of this country in time of war. That is all, and there is no other reason which can justify a man in voting a tax upon the people to be given to one particular interest. It must be for some ultimate purpose of government. It can not be for the interest of a number of people. The Supreme Court has decided, in the Boston bond case, on account of the great fire, and in the case of the cotton factory in Maine, the Topeka Trust Company case, and a great many other cases, that no matter how largely diffused may be the public benefit of a tax laid upon the people by law, unless it is for governmental purpose or benefit, it is not constitutional.

Now, of course, the word "constitutional" palls upon the ears of people here. Some of them dislike to hear this "damnable iteration" in this Chamber; but we must come to it now and again.

The shipbuilding interest is not an infant industry. Does it need any subvention or subsidy from the United States? The shipowners are rich people, and, according to the statement of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Commerce, who opened this debate, about $1,700,000 will go to one company, which, I believe—at least, I have been told—is the richest corporation in the world owning ships. It is true we are told that all the interests are now agreed and harmonious; that there is no longer any trouble about it. There was a discordant note once. I believe Mr. Hill, a great railroad owner, objected to the bill, but he has become pacified, because he is himself now entering the business, and so, too, he has renounced the principles he advocated and has joined the order of mendicant millionaires, who come here to beg for subsidies, and who, when they are before the committee, confess that they are rich and are making money all the time.

The shipbuilders seem to be doing well. Why more men are not attracted to the business, except that there are more inviting fields open, I do not know. But I can point you to an industry very much more extensive than that of shipbuilding or ship sailing, and it has no subsidy, and it is unlikely ever to have one, and yet in point of distress and in point of inability to make money or even to live it needs more assistance; but it does not ask it.

I have mentioned the report of the Commissioner of Navigation. I do not know whether Senators are going to accept it or not. I find that his reports are used on each side of the Chamber. I find that he is a man of very versatile talents, and he can report in either one way or the other. He has been designated by the Senator from Iowa as an exceedingly useful man. A weathercock is a very useful thing, and the more easily it turns upon its pivot to every breath of wind, the more useful it is. And, generally, when political weathercocks will not turn they are taken down and others put in their places.

We sometimes hear his arguments and opinions quoted and sometimes his statistics. They are so contradictory that you can take your choice. It reminds me of an old colored man who wanted to teach school. He appeared before the board of trustees. He was asked, "What do you teach?" He replied, "reading, writing, and arithmetic." Then he was asked, "Can you teach geography?" He said, "yes, sir." He was asked, "Do you teach that the world is round or flat?" He replied: "I can teach either that it is round or flat as the trustees desire me to do;" and that seems to be what is the matter with the report of the Commissioner of Navigation. He can make the world round or flat just as the authorities may ask him to do.

There is a provision in Title III which nobody seems to consider. It gives a bounty to the deep-sea fisheries. We know that formerly there was a bounty on the amount of fish caught, and that industry has always been exempt from the tax on salt, while the people of the South and the West and all other portions of the country pay a tax on the salt used in salting down meats for domestic use, etc. But in addition to that, now we are asked to levy a tax upon the people to pay a bounty to this industry, because it is supposed, and I presume it is true, to be the nursery of the seamen of the United States; that it is the prime source from which we are to draw hardy fighting sailors, such as shed luster upon American arms in the war of 1776 and 1812 and subsequently. That may be true. But what is the justice to the other people who pay the tax and get no bounty upon so many acres in cultivation or so many mules used in plowing? We hear no complaint that these men are not doing well.

Now, suppose, Senators, that instead of this bill having been framed as the Senator in charge has stated to us, by those interested in it and friendly to it, we had called upon a lot of farmers from the West and the South to do it, would they have put in the bill any such provision as to the deep-sea fisheries? On the contrary, they would have been apt, if they followed the dictates of human nature, to say, "you shall pay the same tax on salt that we do, and considering how much has been paid into your pockets out of our pockets, we will give you half of all the fish you catch." That would be as fair a proposition as this. The farmer is called upon to give a part of what he makes to the fisherman, and he is called upon to take a part of what he makes and give to the millionaire who owns lines of ships and who owns shipyards.

Now, there might be some comment made, and I think justly, upon that provision of Title I for ocean subsidies. I am one of those, and I may be alone here on this side of the House, disagreeing with the minority of the committee on this single point, who believe it would be good policy if Congress should have a report from the Postmaster-General, after full consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, as to between points where we now have no mail and no commerce a line of ships with a reasonable subsidy could be placed, so as to extend American commerce. I think that would be for the public benefit in a very material degree and would not come within any inhibition of the Constitution. I recollect that the first subsidized line that ever existed was under a Democratic Administration. But it was a defined line for a defined route and for a specified time.

Now, we understand that the American Line, I believe it is, is to get $1,717,000 for semiweekly trips from New York to Southampton or Liverpool. Do we need to expend one single dollar there beyond what we pay already? Not a single cent. It will open no new avenues of commerce. We do not advance a solitary producing interest in the United States one cent, but it is a mere bounty, and nothing else, to a corporation which least of all needs to have a single cent paid to it. There are on the average about two steamships leaving the port of New York every day of the three hundred and sixty-five for English ports, and some of them are new ships that run from 24 to 25 knots per hour, yet Congress is to ask the postmaster of New York to detain the mail three days and a half in each week to send it upon subsidized steamers that have not the speed of the fleetest, and thus the commercial business, for which this whole thing is organized, suffers by the delay of its mail. Mr. President, the motto of the postal service of every country in the world is certainty, celerity, security; and here you have destroyed at least one of the main elements, that of celerity, in order to give this bounty to a company which does not need it in the transaction of its business.

As I had the pleasure of remarking the other evening when I yielded the floor, we can not expect to carry all the mails in our ships, because our mail consists just as much of letters received as of letters sent, and if retaliation is to follow, as the Senator from Wisconsin very ably said the other day, and it will undoubtedly do so, then we shall have the British sending over their mail in exclusively British ships, and the French and German and so on doing the same, each nation sending its mail to us concerning our mutual intercourse commercially in its own ships.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. The pending amendment is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 10, after the word "Postmaster-General," insert "until July 1, 1910."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

Mr. BERRY. I think it was not expected that under the agreement a vote should be taken on amendments before 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the order may be read. I should hope that we may go on, if no one desires to speak, and make some progress with the amendments.

Mr. BERRY. Senators, then, ought to have had notice, so that they might be here to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The agreement will be read.

The SECRETARY. The agreement is as follows:

By unanimous consent, it is agreed that on Monday, March 17, at 3 o'clock p. m., a vote shall be taken without further debate on all amendments submitted and to be presented to S. 1348, "To provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and the common defense; to promote commerce and to encourage the deep-sea fisheries," and then on the bill.

On March 15 it was further agreed that—on Monday, March 17, until 3 o'clock, debate shall be limited to fifteen minutes for each Senator, excepting the President pro tempore, who shall have one-half hour.

Mr. BERRY. I do not think we can vote on any amendments before 3 o'clock.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I do not propose to say anything about the unanimous-consent agreement, but I have offered, or given notice of my intention to offer, three amendments, about which I desire to speak very briefly.

The first of these amendments is the repeal of all those parts of the navigation laws which prohibit a citizen of the United States from purchasing his ship where he can buy it cheapest and putting it under the American register. In other words, it is a proposition for free ships pure and simple.

The second of the amendments which I intend to offer is to extend, specifically, the provisions of the antitrust law of 1890 to shipowners and shipyards which enter into any combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade.

The last of the amendments is a simple proposition to allow an American citizen who builds or buys his ship abroad to place it under American registry without subsidy and without the privilege of entering his ship in the coastwise trade.

Now, Mr. President, there are a few salient points in this debate which possibly it is well to accentuate very briefly and without exhausting the patience of the Senate.

The senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], for whose business discernment and practical statesmanship I have as much respect as anyone possibly can have, dwelt the other day with much emphasis upon the immense amount of money paid by the people of the United States for carrying abroad their exports, and he repeated the statement often made that $200,000,000 a year is paid by us to foreigners to carry abroad these exports. It has been stated very often that $600,000 in gold is paid every day by the people of the United States to foreigners for carrying abroad these exported articles.

Mr. President, this is a gross exaggeration. I would be glad if every pound and every ounce of exports in this country should go abroad under the American flag and in American ships. But the navigation laws, as I honestly believe, have trampled the life out of the merchant marine of the United States, and we, the great progressive Republic of the world, the great exemplar of Christianity and civilization, stand to-day isolated and alone in this barbaric exclusion of the right of an American citizen to buy his ship where he can buy it cheapest and then put it under the flag of his country. Even China, whose ports have been opened with shot and shell to the commerce of the world, has repealed her navigation laws; but the United States, singing pæans every hour to our glory and patriotism, under the control of the great party that has made us a world power and said our flag shall float in triumph everywhere, stands isolated upon the old, obsolete, and miserable navigation laws that say to an American citizen, "You shall not have a ship unless you build it in the United States and pay the prices charged by American shipbuilders."

Now, Mr. President, what is the truth in regard to this allegation of $200,000,000 being paid every year to foreigners to carry our commerce? The Commissioner of Navigation in his report for the last year states that after an examination—after an inquiry—he finds that there were 673,455 tons of shipping owned by Americans sailed under foreign flags. He finds that citizens of the United States own 136 steamships that to-day are plying the ocean under foreign flags. If this statement be true, and I have no doubt that it falls under the mark, it shows that Americans own abroad more steamships than we have now under registration in the United States.

I am astonished that the senior Senator from West Virginia, so accurate and acute in regard to all business propositions, has overlooked this conspicuous fact, and that he also ignores the other fact that a large portion of the money received by these ships under foreign flags is spent in the United States for repairs, for supplies, and for wages for seamen at our different ports. But the country—at least that portion of it that is willing to accept without inquiry any proposition made by the dominant party—seems unwilling to believe that this is any exaggeration, and that this enormous amount of $500,000 or $600,000 a day in gold is paid out to foreigners.

Mr. President, this debate is to be closed by my distinguished friend, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce and President pro tempore of the Senate. For more than twenty years I have served on the Commerce Committee with that distinguished statesman, and while we have never agreed, especially in regard to the question of the merchant marine, there has never been a shadow cast upon our personal relations and friendship. I ask that Senator, in closing the debate upon this question, which has excited so much diversity of opinion for so many years, to tell us why Great Britain, with 53 per cent of the carrying trade of the entire world, pays more to her seamen in wages and more in the expense of running her ships upon the ocean than any country in the world except the United States?

In his opening address the Senator from Maine declared to us that the crucial point in this discussion as to the difference between the expense of running an American ship and one under a foreign flag consisted in the difference of wages. How is it possible, if wages is the crucial point, that Great Britain, with 53 per cent of the entire carrying trade of the world, pays more wages and pays more in the general expenses of her ships than any country in the world except the United States, and why is it that Norway, whose seamen live, as the Senator has often told us, upon black bread and smoked fish, and who receive a pittance as compared to that paid to the Chinese sailor, how is it that Norway, with all the high motive and love of the sea which has characterized that people for two hundred and fifty years, lags behind in her merchant marine and can not even approximate to the prosperity of England?

Again, Mr. President, I want the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Commerce to tell us why it is that the English tramp ships, which dominate the ocean, which are seen in every port, which carry her commercial flag everywhere, have never received any subsidy, not even increased mail pay, if that is the cause of it, and why is it that under the bill now before us we are, in taking millions out of the common Treasury of the people of the United States, decreasing the subsidy upon the freight ships which must come in direct competition with the tramps of Great Britain but increasing the subsidy paid to the swift liners of the ocean that do not carry freight and are intended only to carry the mails?

Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee to tell us, as a matter of information, why it is that this subsidy is paid to corporations whose ships are now upon the ocean? Why is it that the capitalists who have put together their capital in order to accumulate additional interest and property are the principal recipients under this bill? Does the American company need a subsidy? The president told us in the Commerce Committee that he made money in summer and lost some in the winter, and he had not been able yet to declare a dividend; but when asked the question directly by a member of the committee, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], "Mr. Griscom, is your company making money, on the whole, or not?" he declined to answer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I should like to answer one of the questions at the present moment, if I may, without interfering with the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine will proceed.

Mr. FRYE. Eight years ago Great Britain was carrying 63 per cent of the commerce of the world and to-day she is carrying only 53 per cent. She is losing the carrying trade of the world. When Norway a year ago applied a subsidy to her ships there was a discussion before the English Board of Trade to know what they should do to escape, as it is taking away from them their trade between England and Norway.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, as a summing up of the arguments on both sides in this debate, I can see but little change in the argument and opinion which differs from political lines.

I have heard the arguments upon the other side against the building up of our merchant marine and favoring the free-ship dogma of the Democratic party, which has been their principle and guide in this matter for many years. We who have been responsible for the legislation which has so much contributed to the development and prosperity which seem to be admitted freely upon the other side are pursuing that line of policy in a direct way, keeping apace with the conditions as they arise in the development of our country and our resources.

Mr. President, I have failed to see and understand a single argument against this bill that changes in one iota from the argument we have heard against it ever since the question was mooted before the public and in the Halls of Congress. Some on the other side seemed to agree that it would be all right to pay a postal subsidy to mail lines, creating lines where they knew the United States Government demanded mail service, without any regard to the condition, which must be a part of that agreement, as to who is going to furnish the ships.

It is claimed that this subsidy will encourage ships to sail without cargo for the mere purpose of earning the subsidy. Mr. President, that is simply absurd. No ship could afford to leave an American port for a foreign port in ballast or empty for the sake of drawing the subsidy. No owner of any ship would go in the face of an absolute loss. Therefore, if we are to have an upbuilding of our merchant marine the lines must be established where there is a fair prospect for business. The benefits, then, do not end with the ship alone, but ramify through all the interests of the country in our export trade.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] asked if we lose anything by permitting foreign ships to carry our products. I would answer that question by simply repeating the figures that the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] used in his speech the other day, which I am glad to have the opportunity to emphasize, because it is an object lesson.

From 1871 to 1901, inclusive, thirty-one years, the total revenue collected through the customs service of the United States reached the figure of $5,999,449,241. The amount paid to foreign ships carrying American export products during the same period was $5,867,671,350. The average receipt, in round numbers, of the revenue would be $187,000,000 per year, and paid out, $183,000,000 per year.

Now, Mr. President, we must consider the question whether it is a loss to this country or not, when all that the balance of the world pays for the privilege of our market is paid back from us, lacking $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 per annum, for the carrying of our products abroad. I have never thought that we were going to regain all that we have lost in the carrying trade of the world. As the country grows and the commerce of the world increases the percentage is changed. The object of those who are supporting this bill as an American policy, far-reaching as it is through all the ramifications of our business, manufacturing, products of the farm, products of the mine, products of labor, is that this one interest shall be relieved, which has gone down and down and down during the last century until we cut a sorry figure among the nations of the world, not appealing to patriotism, not entirely to self-interest, but to the general good of all the people and for the future development of our country.

Is not that a loss when we pay $200,000,000 a year, and 25 or 50 per cent of it might remain in the hands of the American people? I should say it was a loss, and I say further, as I have often said before, there is no nation on the face of this earth that could stand the drain upon its resources as the United States. It is because of our enormous production and export trade that we lose sight of the important principle in this question, because we are not brought face to face with a tax deficit which would stagger us.

If the navigation laws now upon our statute books have had to do with the downfall of our merchant marine, they were placed there by a Democratic party, and although that party has been in power many times since, to my knowledge it has never made an effort to repeal them. They are there just as the laws of protection to our industries are still there, because the results have proven that they operate for the benefit of America's interest.

When you say that they are responsible entirely for the degeneracy of our merchant marine, I say no. As conditions have changed, other countries with more centralizing power have improved their opportunity to meet that situation. They have not waited for a Congress nor for political parties to discuss the measure or the policy. With a clear insight of the necessities of the case they have acted and continue to act, meeting every condition as it arises. It is under that policy, Mr. President, that European nations have robbed us of the carrying power of the world.

I would say a word with reference to the Chinese-labor question. In the very early stages of this discussion the question was raised as to the employment of Chinese labor upon American vessels. I must confess that at that time I was partially ignorant of the situation, but on investigation I find that there are some lines on the Pacific Ocean that carry Chinese upon vessels in the fire hold as firemen, as coal passers, and perhaps as stewards, and a certain proportion of their crew. I find, upon further investigation, that the Pacific Mail is not the only line. I find that the German and the French lines are doing the same thing, and for a good and sufficient reason. I will read a quotation from the contract of the German Government with the North German Lloyd Line:

Asiatics shall not be employed in the crew on the Australian main line, and on the Chinese and Japanese main lines they may be employed only in the engine and fire rooms in so far as the employment of Europeans is impracticable for sanitary reasons.

The French Chamber, only in May, 1892, took up this same question. The article is long, and I will not read the whole of it; but they found themselves, under their law of long standing, requiring that two-thirds of the crew should be French. When they came to establish steamboat lines in the Orient and in the Tropics they found that "the colonial navigation in the Indian and China seas present special difficulties on account of climate. Our sailors, and particularly engineers, can not stand the Torrid Zone. Consequently all ships which frequent this ocean have a part of their crew composed of Chinese or Lascars, who alone are able to endure the climate. The French ships were under the terms of the navigation act of September 21, 1793, article 2, which provided that—

No ships shall be considered French if the officers and three-quarters of the crew are not French—can not share in this navigation unless they are allowed, like English, German, or other ships, to have half or three-quarters of the crew foreigners.

As a result ships sailing in the Tropics can not profit by the act concerning our merchant marine.

This was in connection with the increasing of their subsidy to their ships, and I want to mention here that the last amendment to the French law extends that subsidy, just as this bill proposes in Title II, and all the tonnage within certain descriptions and conditions owned by the Frenchmen.

These are questions which must necessarily be understood from the standpoint of those who operate and who will be charged with the responsibility of building up the new lines which we so much covet.

I do not think it is in good taste—it certainly is not good argument, to belittle the men or to cast sarcasm and suspicion upon the motives of the men who thus far and up to this time have done all that ever has been done, contributing their knowledge, their experience, and their means to the establishment of whatever lines of steamships we enjoy to-day in carrying our mails to foreign countries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] has made rather a remarkable speech, but he has not answered the questions which have bean asked by this side of the Chamber.

Mr. HANNA. I did not have time.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator might have had a month and he could not answer the questions that have been propounded on this side of the Chamber.

The Senator said he did not know until the other day that foreigners were employed on our ships. I am fearful the distinguished Senator from Ohio has not read the report of the majority of the committee. If the Senator will turn to the majority report, and the Senator is a member of the majority, he will find that not only Chinamen are employed on the Pacific coast, but he will see from his own report that 70 per cent of our seamen engaged in both domestic and foreign trade are foreigners, and that only 30 per cent of them are American citizens. I now read from the report of the Senator from Ohio:

At the present time in all trades, coasting and foreign, as indicated in the returns of shipping commissioners, only 35 per cent of the crews of American vessels are Americans, including contract mail steamers, on which 50 per cent of Americans are now required.

Excluding mail steamers, the average percentage of Americans now employed, including many coasting voyages, can not reach 30 per cent.

Mr. President, if the Senator will investigate he will find that only from 28 to 30 per cent of the seamen now employed on our ships are Americans and the remainder are foreigners, and in many instances we pay the same wages that foreigners pay.

I heard the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] ask the Senator from Ohio a question here on Saturday evening which has not been answered, and which I believe can not be answered. But before I get to that, I understood the Senator from Ohio to say that the Democratic party is responsible for the passage of the present navigation laws. If I understand correctly, the navigation laws came into effect in 1792, before the Democratic party ever took charge of this country. Mr. Jefferson was the first President ever elected on the Democratic ticket.

The Senator from Ohio complained of the amount we paid foreigners for carrying our exports.

I want to say, Mr. President, that the Senator knows that to-day nearly 700,000,000 tons of our exports are carried in ships that we pay for to American capital while they are under foreign flags, and that money is paid here at home. But I have not time to discuss that question at length.

The Senator from Wisconsin asked the Senator from Ohio how much money was necessary to equalize the difference in the cost of constructing and operating ships in foreign countries and in our own country. The Senator turns around and says, "I will discuss that later."

The Senator from Wisconsin asked the Senator from Ohio why the difference between the bill of the last session of Congress and the bill of the present session of Congress? I can turn to the report of the majority of the committee and can demonstrate, if that report is correct, that only 1 cent per gross ton is necessary to equalize the difference. If the report is correct, this bill ought not to pass in its present shape; it ought to be sent back to the committee, where it can be maturely considered and amendments be proposed, if this bill, even from a Republican standpoint, should pass. Let us see. I read from the majority report in relation to section 6 of the bill:

Rate of subsidy.—The general rate of subsidy proposed (page 7, lines 1-3) is 1 cent per gross ton per 100 nautical miles sailed. This rate is designed to equalize the difference in the cost of building in the United States and operating under American laws an ocean steamer in foreign trade and of building in Great Britain and operating under British laws a similar steamer.

One cent per gross ton.

Mr. HANNA. That is under title 2.

Mr. CLAY. Yes, sir; under title 2. I say the majority of the committee have themselves said that 1 cent per gross ton is all that is necessary to equalize this difference; but notwithstanding that fact you have provided here in some instances for nearly 3 cents per gross ton.

I turn over a little further in this report—I am afraid my friend the distinguished Senator from Ohio has not read this entire report—to page 28, and what do I find? I find that the majority of the committee tells us that $1,072,095 per annum will be all that will be required to equalize the difference between the cost of the construction and operation of foreign and American ships. They say deduct that from the mail pay and it will leave $858,542 as the amount necessary to equalize the difference between the construction and operation of ships in the United States and foreign countries.

Now, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that when you take the report of the same committee which was made at the last session, you find that they said it would take $7,500,000 per annum to equalize the difference. How do the majority account for that difference? One year ago the majority of the Republican members of that committee stood here in this Senate unanimously declaring that about $2,000,000 a year would be necessary to carry the mails, and that $700,000 would equalize the difference in the construction and operation of American and foreign built ships; and yet that same committee at this session comes here and tells this Senate and tells the country that $888,000 will equalize the difference this year in the construction and operation of American and foreign built ships.

The Senator from Wisconsin asked the question, How did the committee reach this decision? Why, Mr. President, this bill has not been maturely considered. Evidently they have not gone to the bottom of the facts. When we go to the public Treasury and take out three, four, five, or six million dollars every year to give to a dozen or two dozen people, to come out of the taxpayers of the United States, we ought to know exactly what we are doing; we ought to know what this difference is between the cost of construction and operation of American and foreign ships. The Senate can not trust a report of a committee which says at one session of Congress that it will take seven and one-half million dollars and at the next session that it will only take $888,000. Mr. President, I repeat, the more you investigate this matter the more you will see that this bill is not founded upon business principles.

I wish to say that the Commissioner of Navigation himself figured that it would take nearly seven and a half million dollars a year ago to equalize this difference, and he comes forward this year and tells us that $888,000 will equalize it.

It is true that this bill provides for more than a million dollars per annum; but let us go to the facts and tell the truth. You know that this bill provides that $4,700,000 of this subsidy shall go for the purpose of carrying the mails. You know that only $888,000 will go as a general subsidy. There is not a Senator on the floor of this Chamber but who knows that this vast sum of nearly $5,000,000 a year will never be used for the carrying of our mails. The Senator from Wisconsin said that it would not take any such amount, and he asked the Senator from Ohio to explain what amount was necessary to equalize this difference, and, Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio has made his fifteen minutes' speech and never referred to the question asked by the Senator from Wisconsin.

I want to call attention to another fact. A great deal has been said in this debate about building up our merchant marine. My friend, the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], tells us that of the merchant marine of Great Britain less than 3 per cent of her tramp ships receive any subsidy at all.

The great ships that will receive the bulk of the subsidy under this bill do not carry any corn, they do not carry any lumber, they do not carry any cotton, they do not carry any of the farm products of our country. I hold before me now a ship's manifest, but I have not time to read it in the fifteen minutes which I am allowed to occupy. This manifest shows that neither the St. Louis, the St. Paul, the New York, nor the Paris carries a bushel of corn or a pound of cotton; none of them carries any farm products whatever, and the Senator from Ohio knows it.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAY. I yield to the Senator from Ohio with pleasure.

Mr. HANNA. The Senator from Georgia says the ships to which he refers do not carry any farm products. I reply that they carry more farm products that any other class of ships on the ocean—bread, meat, smoked meat, butter, cheese, lard, and other commodities of the farm, worth a great deal more in dollars and cents than the products to which the Senator refers.

Mr. CLAY. Bare assertion, Mr. President, is not argument, and I have before me the manifest of the St. Louis. How much corn did she carry? None.

Mr. HANNA. I am not talking about corn.

Mr. CLAY. I know you are not talking about corn. How much oats was carried by the St. Louis? None; hay, none; flour, none; cattle, none; horses, none; wheat, none; cotton, none; barley, none; cheese, none; bacon, 24 pounds of ham [laughter]; beef, none; pork, none; tallow, none.

My friend, if you will turn to the manifest of that ship you will see that though it carried a little dressed beef, though it carried a little champagne and carried a little crockery, yet the great producers of this country, the farmers, have no interest in the class of ships which this bill proposes to largely subsidize.

Mr. President, if I understand correctly the books which I have read in regard to shipping, what do we find? We find that the great bulk of farm products of our country have been carried in ships ranging from 9 to 12 and 13 knots; and the high-rate subsidy provided in this bill does not touch a single ship below 14 knots. I have before me also a manifest of a 12-knot ship which carried 24,000 bushels of corn; it carried 705 barrels of apples; it carried 3,400 feet of oak plank; it carried 11,850 bars of copper, and it carried 5,265 packages of oak strips. If you will go through it—and I will insert the entire manifest—you will find on a critical examination that nearly all of the farm products of our country are carried in ships ranging from 9 to 12½ and 13 knots.

The manifest referred to is as follows:

Amount of farm products carried by the Georgic and the St. Louis.

Mr. CLAY. I believe our friends on the other side concede that the mail subsidy in this bill will amount to nearly $5,000,000 a year. I have not heard a single one of them say that it would take that amount for the purpose of carrying our mails.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President, I had not intended to make any remarks upon this bill, but some of the assertions made, I think, will not bear thorough investigation. The bill that was before the last Congress did not meet my approval, not because I did not believe in the principle of ship subsidy, but because I did not think there was a fair distribution of the moneys thus appropriated. But I believe this bill goes far in the direction of making good that defect. For that reason I shall give my vote for the bill.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] said this morning that one of the troubles with our shipping is that in the Navy we are employing foreigners of every kind and description as seamen. I believe that is true, and I agree with him that some measure should be taken to rectify that trouble. I believe further that that is not the only trouble in the American Navy. There is as much injustice in other departments of it as there is in this, but that question, to a certain degree, is foreign to the matter in hand. That question is this: Can we, or will we, by a ship subsidy build up the American Navy and make it such in the merchant marine as that it will to a great degree carry our own commerce and our own mail? If we can do this by subsidy, then I believe it should be attempted to be done, and for myself I further believe that it can be done.

You remember, Mr. President (Mr. BURROWS in the chair), that when the doctrine of protection was first attempted to be embodied in a bill—and as the years went by it was attempted again and again—it was said that the tariff would not do what was claimed by those who favored it; and yet, sir, the years and decades that have gone have abundantly proved that the tariff was the thing that would remedy the defects, and under the beneficent results of that doctrine our country developed its natural productions and resources until we became one of the greatest producing nations in the world; and yet to-day we present the curious anomaly of a nation producing much more than it consumes and not having enough ships to carry those products to foreign nations.

I believe, in the first place, it is our duty to build up American manufactures, not at the expense of the farmer, who is the bottom rock of our national greatness, but hand in hand with him; and after we have done that, then it is our duty also to encourage the building of American ships to carry American products.

The President pro tempore of the Senate, who is the father of this bill, who has spent years upon years in its consideration, I am sure should not be charged by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] with presenting a bill that has been ill considered. These bills have been considered year after year. It is not a new doctrine or a new idea. The same assertions were made years and years ago when first the doctrine of protection was attempted to be applied. I believe that in the end there will be as much of success in this matter of subsidy to ships as there was in protection to American industry, and I believe that in the years of the future the name of this man, who has stood year after year making it his life's work, will go down with as much of applause and with as much of American gratitude following him as the name of Henry Clay, the great apostle of protection.

It is a sad sight, Mr. President, to see a great nation, such as ours, producing on the farms, in the fields, in the mines, and in the manufacturing establishments more than it can consume, with so small an amount of shipping. We were in the same condition years ago concerning production, and what helped us? Sir, we were helped by this doctrine of protection; we were helped by the great American system that stands to-day, under which our nation has grown great and strong and healthy and prosperous. It is demanded upon all sides. Then, why not follow this by making good this other defect, by increasing American shipping by the same principle that you have applied to other industries.

Sir, it is doubly necessary that you do this. Why? It is contended everywhere, and I believe it is true, that the subject of American wages is dependent upon the protective policy. It has been asserted time and again that without that protective policy American wages would go down in the scale and the wages of foreigners would go up. If that be true in one direction, if wages in one department be elevated, then they will be elevated in other departments, and the wages which American shipbuilders pay will be larger than those paid in Great Britain and in other European nationalities.

Not only that, Mr. President, but it is not a new policy in other directions. The nations of the world which have tried ship subsidy have succeeded in building up their merchant marines, while we, being idle in that direction, have lost the trade of the world.

Our friends say that we should not subsidize ships for the carriage of the mails. It is not a new doctrine to pay subsidies for carrying the mails. We have had one subsidy after another upon the American continent, one of which, you will remember, comes before Congress every year and causes a great debate. It has been gone over time and again. There is a subsidy given to the railways which complete that great chain of intercommunication, making the North and the South one, by which the Southerner down by the Gulf has it in his power to read the New York papers the next morning after they are published. I believe in that subsidy. I believe it is good to have that subsidy. I believe that it benefits the country, as well as the railroads, to have that subsidy. It brings our people closer together, and it binds them, as it were, section to section, as one man. But if a subsidy is right upon your own land, why should it not be right when your ships go out upon the ocean to carry American mail to foreign lands?

I for one say there is every reason that we should so build up American shipping by such subsidies for the carrying of the mail, so that we can as the years go along regain inch by inch the ground we have lost in these matters, and that after a while the time will come when the products of the American manufacturer, when the products of the American farmer, and all that the American produces will be carried in American ships. The one is as much entitled as the other to this protection.

Why did we lose our supremacy upon the sea? In the first place, the people of the New England States, as you know, from the very beginning of the National Government took to the sea and engaged in the building of ships, and we had a great and prosperous condition of our merchant marine; but the embargo killed that, and it was years and years and years before we recovered enough to be able to say that the American shipper and American shipping once more were prosperous. Then came the great civil war, and the civil war practically wiped out American shipping. There was nothing of it left, so to speak. Then, from the time of the civil war until now, our people have been engaged with great and burning questions, one after the other arising and sweeping this aside. We took to them and we settled them one by one, and one of the greatest was the reestablishment of the doctrine of protection.

From 1865 to 1902, whenever this doctrine was in force, America was prosperous, and whenever this doctrine was stricken from the statute books and another placed in its stead there was a gradual decline of all that we did produce. All these things were improved, and therefore this matter of shipping was neglected. But great minds go ahead of the nation, and one of the great minds of this country devoted himself to this magnificent scheme, gave years of his life to it, and, whatever you may say, he did not present an ill-conceived and ill-digested bill. It is a bill of which he may be proud, and it is a bill upon which he may rest his fame when he leaves the Senate.

Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator from Georgia that the farmer has no interest in this matter. The farmer is as much interested in building up the merchant marine of this country as any other class of citizenship in the country. Do we not know that the wheat of this country supplies the world, and why should he not be interested in it? It may not go in a certain kind of ship as wheat—it may go there as flour—and yet the farmer is interested, because unless the grain is raised in this country and transported out of it the flour will not be necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, it is not my intention to discuss this bill any further than I discussed it the other day. I should not say anything at all were it not for some remarks made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] in regard to the Mississippi River and its improvement. I was somewhat surprised to hear the Senator from New Hampshire make the remark, and for the reason that he is a member of the Committee on Commerce, and he has been most liberal in voting for improvements of rivers and harbors all over the country, and has never, so far as I know, shown any disposition to be sectional in those votes.

There is another reason. The Senator from New Hampshire was on a committee of which I also had the honor to be a member, which went from the head of the Mississippi River to the Passes at the Gulf. He is more familiar with that river than a great many of those who live in the section from which he comes. I was therefore greatly astonished that he sought to show any connection between the river and harbor bill and the bill now pending before this body. There is no more connection and no more reason why the comparison should be made or why it should be claimed that they are of the same character than there is to say that the pension appropriation bill, or any other bill, utterly disconnected with it, should also be considered in this connection.

Mr. President, it has seemed to me, because other Senators have heretofore referred to the appropriations for the Mississippi River, that there is something of a disposition to claim that those who come from that section of the country, because the rivers there get a part of the river and harbor appropriation, are under peculiar and special obligations to some one, and that they are thereby estopped from opposing other measures which they do not think for the best interests of the Government of the United States. I think that is unfair. The river and harbor bill is the only bill the appropriations of which are anything like equally distributed throughout all sections of the United States. There are $147,000,000 appropriated every year for pensions. The great bulk of that money goes to the North and East, and none to the Southern country. The great amount appropriated for the building of our Navy is all expended on the Northeast Atlantic coast or upon the Pacific coast. No part goes to our section of the Union.

I think it is not altogether generous to make these references, because in one bill and only one that section of the country gets some proportion of the money appropriated by Congress, and even in that bill the large part of the amount goes to the country north of Mason and Dixon's line. I think it is unfair on every occasion when Senators from that section see proper to oppose other bills that we should be constantly reminded that a certain amount is appropriated for the Mississippi River. I am happy to say that the chairman of the Committee on Commerce has never indulged in an argument of that kind. I wish to say further that there is no man in this Chamber who has been more liberal and more generous to that part of the Union than the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the Senator from Maine.

I repeat, that the river and harbor bill is not involved in this matter. When it comes before the Senate, if there is any part of the appropriation to that section of the Union which ought not to be made, it will be perfectly legitimate and proper to discuss and oppose it. To that I do not object. But I do say that each Senator upon this floor has a right to judge of any particular bill which comes here, and it is unfair to remind him that in some other measure a portion of the appropriation goes to the country from which he comes, or that he votes for that portion of it. I desire that the river and harbor bill shall stand by itself. I have always voted for the appropriations for the Great Lakes, and for improvements in Michigan and Wisconsin and New York and Massachusetts, and I do not feel that that has anything to do with the present bill.

As I said, I do not desire to discuss this bill further. I have already said what I have to say. There is one point, however, which has been raised, and it has not been answered, and that point is that the bill does not require the building of a single ship at any shipyard in the United States of America. This money can be paid out to the lines which now exist. The most part of it can be paid to those fast steamers, and the subsidy part to all steamers engaged in foreign commerce, and there is nothing whatever in this bill which makes it obligatory upon those companies to build another vessel in the United States. It seems strange to me that Congress should vote this large amount of money when it may be that not an additional vessel will be built. The Senator from Maine hopes they will be built; he hopes the bill will induce capitalists to build vessels; but I repeat that there is nothing in the proposed law which now compels them to build such vessels in our shipyards, and the present ships can take this money from the Treasury and no additional ships will float under the American flag. I do not say they will not be built. I say it is a matter of speculation. It is a matter of hope. But there is nothing in the bill as far as I know which will compel their building. That, it seems to me, should be a fatal objection to the bill, if there were nothing else.

Other points were well made on Saturday evening, that there is no limit to the amount of money which shall be expended in any one year and that there is no limit to the time within which the law shall remain in force. There is no limit to the time when the Postmaster-General may continue to make contracts. The mail may be carried now in 20-knot ships. Later it may become necessary to carry it on ships of greater speed—25 knots, for instance—and yet these contracts will be in existence and there will be no power to change them until the end of the fifteen years for which the contracts are made.

This is all that I desire to say. The bill is badly constructed. It does not seem to me that it will accomplish the purpose desired. It is unjust in the amount and in the time, and it is unfair. I will not repeat the argument I made the other day, which it seems to me can never be answered, that it is an appropriation to individuals or corporations already owning ships and an appropriation which will not compel the building of other ships.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, in my remarks the other day I exhausted what data I had, and did not intend to say another word relative to the provisions of this bill, and I would not do so now but for the fact that my friend the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has referred to the river and harbor bill, of which I made mention, and I refer to it now in the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

First of all, we are all in favor of the river and harbor bill. We are in favor of improving the great harbors of the country—the harbors on the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts, and the Gulf ports and the coast ports. The only point is that we think, after we have spent these hundreds of millions of dollars in improving our harbors, we ought to encourage American shipping to enter our ports and to have the benefits of the improved harbors as well as the subsidized ships of foreign countries.

We spend hundreds of thousands of dollars annually in building and maintaining light-houses and light-ships, in establishing beacons and buoys to guide into our ports the ships that are subsidized by England, by Germany, and by France to carry away the products of our country. It seems to me, profiting by the experiences of those countries, we should do something to build up our own commerce, to restore and rehabilitate the merchant marine of our own country, that we may enjoy again, as we did for so many years, the privilege of transporting at least the products of our own country.

As I endeavored to explain a few days since, from my own observation and experience we permitted that to pass from us by our own inactivity, by our own indifference. The bill before us, which has been carefully digested, notwithstanding the remarks of my friend the Senator from Georgia, and considered by the Committee on Commerce, we believe will remove the inequality in conditions in the building and operation of ships which now exists between the ships of Germany, and of England, and of France and those of the United States.

My friend the Senator from Georgia read the manifest of what American ships do not carry, or rather he took it from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing a copy of the manifest of a ship. He might have gone on and enumerated the 253 articles which we have upon the free list and said that none of those were upon the manifests of the four great American ships leaving New York. Now, as a matter of fact, these four ships belonging to the American line exported last year from the port of New York to ports in England $20,000,000 in value of farm products, and I have here a detailed statement, which I will ask to have put into the RECORD with my remarks, showing the exports.

STATEMENT WITH REGARD TO CARGOES OF FAST AND SLOW BOATS.

The cargoes of the American Line steamships, New York to Southampton, since January 1, 1900, have averaged 1,411 tons dead weight, of an average value (exclusive of specie and according to the sworn statements of shippers) of	$444,613
A 10,000-ton steamship of 10 knots speed would carry, approximately, 12,000 tons of wheat, worth 75 cents per bushel, or $28 per ton, or for the entire cargo	336,000
Difference in value of cargoes in favor of fast boat		108,613
The fast boat would probably make 12 voyages per year and would at the same rate carry per year in value of exports	5,335,356
The 10,000-ton 10-knot ship would probably make 8 voyages per year and carry in total value of exports of wheat at same rate	2,688,000
Difference in values of exports per year in favor of the fast boat		2,647,356

The express ship would therefore carry out of the country in a year about twice the value that the 10-knot ship would.

Who says that is not a benefit to the farmers, to the producers of the country? This whole bill is conceived in the interest of the American people, and you can not benefit one industry without all being correspondingly benefited, directly or indirectly.

My friend the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] a few minutes since criticised the bill with that elegant sarcasm which we all so much admire, for his words cut like a keen scimeter. He stated that the subsidy will go to some dozen shipowners and American ships now built and operated. Why should it not do so? These ships were built in our own country by American mechanics. They were built from iron and steel from our mines; built from the timber that comes from our forests; and the people who fashioned them and built them are citizens of our own country, raising their families in the little villages and towns adjacent to these great mills and factories, paying their taxes for the support of public schools, educating their children, sending them to church, teaching them the duties of American citizenship.

That is what this bill has in view. It is to build up the great shipping industry of this country. When I was a sailor boy, from Maine to Savannah every port on the coast was alive with shipbuilding. We then had the monopoly of the ocean, so to speak. But there can be no monopoly on the ocean. My friend the Senator from Georgia charges that there can be, and that this bill creates it. He has failed to show, however, where any steamship company or any transportation company is operating its vessels under some particular franchise. There is no single track on the ocean. It is nature's great highway, and I earnestly believe that if this bill becomes a law the farmers of this country will be shipowners, that the merchants and the clerks and the mechanics will own an interest in vessels. There is not a vessel to-day sailing out of the port of Liverpool which is not owned by from 20 to 40 different persons. What is known as the ship's husband, the managing owner of the vessel, projects a ship and plans her and then he sends out into the community, to clerks and merchants, and each one takes a certain interest in the vessel. This bill will encourage our own people to do that very thing, and in doing it we will all be benefited thereby.

Both of my friends—the Senators from Georgia—seem to have taken a great interest in the shipping bill. I suppose it is because we buy of them all our yellow pine and a great deal of other material that goes into ships. We send money to them for the productions of that splendid State. We are taking their cotton and transporting it cheaper than it has ever been done before. We are, as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON] has said, giving an increase mail subsidy of a hundred and five thousand dollars per annum just to get the mail to their doors six hours earlier than it would go in the ordinary course. They have no hesitancy in asking us to cooperate and to vote with them on such a proposition.

Mr. President, this should not be a party question. I can not understand how it is made a party or a political question. It is one of general interest, in favor of the welfare of this great industry of our country, and I can not see why our friends on the other side insist upon making it a party question.

One of the objections just urged is that the bill can not be repealed. Mr. President, as I said a few days since, the Republicans, when they had the majority, passed a tariff act giving 2 cents a pound upon all sugar produced in this country, either from cane or from sugar beet. Congress made a contract for fourteen years that the Government would pay this amount of money to any firm or company or refinery producing sugar of 90 per cent polariscope test. Three years later, in the whirlpool of politics, political complexions of Congress was changed, and, although the law had been in force only three years, from 1891 to 1894, it was repealed, and no redress was given to those who had invested their money in that industry in Michigan, in California, in Colorado, and in other States. The law was repealed, and the only satisfaction those people got was the statement, "You knew it was within the power of Congress at any time to repeal the act whenever it deemed it expedient or advisable to do so." So it is with this bill. There is no necessity for fixing a time limit.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me for a moment?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. That remark is correct so far it applies to the second clause. Congress can repeal it, and there is no remedy. In regard to the first, the specific authority is given to the Postmaster-General to contract for a period not exceeding fifteen years.

Mr. PERKINS. I can not conceive of any specific contract more binding, more sacred, or which should be more honorably observed, than an act of Congress whereby it pledged this Government that for fourteen years it would pay 2 cents a pound for every pound of sugar produced in the United States. If such a contract as that can be violated with impunity, and it was so done, so will this be if our Democratic friends get into power; and they will doubtless do so in time. The pendulum swings one way and then the other. They will doubtless repeal this act, and then the people will rebuke them at the polls, as they did after they repealed the act to which I have referred.

The senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] I was about to say consumed last Saturday 13 pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with tables giving the names of vessels, tonnage, capacity, speed, etc. He could have found it all or nearly all in the very able report of our Commissioner of Navigation, which is an encyclopedia of knowledge on nautical affairs and all that relates to the maritime affairs of our country. But he could have done better by four lines, and stated that out of 29,091 vessels of the whole world recorded in Lloyds only 383 are ocean steamers of 14 knots or over and 2,000 tons or over. Of these 383 about two-thirds belong to subsidized foreign mail steamship companies. His tables in some instances contradict his own statement about the large share of exports carried by vessels under a thousand tons. His Savannah ships average nearly 3,000 tons. Only 14 out of the 133 Galveston ships he named are less than 2,000 tons. The 60 steamers on his first Boston list average over 5,000 tons.

My friend is a student of political economy. He is earnest and zealous in everything he undertakes to investigate. He is always courteous, kind, and considerate. It is a pleasure to discuss this question with him. But it is always well to be sure you are starting on the right basis from which to reason. He has that delightful but specious way of presenting a proposition which hypnotizes us for the time being. But the premises from which he reasons are not always correct, and so it was surprising to me that he should state that a very large amount of our export trade is carried in ships under a thousand tons. The fact is that the average size of the steamers carrying our exports is about 4,000 tons. I think it is safe to say, judging from the tables which I have examined—the Senator himself disclaimed any personal knowledge of them—that, to use a nautical term, the author of those tables has allowed a great splendid margin for leeway, and that upon investigation he will find that there is no information given in them which can be of any benefit to us whatever. He might as well have put in a half dozen pages from a nautical almanac, so far as any information there is of benefit to us.

I merely wish to say one word in answer to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] relative to the crews of vessels. I am in accord with him in a measure. This bill is intended to build up American shipping, to the end that the Stars and Stripes may be carried at the peaks of vessels, which are missionaries of commerce. We have built up a splendid Navy, and we are respected and honored abroad to-day more, if that is possible, than we are at home. Every ship that goes out laden with the products of the American farm, the American loom, or the American machine shop is a missionary of commerce and a missionary of trade. It carries to foreign countries what this great Republic is doing for civilization and for humanity. I believe in American or Caucasian crews. I believe the provision in this bill whereby a ship is compelled to carry, for each thousand tons, an apprentice in the mate's department, which is the navigating department of the ship, or one in the engineer's department, which is the propelling department, the great force that takes the ship along, is a wise one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from California has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. I wished to say something about the Caucasian sailor, but we will take it under advisement, as the lawyers say.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, if there is no other Senator on this side who desires to address the Senate at this time, I wish to take about five minutes in reference to some figures that were presented by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] a few moments ago. I could not catch the exact figures, but I believe I caught them sufficiently for the purpose which I intend.

As I understood those figures, they are to show that the customs receipts collected in a certain period in this country, I believe it was stated from 1871, but I will not be sure about that, were something over $5,000,000,000, and that during that time there was paid for carrying the commerce of the United States something over $5,000,000,000, a little more than the amount of the customs receipts collected at the custom-houses of the United States. The purpose of that, if I caught it, was to show that we are paying out more money to foreign countries than we are receiving. Further than that, as I understood it, the Senator claimed that the amount of money which was collected for customs was paid to us by foreign countries; that the amount we paid to foreign bottoms offset that, and left a surplus in favor of foreign countries.

In the first place, the customs tax is not paid by the foreigner, by the importer, but it is paid by the consumer. But granting, for the sake of argument, that it is paid by the foreigner and that it is not paid by the American consumer, then we pay about $5,000,000 a year, if I caught his figures correctly, more for carrying our commerce than foreigners pay to us in customs for the purpose of running our Government. That is the idea. To show that we are not paying to the foreigners more than we are receiving, I notice that the figures given by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Maine, in a speech on the 3d of March, show that last year we exported $1,487,000,000 worth of produce and that we imported $882,000,000. This leaves to our credit $588,000,000. So, if we are paying for the carrying of our commerce to foreign countries $5,000,000 more than they are paying for the privilege of importing their commerce into this country, we are receiving one hundredfold more than they are receiving.

I just wanted to call attention to this to show that, taking the position which seemed to be taken by the Senator from Ohio—that the importation tax is paid by the foreign producer instead of the domestic consumer—we are receiving one hundred times more in the way of balance of trade than we are paying for the carrying of our commerce.

This is all that I intended to say, but while I am up I wish to call attention to one feature of the bill that has impressed itself upon my mind. According to the provisions of the bill a ship carrying 10,000 registered tons, at 20 knots, from this country to any port 5,000 miles from here, in going and returning, will receive $27,000, if it is a ship that has made a contract with the Postmaster-General for the carrying of the mails, but if it is a ship that has not a contract with the Postmaster-General for the carrying of the mails it receives $12,500 for the round trip.

I repeat, a ship of 10,000 tons going at the speed of 20 knots carrying mail under a contract with the Postmaster-General receives $27,000 for 10,000 miles, going and coming, whereas a ship of the same size, the same make, and the same speed, that has no contract with the Postmaster-General, receives $12,500, or $14,500 less than the ship that has the mail contract. That is calculated to destroy competition.

Not only is this to be the case, but a ship that has no contract can be compelled to carry the mail free of charge before it receives any of the subsidy, so that while the other ship carries the mail under a contract and receives $27,000 this ship may be compelled to carry free before it can receive a bounty, if it is required to do so by the Postmaster-General, and then it is to receive a bounty of only $12,500. As I said, that is calculated to destroy competition. It will not do to say that there is a benefit to the producer of corn, and wheat, and cotton, or anything else that is to be shipped abroad in destroying the competition that exists between the ocean lines.

This is about all that I desired to say.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate only a moment in regard to this bill. I have always been a protectionist per se, and believing that the bill is in the line of protection I shall certainly support it heartily. While I believe that it is a measure in the interest of the entire people of the United States and of the commerce of this country, I also believe that it is in the interest of my State and my people. I have been a manufacturer for the past thirty-five years. I have been protected by a protective tariff of 40 per cent upon the articles that I manufacture, and by reason of that protection I have given to the consumers of this country a reduction in price of, I think, over 150 per cent.

I believe, as I stated, in protection because I am convinced that it has brought about the prosperity we are now enjoying in this country. I believe it is a policy that has been for the upbuilding of this country in every respect. I believe the bill as it is proposed, with perhaps some amendments, is the best measure that can possibly be devised for the benefit of the people of the State I have the honor in part to represent. We have the shortest haul to tide water for coal and hard timber of any State in the Union.

I believe if we encourage the building of ships to carry abroad our coal and other products of our States, it will be largely to our advantage.

For these reasons, and others that are numerous and which I might mention, I shall give my hearty support to this bill.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I am neither physically nor mentally in any condition to make a speech. In trying to avoid the Charybdis of smallpox I ran into the Scylla of vaccination, and which is the more painful I am unable to determine. There are some things, though, it seems to be necessary I should say.

A Senator just handed me a moment ago a communication from a Chicago paper. I do not know why newspapers should make the mistakes they do when we have such bright reporters here at Washington:

> The recent debates in the Senate on the Frye ship-subsidy bill have elicited from its author the fact that it is open to one very grave objection, which hurt the Hanna bill of last year. It will give large sums from the Treasury to a few ocean greyhounds, but will not encourage the building of economical cargo carriers.
> This Mr. FRYE has admitted, and to those who look for general public benefits and not merely to the profits of a few shipowners, the admission is bad for the bill.
> "The bill of 1891," said Mr. FRYE, "was a dead failure. We succeeded in getting one new line under it." In fact, we got just two new steamers built in American yards and two built abroad. Yet of the subsidies proposed by his bill Mr. FRYE went on to say: "Below 16 knots there would not be any increase over the present. Indeed, the price will be lower than under the present law."
> That is, while the act of 1891 increased our mercantile marine only by four ocean greyhounds, the proposed law may give us more ocean greyhounds, but will tend even less to add cargo carriers.

Why could not the editor of this newspaper, if it was the editor, have recognized the fact that when I made that statement I was talking in relation to the postal subsidy article of the bill. In relation to that I said what I am purported to have said here, but I had not the slightest reference whatever to article 2 of the bill.

I say now, and I want to say it to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], that in my deliberate judgment the subsidy which is provided for the ordinary freight ship outside of the postal subsidy ship is as valuable to it as the postal subsidy is valuable to the mail ship. The ordinary American freight ships which are to receive the subsidy here are divested from all the extraordinary requirements of the postal subsidy ship. They must be built under the supervision of the Secretary of the Navy; they must be inspected by a board of officers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy; they must be so constructed that they shall be able to carry certain guns, increasing the expense of their construction very largely; they must, in fact, be in condition on call by the Government of the United States to take their places as the auxiliaries of the Navy. The four American liners were in that condition when the Government called for them. No such requirements are made of the ordinary freight steamers under article 2 of the bill.

Then, again, and I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to this, those postal subsidy ships are requred to be of the highest rating known; that is, above A1.

Mr. ALLISON. Up to class five, for five of the classes.

Mr. FRYE. The two classes are not intended to be auxiliaries of the Navy.

Mr. ALLISON. Two classes are not included?

Mr. FRYE. Two classes are not included. Sixteen up to 20, inclusive, are required to be of the highest rating known. That is recognized by the various bureaus. For instance, one has the letter A with two bars across it; another has AA1, and in various ways they recognize the degree of completion of construction and all that sort of thing. No such requirement is had of these average rate steamships.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FRYE. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. With reference to the subject the Senator is discussing, I desire to invite his attention to section 4 of title 1 of the bill. I ask him if there is any requirement that the steamships of the first five classes already constructed shall be fitted out as cruisers.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator mean the four liners?

Mr. CULBERSON. The first, second, third, fourth, and fifth classes. To make myself clearly understood, let me read from the bill:

SEC. 4. That all steamships of the first, second, third, fourth, and fifth classes, employed as above and hereafter built, shall be constructed with particular reference to prompt and economical conversion into auxiliary naval cruisers, etc.

I do not understand that that provision applies to the ships that have heretofore been constructed.

Mr. FRYE. The act of 1891 applied to those ships. They got their postal contract under the act of 1891, and they are still under that contract, and will be up to 1905.

Mr. President, this is all I desire to say in relation to that matter. It is a mistake of a newspaper, that is all there is to it, and on a mistake they think the bill ought to be defeated.

Another matter to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate was also brought to my notice a few moments ago. I received a letter from Edward J. Livernash, I should say it was for the California commission, in which he calls upon me to declare in favor of an amendment offered to this bill by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON], and gives me the distinguished honor of saying that if I will advise the acceptance of that amendment, such is my influence in the United States Senate, it will be promptly accepted.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to state that Mr. Livernash is a member of the California commission sent to Washington to look after the question of Chinese exclusion.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, in my present condition of mind and body I hope I will not be interrupted any more, because when interrupted I can not talk consecutively; I can not do what I wish.

I wish I could comply with the request of this gentleman, but I can not, and I do not believe that it ought to be complied with. I do not believe that Europeans or Americans can be found in the voyages to China and to Asia generally who in that climate will take the places of Chinese in the engine and the fire rooms. I do not believe they can live there, where the heat goes to 140 at times. They live on ships of war, I admit, but ships of war go into those ports and lie there from month to month, and though kept at work in the fire and engine rooms they have the privilege of the deck and they can get all the opportunities for fresh air they desire. These men on the merchant ships have to be there day after day, night after night, and a white man can not stand it, in my judgment. I believe if this amendment should be placed upon the bill it would be simply in one hand the pipe of peace, in the other a tomahawk, and if the pipe of peace was accepted then the tomahawk goes into use, and you destroy the lines upon the Pacific Ocean.

I have great hopes, as I said in my opening speech, that there can be two or three great lines established from the Pacific coast to the Orient in the interest of the extension of commerce, but I would greatly fear if that amendment was adopted the lines never would be established. I believe if that amendment is adopted Mr. James Hill, who is building two great ships now at New London, in the State of Connecticut, will find that it becomes absolutely necessary for him to put those ships under a foreign flag in order to employ Chinese in the fire and the engine rooms.

Every German contract in the Pacific Ocean, and those contracts are very close, provides that Asiastics shall not be employed on those ships unless for sanitary reasons it becomes necessary to employ Chinese in the engine and in the fire rooms, and they employ them in the engine and fire rooms for sanitary reasons. The French undertook to provide that Chinese should not be employed on their ships. It lasted but a short time, and the French were obliged to repeal that provision and permit their employment. Why it should be undertaken here to prevent American vessels under the American flag from employing the only men practically who can live in the fire rooms in the Tropics is beyond my comprehension.

I say I sympathize with labor as much as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] does. I sympathize with men who work for their living, and the most of us I think do that. I think there are few laboring men in this country who work as the Senators in this body from the great West work every day of their lives.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine declines to be interrupted.

Mr. PATTERSON. I could give the Senator an illustrious example of the very thing he says can not occur.

Mr. FRYE. I think that laboring men are just as likely to be mistaken in their demands as we are in our demands. In my judgment the laboring men of this country who are demanding that this provision be placed in the bill are mistaken.

When the Chinese war broke out there were two great factories in my own neighborhood shut down through the entire revolution because their exports of cotton goods were cut off from China. If we are to have hereafter an extension of our commerce in the Orient—and that is the place of all other places for us to look for it—then it is in the interest of laboring men, because with our enormous production of manufactured and other goods there is danger at any time of a surplus on our hands; and the moment there is a surplus we can not dispose of, that moment there is stagnation at home, capital without profit, and workingmen without wages. It is the interest of the workingmen to extend our commerce and to prevent a surplus from becoming a stagnation to us in this country.

Now, Mr. President, this is an anxious hour for me, and, I think, justifiably so. For almost a quarter of a century I have been trying to solve the problem how to restore the mercantile navy of ours in the oceans of the world. I have taken more interest in it than in any other subject, and I have given it more thought and more care than I have given to perhaps all other subjects. Much good has been accomplished, and yet the decline kept on and on. The Senate Committee on Commerce has never yet rejected a bill in relation to ships which I presented in the Senate. Every one has been reported to this body, and such has been the confidence of the Senate in the Committee on Commerce that there has never yet been a bill reported from that committee relating to ships which has not passed this body except one, and that one we were not permitted to have a vote on. We removed in a single bill several million dollars' worth of burdens from American ships. It passed both branches and became a law.

I remember when John Roach's ships were on the line between New York and Brazil and were suffering terribly, when Brazil was paying a line $100,000 a year and we were paying it about $3,000 a year for carrying our mail, the Committee on Commerce authorized me to report an amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill making an appropriation of $500,000 or $600,000, and it became a law. We had a Postmaster-General at that time who believed in free ships, and he refused to pay out the money for the purpose for which the appropriation was made. He resorted to two statutes then upon the statute book which authorized the Postmaster-General to seize and compel any American vessel to carry the United States mails anywhere for sea postage. At the very next session of Congress the Committee on Commerce authorized me to report a bill repealing those two statutes. It was reported and became a law.

This went on year after year, and there were bills passed and became laws which were in the interest of American shipping, and yet the decline kept on; nothing was accomplished. It became evident to me in 1890 that the disease was so deep the remedy must be more drastic infinitely than anything ever proposed up to that time. I spent about six months' time over the postal-subsidy bill in 1890. I sent all over the country for experts, simply for the purpose of finding out what rates in the mail service would be required to secure American lines of ships to foreign countries. The bill was finally completed and reported, I think, in 1891 to the Senate.

At the same time I prepared and reported, by the authority of the committee, to the Senate a bounty bill, or an ocean subsidy bill like this, only the subsidy was considerably higher than in this measure. It was 3 cents for the outward voyage. This is a cent for the entire voyage and a cent and a quarter on ships hereafter built. Those bills came before the Senate. They were together discussed here in the Senate. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] voted for them, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] voted for them, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] voted for them, and they passed the Senate.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], in his speech the other day, talked about the roseate hues which I presented to the Senate, of the promises of those bills to the country, and then he asked, "What kind of a prophet is the Senator from Maine when he himself admits that the bill was a dead failure?" The Senator from Colorado says that the bill was a failure; the Senator from Wisconsin says that the bill was a failure, and the Senator from Maine says that it was.

Now, why? None of these Senators say why. Because the bounty bill, after it passed the Senate and went to the House, was defeated in a Democratic House by two or three majority, and the postal subsidy bill was amended in the House of Representatives by striking down by one-third the rate which had been provided for with such care. It came back to the Senate on the last day of the session and in the last hours of the last day of the session, when it was too late to have a conference, and it was only for that reason it was accepted at all.

Now, one of those bills was destroyed and the other was mutilated, and I am responsible and am no longer to be treated as a prophet because I said they would place our flag upon the ocean. They would have placed the flag upon the ocean if both bills had become a law as they passed the United States Senate. I had the promise of a line to Brazil. I had the promise of one line to the Pacific if that bill became a law. It practically proved a dead failure, simply because an amendment in the House of the postal subsidy part of it made it a failure and because the other measure was defeated entirely; and I warn Senators who are in favor of doing something for the American merchant marine to lookout for the amendments offered in opposition to the bill by the other side.

There has not been one of them yet offered in the interest of the American merchant marine, not one. There has not been one yet offered that will not harm, and perhaps some of them would destroy this bill if they should be adopted and become law. Beware of the Greeks when they are bringing gifts. That side of the House never has in the last twenty-five years proposed any remedy for this condition of things except the remedy of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]—free ships. They rise in their places in the Senate and declare that they are as much in favor of reviving the American merchant marine as we are, as I am, and yet they never come forward with any proposition whatever to revive it except free ships—a remedy, in which I am happy to say, very few intelligent Americans to-day believe.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator tell us what he thinks of the amendments proposed by the other side?

Mr. FRYE. I will before I get through; I propose to do so.

Mr. TELLER. I trust the Senator will not forget them.

Mr. FRYE. No; I will not forget them. Lest I may not have time, I will attend to it now. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] offered the following amendment:

The Postmaster-General, until the 1st day of July, 1910, is hereby authorized and directed to enter into contracts for a term not less than five nor more than fifteen years, etc.

That is the first amendment. I accept it without the slightest hesitation. I do not believe that it is at all harmful to the bill. The next amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa is:

Provided, That no contract shall be made under the provisions of this title which shall extend beyond the 1st day of July, 1920.

I recognize that amendment as coming from a friend of the bill, and I accept it without hesitation. The next amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa is on page 4, line 7, as follows:

And every vessel in respect of which any contract authorized by this act shall be applied for or made, shall be of the Class A1 as classified either by the Record of American and Foreign Shipping or the United States Standard Owners, Builders, and Underwriters' Association, or equivalent classification in any other register of shipping of at least equal merit. All vessels under contract, as provided for in this act, shall be of Class A1 or its equivalent, as hereinbefore in this section mentioned, during the whole period of their service under the contracts provided for in this act.

I do not think the Senator would like to have that apply to ships of 16 knots and upward, because it would reduce their rating, and their rating under the law is higher than A1; it is AA1.

Mr. ALLISON. Just a moment, if the Senator will permit me. It will not interfere with the present provisions in the bill applying to the first five classes.

Mr. FRYE. Then I have not the slightest objection to it, because I do not believe in paying a subsidy to any ship that will not rate A1. I supposed the bill had provided for that. The next is that:

No vessel shall be entitled to the full compensation under this title unless she shall have cleared from a port of the United States with cargo to the amount of 50 per cent of her capacity for carrying commercial cargo, and any shortage in the amount of cargo required and defined as aforesaid shall dimmish the amount of the compensation in this paragraph provided for in the proportion that such shortage bears to the total cargo or its equivalent so required.

I object to that.

Mr. TELLER. Why do you object to that amendment?

Mr. FRYE. I object to it for several reasons. First, it is entirely unnecessary. I venture to say that no Senator here who will examine into the voyages from our ports to ports across the ocean will find a ship that sails without at least half its commercial cargo capacity. When they are short is when they make their return voyages and come in competition with foreign vessels. If they did not carry half of their cargo capacity they could not earn enough to pay the wages of their crews; they could not run three years under the subsidy. If the subsidy, for instance, was $100 it would cost them $175 in wages for the officers and the men. So, practically, in my judgment, the provision of the amendment would not he of the least value.

But that is not the reason I object to the amendment. I object to it because, in my opinion, it is a bounty, and therefore unconstitutional, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] rather defiantly called upon me, when he was making his very fine speech the other day, to reply to him at the time. I think the Senator knew that my respect for him was such that I would not interject a speech into his very beautiful address. I did not interrupt him at all, and would not under the circumstances.

During the summer I called into conference with myself in preparing the bill Mr. LITTLEFIELD of Maine, a member of the House of Representatives. He was very desirous of a cargo clause like that which the Senator from Iowa has offered, and which was in the last bill; and in two drafts of the bill—the bill has been drafted quite a number of times—that was section 13, the cargo clause. I was opposed to it in the last bill, and I opposed it in these drafts, because I believed it to be indirectly a bounty, that it would be construed in law a bounty, and therefore might imperil the bill. I consulted several of the best lawyers in New England, and they all agreed that it was a bounty and would be so construed in law. But still my friend Mr. LITTLEFIELD did not surrender. He wrote to ex-Senator Edmunds, and Senator Edmunds wrote him in reply:

1724 SPRUCE STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.,
November 26, 1901.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to yours of the 16th and my reply of the 19th—

Mr. LITTLEFIELD had written to Mr. Edmunds twice—

I am able now to say that I have carefully again considered the questions involved in your draft of the suggested section 13 of the shipping bill. I examined the same question a year ago in connection with the proposition advanced by some Western gentlemen that a bounty ought to be granted on the exportation of American products. My reexamination has confirmed me in the opinion that the section can not be safely inserted, although a clause substantially the same was inserted in the last bill, I think.

The first question arising is whether the section would be constitutional if enacted, assuming that the provisions of the bill, including section 13, amount in legal effect to a bounty upon the exportation of goods in American vessels. I do not think that this question depends upon whether the goods exported are of domestic or foreign origin.

In the sugar-bounty cases, as you remember, the Supreme Court evaded deciding the question whether a bounty upon the production of sugar was constitutional or not by holding that the United States by the bounty act and the history that followed it in its repeal, etc., had become bound in morals, honor, and natural justice to make good the losses occasioned by the repeal, so far as Congress had provided for such payment by a succeeding act, and that such act appropriating money to discharge a morally just debt was constitutional. My belief is that when the court is forced to decide the question of the constitutionality of granting bounties for the promotion of commerce it will hold that it can not be done. I came to this conclusion when I was first called upon to express my views about it to the committee of shippers and merchants which had charge of promoting some bill in aid of the expansion of our foreign trade, for, as I recollected, that committee was inclined to legislation that in the very simple way of a bounty on exports would effectuate the purpose.

The next point to be considered is whether the provisions of section 13, in connection with the other provisions of the proposed new bill (which I assume will be in respect of fundamentals, as distinguished from the amount of compensation, substantially like the old one), amount to the granting of a bounty upon the exportation of goods. I regret to say that I am strongly of the opinion that they do. The vessel in respect of which compensation is to be made and in respect of which a certain amount of cargo is made a condition of payment is merely a means of accomplishing certain purposes. Among these purposes are postal facilities, the training of young men to skillful sea service of various kinds, the strengthening of our resources in time of war, and the exportation of goods to foreign markets. Thus it seems to me that at least a part, and indeed for immediate purposes by far the largest and most important part of the compensation to be provided is for the carrying of the goods to foreign markets.

It seems to me, then, that it is impossible to resist the conclusion that this payment does amount, even in strict legal effect, to a bounty. And I think that if another nation with whom we had a treaty providing that if bounties were allowed to its vessels on the exportation of goods our vessels should be entitled to the same bounty, should provide a similar scheme to that now proposed, our Government would be bound to complain that the treaty had been violated, and would feel it to be its duties to make reprisals in every way possible. As you know, our excutive government has in respect of the act of Congress providing for increased tariff on sugar, etc., when a foreign country had granted bounties, has carried that provision into execution in cases far less clear than this one. We have now in force many treaties which would involve us in these difficulties if the cargo provisions were made lower.

Very sincerely, yours,

GEORGE F. EDMUNDS.

The Hon. C. E. LITTLEFIELD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Now, take the treaty with Great Britain, made in 1815, the second article of which provides that—

The same duties shall be paid and the same bounties allowed on the exportation of any articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of His

Brittanic Majesty's territories in Europe to the United States, whether such exportation shall be in vessels of the United States or in British vessels, and the same duties shall be paid and the same bounties allowed on the exportation of any articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States to His Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe, whether such exportation shall be in British vessels or in vessels of the United States.

And the same bounties and drawbacks shall be allowed whether such exportation or reexportation be made in the vessels of the one party or of the other.

Belgium, article 7:

All premiums, drawbacks, or other favors of like nature which may be allowed in the States of either of the contracting parties upon goods imported or exported shall be likewise and in the same manner allowed upon goods imported directly from one of the two countries by its vessels into the other, or exported from one of the two countries by the vessels of the other to any destination whatsoever.

Mr. President, I do not wish to expose this bill to that very serious question when there is no necessity for it, and when ships will not sail from ports of the United States without carrying cargoes to at least half the cargo commercial capacity of the ship.

Mr. ALLISON. That is all the amendment provides for.

Mr. FRYE. I know that is all it provides for, but that is not what I am afraid of. I am afraid of the Constitution and the treaty question. I do not care anything about the provision as to carrying half cargoes. I hope the Senator from Iowa will withdraw that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Maine may be permitted to speak until 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FRYE. I am obliged to the Senator from Arkansas and the Senate for the five minutes.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question before he leaves this point?

Mr. FRYE. I want to get through with these amendments first, at any rate.

Mr. MONEY. All right.

Mr. FRYE. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa is that—

All vessels receiving compensation under this section shall be at least of class A1 or its equivalent, as defined in paragraph (c) of section 7 of this act, during the whole period for which payment is authorized under the provisions of this title.

I do not think that necessary, because, under the general subsidy, the Secretary of the Treasury must find on every voyage that the ship is A1; yet I have not the slightest objection to it if the Senator desires to make that specific provision. The Senator from Iowa also offered the following amendment as an additional proviso:

And provided further, That until July 1, 1907, not more than $5,000,000 shall be expended in any one year under the contracts provided for in this title, and after that date not more than $8,000,000 shall be expended in any one year under the contracts provided for in this title.

And after that date not more than $8,000,000 shall be expended in any one year under the contracts provided for in this title; and the Secretary of the Treasury—

Should that be the Secretary of the Treasury or the Postmaster-General?

Mr. ALLISON. I should think the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FRYE. The proposed amendment continues—shall make such regulations for the payment of said compensation as will cause any excess in the total amount of compensation earned under this title in any one fiscal year over and above said sums respectively to be deducted pro rata from the total compensation due each person or corporation under this title during said fiscal year.

I have not the slightest objection to that. It is a wise provision.

The next amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa is:

H. Steamers which during their trials have not obtained a minimum speed of 8 knots, half-loaded.

I do not object to that. I do not want any steamer that will not make 8 knots.

The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa is:

I. Vessels which in the same voyage are engaged in traffic exclusively reserved to vessels of the United States.

I do not understand that. Can the Senator in a word or two explain it?

Mr. ALLISON. That refers to vessels in the coastwise trade. That is what I mean.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator mean a ship loaded in the Kennebec River, with ice in its hold and with lumber on its deck, bound with the lumber to Washington and the ice to New Orleans, which at New Orleans changes her enrollment and registers and loads with cotton for Liverpool, does the Senator mean to cut off that ship from New Orleans to Liverpool with a load of cotton?

Mr. ALLISON. That is precisely what I mean. A ship engaged in the coastwise trade, I think, should not be permitted to go into one port of the United States and then go to a foreign port on the same voyage and get a subsidy.

Mr. FRYE. Then I do not like the amendment at all, because I can not see any reason why a ship that goes down to New Orleans, no matter how she got there, and then having registered and become a ship in the foreign trade should not receive subsidy from New Orleans—I do not mean from New York or the Kennebec River, I mean from New Orleans to Liverpool. I hope the Senator will not press that amendment.

The next amendment is one proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] to insert at the end of the bill these words:

Congress reserves the power to alter, amend, or repeal this act, in whole or in part, whenever in its judgment the public interest shall so require, without in anywise interfering with the obligation of any specific contract then in force which shall have been entered into under the provisions of title 1 thereof.

I have not the slightest objection to that amendment, because, in my judgment, Congress has the right to repeal the act at any time.

The Senator from Wisconsin said there was some doubt as to what this bill would accomplish. There is some doubt about everything. He wanted to do everything, for instance, that I desire to accomplish, and he wanted to do it soon; he wanted ships restored to the ocean, but he was not certain whether or not this bill would do it. There can be no absolute certainty as to what any legislation of Congress will accomplish. That is an impossible thing. The Senator can not tell what the Philippine bill will accomplish; the Senator can not tell what the tariff bill will accomplish. No Senator can prophesy with an absolute degree of certainty as to what is to be the outcome of any legislation before Congress.

I can simply say to the Senate that I probably have given more thought to this subject than any other Senator on this floor—I know I have—and I can say to the Senator that, in my judgment, if this bill becomes a law without any amendment other than those I have already assented to, it will accomplish its purpose and we shall have postal lines to the Orient; we shall have them to South America, and we shall have the general freight ships of the country increasing in numbers very largely. I have not any doubt about it all myself, and if I had I never should have consented, as a matter of course, to the terms of this bill. I suppose, however, my judgment is no better than that of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Now, with regard to people not being able to raise money to build ships because there are no contracts provided for in this bill. The objection to the old bill was that the contracts under the general subsidy would run twenty, thirty, or forty years, and Senators figured out a cost of $500,000,000 or $600,000,000. As I have said, there are no contracts here. But is there ever a contract in a tariff bill? For instance, take tin plate. We put a heavy duty on tin plate. Was there any contract that that duty should remain on tin plate for two years or three years or five years; and did the absence of such a contract prevent men from immediately investing their money in tin-plate factories? Not at all. We put a duty on silk goods. Did that prevent the investment of millions and millions of dollars in the manufacture of silk goods in the city of Paterson? It did not prevent a dollar from going into that business, although that law might have been repealed at the very next session of Congress.

I do not think, Mr. President, that there is anything——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, by order of the Senate the vote will now be taken on the amendments submitted and to be presented to the pending bill without further debate.

Mr. VEST and Mr. CULBERSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. VEST. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understood the Chair to announce a while ago that the pending amendment was that offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. My understanding is that all amendments——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senator from Iowa has yielded to the Senator from Missouri, so that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be first taken up if he desires to present it.

Mr. VEST. I have an amendment which I desire to offer, and I ask for vote by yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CULLOM. There is no yielding about it. No debate is in order.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Mississippi will permit me, I want to offer my amendment at this time, and to have a vote upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following:

SEC. 21. That the act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," is hereby specifically declared to be applicable to the builder, owner, and either or both of them, of any vessel receiving subsidy provided for by this act, and any such vessel is hereby declared to be property in the course of transportation within the intent and provisions of section 6 of the aforesaid act of July 2, 1890.

SEC. 22. That upon complaint made to the Secretary of the Treasury that any person owning, controlling, or operating vessels entitled to compensation under this act which together with the vessels associated with them in any combination, contract, or conspiracy aggregate in tonnage one-third of the total tonnage of all vessels entitled to compensation, or that any person owning, controlling, or operating vessels entitled to compensation under this act which transact business in any port of the United States and together with the vessels associated with them in any combination, contract, or conspiracy aggregate one-third of the total tonnage of all vessels entitled to compensation under this act entering or clearing from such port in the United States during any one year, has entered into any contract, combination, or conspiracy, whatever be the form thereof, for the purpose of controlling the terminal facilities for shipping in any port or ports of the United States, or for regulating or increasing the rates of fares for freight or passengers in trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, or for granting any special rebates or privileges to shippers in such commerce, or for otherwise putting any restraint upon trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, the Secretary shall fix a time and place for hearing such charges and give notice thereof to the persons interested and may require the production before him of any contracts or papers which he may deem material in the consideration of such charges, and any refusal to produce the contracts or papers herein demanded shall be prima facie evidence that the matters sought to be proven by said contracts or papers are true. If, after notice and hearing, the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine in writing that such charges are true, thereupon the right of the person or persons so found violating the provisions of this section, and their assigns, to any compensation from the United States under this act shall immediately cease and determine.

SEC. 23. That any contract, combination, or conspiracy, in whatever form made or entered into, between the persons owning, controlling, or operating two or more shipyards in the United States which have constructed, are constructing, or are capable of constructing, during any one year, vessels aggregating in tonnage one-third of the total tonnage of the new vessels registered and entitled to compensation under this act, for the purpose of limiting or controlling the number, tonnage, classes, kind, or type of vessels to be constructed therein or for regulating in any manner the terms or increasing the prices of construction of such vessels, is hereby declared to be unlawful and void; and any consolidation, absorption, sale, or transfer, by the persons owning, operating, or controlling two or more shipyards in the United States of the capacity aforesaid, of the privileges, franchises, or property of such shipyards for the purpose of limiting or suppressing competition between or among such shipyards or the owners or managers thereof for placing the control of the terms and conditions of such contracts for constructing vessels therein under one management is hereby declared to be unlawful and void. Upon written complaint, filed with the Secretary of the Treasury by any person having a contract or application for a contract for the construction of new vessels in the United States under the provisions of this act, alleging a violation of the provisions of this section, the Secretary of the Treasury shall give notice to the interested person or persons of such complaint and fix a time and place for a hearing upon the charges made, and may require the person or persons against whom the charges are made to produce before him any contracts or papers which he may deem to be material in the consideration of such charges, and any refusal to produce the contracts or papers herein demanded shall be prima facie evidence that the matters sought to be proven by said contracts or papers are true.

If the Secretary of the Treasury shall, upon such hearing, find and determine in writing that any of the provisions of this section have been violated he shall publish such finding and determination in one or more newspapers, not exceeding three in the whole, published in any county in which such violation shall have taken place, and shall also mail to the parties interested, so far as known, a copy of such finding and determination, and thereafter during the continuance of any of the acts, contracts, combinations, consolidations, absorptions, sales, or transfers, or the continuance of any of the acts so found and determined to have been unlawful, none of the persons so found to have violated the provisions of this section shall be entitled to any contract of any kind whatever with the United States, and no officer or agent of the United States shall during such continuance enter into any such contract with such person or any of them; and after such finding, determination, and publication as aforesaid no vessel which may be thereafter contracted for to be built by the owner or persons operating such offending shipyard or shipyards shall be the subject of any contract or compensation provided for in this act during the continuance of the wrong so found and determined.

SEC. 24. That the word "person," or "persons," "citizen" or "citizens," wherever used in the three preceding sections, shall be deemed to include "corporations," "associations," and "partnerships" existing under or authorized by the laws of either the United States, of any State, of any Territory, or of any foreign country, unless otherwise limited by this act.

The provisions of the act to which this is amendatory shall not be construed to interfere with or prevent the enforcement of any law of the United States prohibiting contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. VEST. I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I desire to move an amendment to the amendment, if it be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to strike out section 23. It is not properly numbered with reference to the bill. It may have been properly numbered with reference to the bill of last year.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I neglected to state that I desire to modify the amendment. This amendment was offered to the bill which was pending in the Fifty-sixth Congress, but was not voted on; and the numbering of the sections is, of course, inapplicable to the present bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerks will attend to the numbering of the sections.

Mr. VEST. I understand now that the Senator from Wisconsin moves to strike out that part of the amendment in regard to shipyards. Am I right about that?

Mr. SPOONER. That is correct. I have no right to debate it, but that is the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, beginning with line 9, strike out all of the remainder of the amendment down to and including line 14 on page 5.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I will transfer my pair, and let the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] be paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], if it is agreeable to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. That is entirely agreeable.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator from Massachusetts would vote "nay." I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MARTIN (when Mr. DANIEL'S name was called). My colleague is unavoidably detained. On these votes he is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MILLARD].

Mr. DEPEW (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). My general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has been transferred by arrangement to the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD], and therefore I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. I have made an arrangement with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to transfer our pairs. The senior Senator from Wyoming is paired with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], thus leaving the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] and the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] paired. I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES of Arkansas was called). My colleague is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR (when Mr. LODGE'S name was called). My colleague, as has already been announced, is paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. I wish to announce once for all that if my colleague were here, he would vote for this bill and against all amendments not accepted by the committee.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. As already announced by the senior Senator from Idaho, the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], who is supposed to be against the bill, is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT], who is supposed to favor it. Therefore the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEITFELD] and I will vote now and upon all votes taken upon this measure. I make this statement so that I will not have to announce the pair again.

YEAS—25.

Bailey,	Cockrell,	McLaurin, Miss.	Taliaferro,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. VEST. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES of Arkansas was called). I will announce that if my colleague were present, he would vote "yea." I will announce at this time that on all amendments which would tend to defeat the bill or make it better he would, if present, vote "yea." Then he would vote against the bill in any shape.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to offer an amendment to insert as additional sections what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as additional sections the following:

Mr. TELLER. At the end of the whole amendment, I suppose.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator mean to provide that American ships shall receive no subsidy?

Mr. TELLER. The amendment applies to foreign ships admitted to American registry.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I have an amendment which is to come in immediately in this connection. If the Senator from Iowa does not object, I will offer it now, but if he prefers I will withhold it.

Mr. BACON. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert at the end of the bill the following:

No foreign-built ship shall receive or be entitled to receive any subsidy or other benefit from this act or any other act of Congress, except as herein or therein expressly stipulated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The second clause of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act or in any other act of Congress shall be construed to prevent any citizen or corporation of the United States or of any State from contracting for, acquiring, holding, or operating any interest in one or more steamship lines engaged in foreign commerce; but no foreign-built ship of any such line shall hereafter be admitted to American registry.

Mr. TELLER. There are two propositions there. The last proposition, that no foreign-built ship shall hereafter be admitted to American registry, is one proposition. I ask to have a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is capable of a division. The vote will be first taken on the clause which will be read.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be again read to the Senate.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act, or in any other act of Congress, shall be construed to prevent any citizen or corporation of the United States or of any State from contracting for, acquiring, holding, or operating any interest in one or more steamship lines engaged in foreign commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The final clause of the amendment will now be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

But no foreign-built ship of any such line shall hereafter be admitted to American registry.

Mr. PATTERSON and Mr. TELLER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPOONER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does that mean that Congress shall not pass any act hereafter admitting any of those ships to American registry?

Mr. TELLER. That is what it must mean, I suppose. I think it is mere nonsense to pass that provision.

Mr. ALDRICH. Question, Mr. President.

Mr. CULLOM. Regular order, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays being taken, the result was announced—yeas 43, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—43.

Aldrich,	Dolliver,	Hoar,	Penrose,

Mr. MONEY. I send an amendment to the desk, which I propose to the bill, and I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend by striking out all of Title III of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], on which he demands the yeas and nays.

YEAS—25.

Bacon,	Clay,	Heitfeld,	Rawlins,

So Mr. MONEY's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate as amended.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a request for a separate vote on concurring in any amendment made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that a separate vote may be taken on the amendment which was adopted on motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that a separate vote may be taken on the middle clause of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA], providing that shipping companies may make any combination they please.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Otherwise, will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

The amendments not reserved were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A separate vote has been demanded by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] on an amendment adopted on motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add as section 16 the following:

But under the provisions of this act no more than $9,000,000 shall be paid out of the Treasury for or in any one year.

Mr. BACON. Is an amendment to that amendment in order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. BACON. I move to strike out "nine" and insert "three;" so as to make the amount $3,000,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] to the amendment heretofore adopted as in Committee of the Whole on motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Has that amendment been reconsidered, and is it open to amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Clapp,	McEnery,	Pritchard,	Stewart,
Daniel,	Millard,	Quay,	Tillman,
Jones, Ark.	Morgan,	Simmons,	Turner.

So the amendment was nonconcurred in.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I ask that the next reserved amendment may be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has demanded a separate vote on concurring in the middle clause of the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole on motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA], which will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act, or in any other act of Congress, shall be construed to prevent any citizen or corporation of the United States or of any State from contracting for, acquiring, holding, or operating any interest in one or more steamship lines engaged in foreign commerce.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the yeas and nays on concurring in that amendment.

So the reserved clause of Mr. HANNA's amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and be read the third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BERRY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MARTIN (when Mr. DANIEL'S name was called). On this vote and on all votes on amendments to the pending bill my colleague is and has been paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MILLARD].

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES of Arkansas was called). On this vote my colleague is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HOAR (when Mr. LODGE'S name was called). I should like to announce on the passage of the bill that my colleague is paired, and would vote for the bill if present.

Mr. MARTIN (when Mr. TILLMAN'S name was called). I desire to announce that on all amendments to the pending bill and on its passage the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] is paired with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

Mr. CLAY (when Mr. TURNER'S name was called). The Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]; and I have been requested to state that if the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. NELSON. My colleague [Mr. CLAPP] is unavoidably absent. He gave me no particular instructions on this matter, but I understand from other Senators here that he has a general pair on this bill and on all amendments with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 31; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 18, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 17, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

A CORRECTION.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I think there may be a mistake in the Journal; I know there is in the RECORD. On Saturday last I asked unanimous consent that House bill 1592 might be considered in Committee of the Whole. The bill is for the relief of F. M. Vowells. I see in the RECORD that the name is S. M. Bowles. I expect the same error is in the Journal, and I desire to have the name corrected both in the Journal and the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. This bill was not considered by the committee?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. It was not.

The SPEAKER. Then it would not be in the Journal.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SLAYDEN indefinitely, on account of important business.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12346) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair, for the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding with some remarks, I should like to inquire if gentlemen who desire to oppose or criticise the bill can agree as to a member who shall control the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The first thing in order is the reading of the bill unless the gentleman moves to dispense with the reading.

Mr. BURTON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON. I now desire to ask whether those who oppose the bill can agree upon a member who shall control the time in opposition. If not, I trust ample time will be afforded to any member who desires to speak.

Mr. Chairman, in presenting river and harbor bills on previous occasions I have spoken at length upon the benefits conferred by these appropriations upon the commerce and general welfare of the country. But on this occasion I desire in the first instance to dwell at considerable length upon some misapprehensions which have arisen with reference to this measure. I use the word "misapprehension." If we regard the persistent inaccuracy of statement which has been manifested in criticising it, I am not sure but the word "misrepresentation" would be more correct.

In going over this subject, it will be necessary to set forth an uninteresting mass of figures and facts, but I ask the considerate attention of the committee.

The first misapprehension relates to the actual amount appropriated for the ensuing fiscal year. It has been frequently stated that this bill carried a total of sixty millions and over, to be used during the coming year. Such is not the case. The amount included in it to be expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, is a trifle over $24,000,000. In addition to that amount there are authorizations for $36,700,000. But it is no more fair to count these authorizations as a part of the appropriation in this bill than it would be to include in the annual appropriations for the Army the wages of enlisted men, who enlist under provisions in that bill, for the succeeding years after the pending year for which the bill provides. It would be equally unfair to count in the Post-Office appropriation bill the increased appropriations made necessary in the future by the extension of the rural free-delivery service.

Indeed, there is a reason which makes these authorizations less deserving of opposition by those who fear large expenses in the future, in that they are nearly all for the furtherance of commerce in places where it already exists and urgently demands larger facilities, or for the completion of projects which are already under way and upon which partial appropriations have been made for many years. Our experience with reference to past authorizations proves that many years will elapse before the full amount authorized herein will be expended. The act of 1890 contained authorizations for $15,622,980. Of that amount, after the lapse of nearly twelve years, there still remains $769,915. The act of 1892 authorized the expenditure of $31,760,521. Of that amount $308,000 remains unappropriated.

The act of 1896 contained authorizations for the expenditure of $59,616,404. Of that amount $12,186,801, or more than 20 per cent, after a lapse of six years, remains unappropriated, and the estimates for the ensuing year under authorizations made in that act are only a trifle over $3,200,000. The act of 1899 contained authorizations for $21,666,324. After more than three years very nearly one-half of that amount, or $10,774,000, remains unexpended and unappropriated. It is probable that of the $36,700,000 authorized under this act not more than $13,000,000 will have to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, perhaps $10,000,000 for the following year, and $7,000,000 for the succeeding year. Any estimate must be based largely upon conjecture. The amount to be appropriated will depend upon the rapidity with which plans are matured, contracts made, and the work performed.

There is another point pertaining to the amount actually appropriated, namely, that of this $24,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, not more than eighteen millions or nineteen millions will, in the natural course of events, be expended during the ensuing fiscal year. That will be due partly to the usual delays in taking up and completing work and partly to the fact that this is a biennial bill, and provisions for maintenance include two years. It is quite likely that of the $24,000,000 appropriated by this act not more than $15,000.000 will actually be expended between now and June 30, 1903. So much for the first misapprehension in regard to this bill.

The second is that this bill carries much larger amounts than previous bills. Such is not the case. With some considerable care I have prepared a statement, which will be included with my remarks, of appropriations for rivers and harbors for the fiscal years from 1879 to 1902. From this it appears that the largest river and harbor bill passed up to date was that in the year 1890, for the ensuing fiscal year, the total amount of which was $25,136,295, or more than $1,000,000 more than the amount included in this bill. The amount appropriated in the act of 1888 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, was $22,397,616, or within $1,600,000 of the amount provided in this bill. But a fairer test is obtained from the appropriations for two years, as this is a biennial bill. Computed in this manner, there was appropriated for the years 1900 and 1901 something over $41,000,000.

The total amount for rivers and harbors carried by the sundry civil bill for 1902, by this bill, which is for the year 1903, and the probable amount for sundry civil appropriations for continuing contracts in the ensuing year will aggregate $37,000,000 only for the years 1902 and 1903, or $4,000,000 less than for the preceding two years. There is also the misapprehension that the authorizations when combined with the appropriations are greater than in any preceding year. In 1896, when expenditure exceeded revenue, and the country was in a distressed condition and ill able to bear the burdens of increased taxation, a bill was passed by this House and by the Senate, and became a law, appropriating and authorizing $72,000,000, or nearly $12,000,000 more than the appropriations and authorizations in this bill.

There is another misapprehension to which, in the third place, I wish to call attention. I refer to the prevalent idea that appropriations for rivers and harbors are increasing more rapidly than other appropriations of the Government. The facts are exactly the contrary. The table to which I have referred gives the appropriations for seven different departments of the Government from 1879 to 1902, inclusive. It includes rivers and harbors, Post-Office, Navy, Army, Fortifications, Agriculture, and Indian appropriations. The amount appropriated in 1879 for rivers and harbors was $8,201,700. The average amount for 1901 and 1902 was $11,616,115, or an increase of 42 per cent over 1879; or, if we take the average of the two successive years having the greatest appropriation, those in the sundry civil bill included, 1900 and 1901, the increase is from $8,201,700 to $20,697,822, or 152 per cent.

Now, let us take up for comparison, first, the Post-Office, which is most in touch with the business development of the country and which can most naturally be compared with river and harbor appropriations. The amount appropriated for the fiscal year 1879 was $33,256,373; for 1902, $123,782,688, or an increase of 272 per cent as compared with 152 per cent increase in river and harbor appropriations, by comparison with the two years of maximum expenditure in the latter. Let us next compare the Navy. That increased from $14,152,603 in 1879 to $78,101,791 for the fiscal year ending 1902, or an increase of 451 per cent. Let us next take up the Army. The increase in that is from $25,593,486 for the year 1879 to $115,734,049 for the year 1902, or an increase of 352 per cent. The largest increase in any of the appropriation bills is that for fortifications. The amount carried in the bill for 1879 was $275,000. In the bill for 1902 there is an appropriation of $7,364,011, or an increase of 2,577 per cent, as compared with the year 1879.

I want to give a little illustration right in this connection of the appropriations for rivers and harbors and for fortifications at one place, namely, the appropriation for rivers and harbors for the Cape Fear River at and below Wilmington, N. C., and for fortifications at that place. It is evident that the appropriations for fortifications there are merely to protect the navigable channel, from the ocean up to the town of Wilmington, from hostile attacks. In six years the appropriations for the improvement of that channel from Wilmington down have been $345,000, or an average of $57,500 per annum.

The appropriations for fortifications at the mouth of the river have been $1,200,000 for Fort Caswell, and an average expense of $100,000 to $125,000 per annum for the maintenance of the post, making up an aggregate expenditure of close to $2,000,000, or nearly six times as much as for the improvement of the channel which these fortifications are intended to protect. Really, such a case as this should cause us to pause and weigh for a time the comparative advantage of the military establishment of the country and of this measure, which more than any other looks to its commercial development.

Now, if you make a comparison with the appropriations for the Agricultural Department, for which a separate appropriation was first made in the year 1880, the amount has increased from $253,300 for 1881, to $4,582,420 for 1902, or an increase per cent of 1,709. The Indian appropriation bill has increased somewhat less, owing to the fact that it is largely made up of appropriations for the fulfillment of existing treaties, some of which run back into the century before the last. Its amount has increased from $4,746,000 to $9,747,000 between the years 1879 and 1902, or an increase of 105 per cent.

So, to recapitulate, we have an increase of 42 per cent under the most favorable comparison for rivers and harbors and 152 per cent for the least favorable, against 272 per cent for the Post-Office, 352 per cent for the Army, 451 per cent for the Navy, 1,709 per cent for Agriculture, and 2,577 per cent for fortifications.

The total amount appropriated in the last four years for river and harbor improvements was about $63,000,000; for the Navy—one branch merely of the military service—the total appropriations were $247,000,000, nearly four times as great; and yet there are many persons in the country who criticise this bill because of its extravagance, who uttered no sound against the appropriation of four times as much for merely one branch of our military establishment. The following table gives in detail these appropriations for the years from 1879 to 1902, inclusive, and gives percentages of increase:

Amounts appropriated for rivers and harbors, Post-Office Department, and for five other branches of the public service, from 1879 to 1902, inclusive.

Year.	Rivers and harbors.	Post-Office.	Navy.	Army.	Fortifications.	Agricultural.	Indian.

I desire to take up, in the fourth place, a criticism familiar to some of you, that river and harbor bills, not only this bill, but other bills in past years, have carried an inordinate amount for the improvement of insignificant streams and creeks in the country. This criticism has gained very general credence. There is not a sciolist, not a superficial critic of Government appropriations but he is prone to compare this bill in its appropriations for minor streams with those for the great commercial ports, rivers, and harbors of the country, and say that the latter are neglected, while the former absorb the appropriations in the bill.

Now, let us see how much truth there is in this. I have prepared a table on this subject, in which I have included first, rivers and creeks having a tonnage of less than 50,000 tons per annum. Under a second division, I have included those having between fifty and one hundred thousand tons. I think it will be conceded by all that when a waterway has a tonnage of over 100,000 per annum it is worthy of attention and of the fostering care of the Government. In a few instances statistics of tonnage are not available, and in those cases I have given the total value of the commerce, including those rivers and creeks where the total value of the commerce is less than $1,000,000.

I think it will be again conceded that when the value of commerce on a waterway exceeds $1,000,000 per annum it is taken out of the category of streams which are insignificant. The total number of streams having a tonnage of less than 50,000 tons is 35. The aggregate amount to be expended for them is $214,100 for the next two years. The total tonnage of these streams is 619,105. The number having a tonnage of between 50,000 and 100,000 is 24, for which there is included in this bill $202,900. According to the latest statistics, the volume of commerce upon them in one year was 1,671,000 tons. So it seems that appropriations aggregating $417,000 for two years, or $208,500 per annum, will provide for an annual traffic amounting to 2,290,000 tons, at a cost to the Government of between 9 and 10 cents a ton.

The following table includes rivers and creeks of minor importance for which appropriations are made in the river and harbor appropriation bill, H. R. 12346. It includes those which have an annual traffic of less than 100,000 tons, or, in case statistics of tonnage are not available, of a value of less than $1,000,000. It is intended to give the tonnage or the value of articles carried for the latest year for which statistics are available. They are divided into two classes—those having an annual traffic of less than 50,000 tons and those of between 50,000 and 100,000 tons. The respective appropriations in the pending bill are given with each.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has prepared, at my request, a statement of the tonnage on certain of the minor railroads of the country. I selected at random 16 railways, the shortest of which has a mileage of 11.78 miles and the longest of 253.7 miles, and found that of these 8 had a tonnage of less than 100,000 per annum, varying from 3,310 tons on one railway having a length of 44 miles to 59,146 tons on one having a mileage of 86 miles, and if we select the one having the largest tonnage on a short mileage, 98,000 tons on a railroad having a mileage of 11.78 miles.

Yet it will appear that each one of these railroads is capitalized for a very considerable sum. The following is a list of them:

So that it will appear on examination that this criticism that ponds and creeks are absorbing a great share of these river and harbor bills is absolutely without foundation.

The total amount included in the river and harbor bill of last winter for the streams of New England, excluding rivers of the first class, such as the Penobscot, Kennebec, Merrimac, Connecticut, and others, like the Mystic and Providence, which are merely inlets from the sea and used for harbor and anchorage, was $120,500, yet the total amount of freight carried upon these streams annually is not less than 2,000,000 tons. The large expenditures upon rivers which are now being pressed upon Congress are rather for streams having a great volume of water.

In sections of these rivers excellent navigation is available by nature, but in order to make them navigable throughout their full length divers improvements are required. In some the channels shift, because they flow through an alluvial soil; in others there are rocks and other obstructions which require removal; in others there are rapids, above and below which are excellent reaches of navigable water. In almost all there appear alternate shoals and pools, the presence of which is to be observed in all rivers which have any considerable descent in their courses. The Tennessee River may be selected as the best illustration of a river which in some of its reaches affords excellent navigation.

Throughout its whole course its banks are stable, and improvements show satisfactory results in permanence. For the first 226 miles, from the mouth to Riverton, the navigation is excellent. The next 259 miles is through a mountain section, and there is a very considerable fall and many rapids and shoals. Through this section many locks and dams and lateral canals would be necessary to secure safe and permanent navigation. The probable cost of improving this portion would be over $6,000,000. To provide navigation on the upper reach of 188 miles from Chattanooga to Knoxville would interpose no insuperable obstacles.

Numerous rivers are now under consideration which have been surveyed and in which an estimate of the cost has been rendered. Among them are the Tennessee, the Cumberland, the Connecticut from Hartford to Springfield, the Coosa, the Trinity in Texas, the Ouachita in Louisana and Arkansas, and the Columbia in the Northwest. For the improvement of large rivers in the country estimates approximating $150,000,000 have been made by the engineers of the War Department, a large share of which would be for locks and dams. One of the questions to be decided is whether these rivers should be improved on so extensive a scale. The improvement of the harbors of the country is largely made necessary by the adoption of deeper draft boats. Of late in the construction of ocean-going freight carriers the truss model has been adopted for hulls, and boats drawing 40 feet are in sight if channels are available. Not only is there a demand for deeper draft boats, but traffic has increased enormously, and there is every indication of a continued increase.

Doubtless some of these small streams could be omitted. In this bill we have omitted between 20 and 30 of them. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors invites criticism upon them. Ask us questions about them, gentlemen of the committee, if you desire. We desire the very fullest criticism of this bill in its entirety, from the first section to the last. For more than two months we have been at work upon it, in almost daily sessions, at which nearly every member of the committee has been present; but it is probable that with all the scrutiny we have given to it, through the incompleteness of the reports before us or through inaccurate or incomplete information, we have made some mistakes.

It is not alone your privilege, gentlemen of the committee, but it is your duty, if in any way we have gone astray, to call our attention to that fact, so that when this bill goes to the other end of the Capitol, or when it goes from the Capitol to the White House, it shall be free from objectionable items. We have pursued no plan of compromise, we have considered no plan of dividing appropriations according to States, or localities, or membership of this House. We have endeavored to consider every project according to its merits, and made that the sole criterion as to whether it should be included in this bill or not.

Of the sixty millions included in this bill nearly fifty millions is for great projects. The committee thought best, as far as possible, to push the great improvements of the country, which are essential to the development of its commerce, to completion. Even where there are two projects of equal merit, it has seemed best in many instances to select one and finish it, rather than to go on with piecemeal appropriations for two, three, or more years. That is the most businesslike policy, and it is the most economical policy.

We could have brought in a bill here which would have carried in the aggregate, including these authorizations, not more than $40,000,000. Instead of authorizing $2,750,000 for the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi River, we might have brought in an authorization of $1,250,000. That, no doubt, would have provided for the work for two years. We might instead of providing an authorization of four millions for the St. Marys River, between Lake Superior and Lake Huron have made an authorization of $2,000,000. But in the first place it would not have been in accordance with business-like or economical policy.

It is best for the Government that these great projects be pressed to completion as rapidly as possible, and that the commercial interests should know what to depend upon; second, appropriations should be large enough to provide for large contracts. Thus economy can be secured in construction. There is another objection. If we had brought in a bill for only a small amount upon these authorizations we should have been guilty of cowardice. We believe it is best that this growing commerce of ours should be well provided for in the great ports of the country and that the finishing of these projects should be in sight. When there are great projects before us which must be completed, by which we can accomplish salutary results, and the amounts are under $1,000,000, the full amount required for them is set forth in our bill.

If there is anyone who desires to cut down these authorizations, I can not agree with him, because these amounts will be required before the work is done. Why fail to recognize that fact? Why make the declaration to the country that we are content with the dribbling policy which was pursued for many years? I can cite improvements in this country that cost $4,000,000 where the work was scattered over more than twenty years before completed, where every stone laid in place throughout this improvement was absolutely unavailable until the last item of the work was completed; but yet under the policy pursued for years these great improvements were allowed to linger twenty years between beginning and completion. The committee does not think that to be good policy, nor do we believe it is the most economical.

We have appropriated or authorized $12,000,000 for the Mississippi River. That is one-fifth of the total amount in this bill. We have appropriated or authorized a sufficient amount to prosecute the work for four years. We might have made it $6,000,000 and provided for two years, and there are many who give superficial examination to these bills who would have said how much more economical are those who would provide six millions than those who provided for twelve.

But let us consider that a minute. In the first place, annual appropriations have been made for that stream for twenty-three years; the annual average in each bill for the portion below Cairo has been $2,433,000. We have cut down that amount to $2,000,000 per annum, with a further provision that $50,000 of that $2,000,000 may be expended for the maintenance of dredges belonging on the reach below Cairo, in that part above between Cairo and the mouth of the Missouri River. But, in order that the Mississippi River Commission may know just where they are, we have provided that that appropriation shall run for four years, so that at the end of one year there need not be any uncertainty as to what to do the next year, and that they may know now in this year, 1902, just what amounts will be available for the years up to 1906 and make their calculations accordingly.

Every just principle of economy, of efficient performance of work justifies the provision for the four years, if we are going on with this work at all, and I take it that we can not turn aside from that which has been the settled policy of the Government for more than twenty years and omit the Mississippi River from the appropriations in our bill.

Taking up some of the larger amounts in the bill, there has been appropriated or authorized for the harbor of Gloucester, Mass., the first large item on the list, $75,000 in cash and $227,000 is authorized to be expended in the future. Boston Harbor, $600,000 in cash has been appropriated and $3,000,000 authorized in the future, with a view to obtain a 35-foot channel to the open sea. For the harbor of Fall River, Mass., $38,000 cash and $117,412 is authorized to be expended in the future; for the harbor of New London, Conn., $25,000 cash and $120,000 in the future.

Passing on to Arthur Kill, a subsidiary channel to New York Harbor, we have appropriated $100,000 and authorized the expenditure of $596,000 in the future. For the Passaic River and Newark Bay, leading to the city of Newark, we have appropriated and authorized the sum of $75,000 cash and the further amount of $221,000 for continuing contract. For the harbor of Buffalo we have appropriated $200,000 and authorized a further expenditure of $614,643. For the Delaware River, for a channel from Philadelphia to the sea, 56 miles in length, we have appropriated $600,000 and authorized $2,400,000.

To give additional harbor room to the city of Baltimore we have appropriated $88,000 and authorized $221,000; for the removal of Hospital Point in the harbor of Norfolk, $10,000 cash and $195,000 for continuing contract; Newport News, $10,000 cash and $215,000 for continuing contract. For the Great Pedee River in South Carolina we have appropriated the sum of $22,000 cash, which includes the general maintenance, and $106,300 is authorized. For the city of Savannah and its approaches $50,000 cash is appropriated and $1,000,000 authorized; St. John's River below Jacksonville, $350,000 cash and $950,000 authorized; the city of Mobile and Mobile Bay, $300,000 cash and $200,000 authorized; for the continuance and construction of locks and dams on the Warrior River, $374,000 cash and $500,000 continuing contract; for the Southwest Pass, with a view to provide 35 feet of water as an outlet for the traffic of commerce of the Mississippi River, $750,000 cash and $2,750,000 authorized. For Ouachita and Black rivers the sum of $114,000 cash is appropriated, and an expenditure is authorized of $353,954.

For the repair of jetties of Galveston Harbor, $350,000 cash and $400,000 continuing contract is provided.

For Buffalo Bayou we have appropriated or authorized $300,000 cash and $700,000 continuing contract.

For the locks and dams on the Ohio River, Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, those below Pittsburg, for the further prosecution of the work, and to provide for the next two years, we have appropriated $275,000 cash and $300,000 continuing contract.

For the construction of both locks, 8 and 11 on that stream, between the States of Ohio and West Virginia, we have appropriated the sum of $50,000 and authorized the sum of $250,000.

For lock and dam No. 37, just below Cincinnati, we have appropriated $100,000 and authorized the expenditure of $950,000.

For the Tennessee River we have appropriated the sum of $200,000 and authorized the sum of $400,000.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BURTON. I prefer that the gentleman should defer any question until I finish the general remarks on the bill, because I will give ample time to him when the time comes, or will try to, at any rate.

For the city of Cleveland, for the rebuilding of the entrance to the breakwater and its extension, providing an additional harbor of refuge and an extension of the harbor, we have appropriated $500,000 and authorized the sum of $2,300,000. For the Hay Lake Channel, between lakes Superior and Huron, we have appropriated the sum of $500,000 and authorized the further sum of $4,000,000.

Through this channel a tonnage of nearly 30,000,000 goes, yet this traffic must find its way for a long stretch through a channel which is only 300 feet in width, with sharp curves at places where there are rocks beneath, affording the greatest degree of danger. For the Detroit River below Detroit we have appropriated the sum of $500,000 and authorized the sum of $1,250,000. Through this channel goes the greatest traffic in the world, yet in some places it is only 440 feet in width. There, too, as in the Hay Lake Channel, the course is circuitous; it is one where there is much thick weather, where the mariner must proceed in the night under the doubtful direction of range lights and targets on shore; and I want to say that so eager are the boat owners that frequently they load their boats to such a draft that the bottom of the boat comes within 3 to 4 inches of a rocky bottom beneath.

For the rebuilding of the St. Clair Flats Canal we have appropriated $330,000. Through this canal practically the same traffic goes as through the Detroit River, 45,000,000 of tonnage a year, three times as great as through the Suez, and more, yet the canal there was built in 1870, and it has been narrowed by deeper dredging to a width of 262 feet, so that this improvement is pressing. It is quite remarkable that some accident has not already happened there to tie up the great traffic of the lakes. When this measure left us last winter that item was amended by cutting out one-quarter of the $330,000. I can not believe that such a course was judicious, for it plainly meant, we will appropriate part for a work which can not be used until it is completed, and where it would have been just as well to have left out the whole as to have left out a part.

There are one or two minor appropriations in that locality that I will mention briefly. The harbor at Ludington, Mich., has an appropriation of $75,000 and an authorization of $165,000. A car ferry finds its terminus here; used in the winter as well as in the summer, and it is one of the most growing ports upon the lakes. For Conneaut Harbor, in Ohio, the sum of $200,000 is appropriated and $250,000 authorized. Already contracts have been made for the delivery of more than 4,000,000 tons of iron ore at this port, brought down from Lake Superior and from the upper lakes. For the ship canal and Sturgeon Bay (harbor of refuge) an appropriation of $40,000 is made and an authorization of $178,000.

Passing to the Pacific coast, there is appropriated for San Diego, the most southwesterly port in the United States, the sum of $75,000 and an authorization of $192,850. This will complete the improvement there and afford a very excellent harbor. For a through channel between the Golden Gate and Karquines Straits, affording a water route to the towns of Port Costa and Benicia, where a very large tonnage, including most of the grain which is handled in that locality, an appropriation of $100,000 is made and an authorization of $281,000.

This channel is also valuable because it will make it possible for war ships of deep draft to reach Mare Island Navy-Yard, from which they are now shut out. There is appropriated for the mouth of the Columbia River $500,000 cash appropriation and an authorization of $1,000,000. This improvement has not been altogether satisfactory in its results. Very heavy seas prevail at the mouth of this river. The sand bar which prevents easy access tends to go out with the extension of the jetty.

The waves are such, also, that a depth of 40 feet is necessary even to insure safety and security for boats of only 30 feet or even less draft to enter; but this is the outlet for a magnificent territory, shipping out millions of dollars' worth of wheat and timber and other products, and the committee sees no way to do but to proceed to completion, believing that the results obtained under the original plan, or such modifications as may be found necessary, will afford a satisfactory outlet for this river. These are the leading appropriations in the bill and they aggregate close to $50,000,000. The appropriations for the remaining $10,000,000 are divided among a variety of projects, nearly 300 in number, for further continuing improvements and for maintenance.

This bill includes nearly 100 less items than previous bills. That has been accomplished in two ways, first, by the omission of some 30 projects, rivers, creeks, and harbors which we thought unworthy of further attention from the Government; second, by the grouping together of numerous projects where appropriations are comparatively small, and where it was thought best to give, under directions contained in the bill, some discretion to the engineering department regarding the places where money is to be expended. For instance, on what is called the east shore of Maryland we have grouped together 4 harbors and 6 creeks and rivers, appropriating for the 10 the sum of $60,000, so that the average for each is $6,000.

It was thought that the money appropriated could be more economically expended if combined in one item and expended presumably in one contract, and it is thought best, as I said, to give to the War Department some discretion about the manner in which this money shall be expended. The aggregate amount is to be expended according to the rules set forth on page 91 of the bill:

> Where separate works or items are consolidated in this act the amounts herein appropriated shall be expended in securing maintenance and improvement according to the respective projects herein or heretofore adopted by Congress, after giving due regard to the respective needs of each and considering the necessities of traffic. The allotments to the respective works herein consolidated shall be made by the Secretary of War upon recommendations by the Chief of Engineers.

We have also included in this bill, on page 91 and the following page, a mandatory provision making it the duty of the Secretary of War when separate items or appropriations can with advantage to the Government be consolidated, that he shall do so.

Oftentimes in localities near to each other several appropriations of $5,000 or $10,000, or more, are made for which it is necessary to make separate contracts, provide for the installation of a plant at each, and when that plant is installed a good share of the amount to be expended is exhausted.

It is thought better for the public service that these smaller items, when possible, be consolidated in one contract, so that there shall be but one expense for the installation of the plant. That authority has existed with the War Department heretofore, but it was thought best to insert in the bill a mandatory provision, as follows:

> In all cases where separate appropriations are made for works in this bill if money can be more advantageously expended by combining under one contract two or more of such works, such combinations are authorized and shall be made.

There are certain general provisions in this bill—general legislation—before passing to which I will state that an emergency fund of $200,000 has been provided in section 1, which makes a part of the $24,000,000. That emergency fund, however, is carefully hedged about. The disbursement of it is restricted. It must be for some emergency which arises after the passage of this act. It must be such an emergency as renders useless, or comparatively so, a channel or improvement heretofore adopted and prosecuted by the Government. It must be recommended not only by the local engineer having the works in charge, but by the Chief of Engineers. The expenditure on any one project shall not be more than $10,000.

It frequently occurs that a channel is closed up or a pier or other work is seriously injured by a storm. There may be no fund available for the repair of the pier or the opening of the channel, and it seemed best for the committee, to this amount of $200,000, to provide for emergencies of that nature. In the act of 1900, known as the emergency act, there was a similar provision, which has worked well and which justifies the insertion in this act two years later of a similar provision.

I should state that, in addition to the authorizations in this act, provision is made in several places for an additional expenditure for enlarging projects for which an authorization has been made in some previous bill, providing the total does not exceed the amount originally authorized. One of these is at New Haven, Conn., where there is an authorization for extending the channel, provided the amount authorized in the act of 1899 is not exceeded. Another is Winyah Bay, South Carolina, where the act of 1896 provides merely for the opening of the entrance to the bay and made no provision for extending the channel through the bay up to Georgetown, the nearest port.

It is found that there are shoals in between, and that even if the improvement originally provided for were completed it would be of little use. It is found also that the dredges which are engaged on the work can not be employed at the entrance for a good share of the time because of rough water, so that the additional expenditure for utilizing the dredges between the entrance to the bar and Georgetown will be comparatively small. Provision is also made for the removal of Blossom Rock in San Francisco Harbor. By the act of 1899 provision was made for the removal of Arch Rock and the two rocks known as "Shag Rocks" in that harbor.

The work was done there for very much less than the estimates. Upon examination it appears that Blossom Rock is an obstacle to navigation in that harbor nearly as dangerous as those already removed. Providing the total expense does not exceed the amount authorized in 1899, Blossom Rock is also to be removed. Provision is also made for the insertion of a lock in Rock River as part of the improvement of the Illinois and Mississippi Canal.

I should state that in some of these largest projects the total amount required for completion is not authorized in the bill.

One of the best illustrations is the Hay Lake Channel, between Lake Superior and Lake Huron. The total amount estimated for completion is $5,750,000. We have appropriated and authorized in this bill only $4,500,000, leaving a balance of $1,250,000. The total for Boston Harbor is $8,000,000. We have appropriated and authorized here $3,600,000. The course pursued in these cases and some others has been decided upon after full consultation with the engineers, who say that the amounts included in this bill are ample to secure the promptest and most economical results.

They say, further, that there is one advantage in this method, because in the development of an improvement it often appears that material modifications would be beneficial; but if a contract has been made for the whole work they can not make those modifications without getting the consent of the contractor, and probably paying him damages. Also, it is probable that in some of these great projects the total expense will be very materially less than the amount of the estimate, or that a less amount of improvement will secure the desired results.

In these cases, perhaps seven or eight in number, we have authorized less than the total amount required, partly to keep the amounts authorized in this bill within reasonable limits, but quite as much and more in the belief that the course adopted is the most salutary one to pursue. In case the total cost of the improvement is $1,000,000 or less, we have in all cases, with one exception, appropriated or authorized the whole amount, restricting the limitation to less than the total amount estimated only in several of the very large projects which are included in the bill. Some other general provisions make additions to or changes from previous legislation.

Section 3 provides for a board of engineers, five in number, who shall review all projects examined by the local engineers. This subject was considered at considerable length during the discussions upon the bill last winter. The recommendations upon which items are included in this bill come now directly from those having the rank of lieutenant-colonel, or a higher rank, to the Chief of Engineers. Those having a lower rank than that of lieutenant-colonel transmit them to the division engineer, who then transmits them to the Chief of Engineers, with his approval or disapproval; then the Secretary of War transmits them to Congress.

The result is just what naturally would be expected. Each engineer has his own standard of the desirability of the work upon which he is called to report, and there comes to Congress and the committee a variety of opinions. It often occurs that an improvement of a certain quality which will cost, say, $100,000 is recommended. Another report comes from another engineer more conservative in his disposition upon an improvement costing $25,000, which in fact is more beneficial, and yet he gives an adverse report upon it.

It is true that to an extent we can decide upon these reports and recognize the different standards adopted, but it is very desirable that a uniform standard should be adopted by the Executive Department, and that a board of engineers, five in number, familiar with all the works in the country, should review them before they are sent to Congress. There is also a provision in this section to the effect that the Committee on Commerce of the Senate and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House can call upon this board for a report upon any project already adopted. Occasionally there is a project upon which we are very doubtful and it seems desirable to have an expert opinion upon it.

Section 4 provides for the formation of an international commission, the members of which shall consider the very important subject of levels of the Great Lakes and other waters which find their outlet through the St. Lawrence. This provision is a necessary one. In many instances power canals have been constructed, or are in contemplation, which threatened to divert the water in a manner such as to materially interfere with the lake levels. Lowering the channel through the St. Marys River 3 inches would cause damage to commerce that could probably be counted by millions of dollars.

There is already a power canal there which has been opened on the Canadian side, and one is in contemplation on our side. Also, in improving channels there it is necessary in some cases, in order to get the best depth of water, to go over into Canadian waters. To settle all these questions, the demand for this commission is immediate and pressing.

It is also provided that they shall report upon the advisability of locating a dam at the foot of Lake Erie where the waters discharge through the Niagara River and its probable cost. Engineers have already figured on that problem. On several occasions an ice jam at this place has caused a rise of water on the lake not only of inches but a foot or more, giving an object lesson as to the effect of a dam. There seems to be no slope in the water of the lake; if a rise of 14 inches is caused by an obstruction at the foot, there is an equal rise at the mouth of the Maumee River or at the other end of the lake. While we are making provisions for deepening harbors upon this lake, it is desirable to have an examination made whether the construction of a dam will not in a great degree provide increased depth.

Section 5 provides for the sale of property which has become useless. Under an old act of Congress it is necessary to have an inspection and estimate even before the least valuable article that is used by the engineer force can be sold. As an illustration, a piece of breakwater which washed ashore could not be sold without an inspecting officer going out from the War Department and appraising its value. Another instance occurred where a mule that had been used on the Tennessee River was no longer required, yet it was necessary to send out an officer to appraise the value of the animal. It was found when the appraisement had been made that the expense of this red tape was altogether more than the proceeds upon a sale.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may be allowed to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio be allowed to conclude his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON. This section also provides that where a dredge used in river and harbor improvements is no longer required at one locality it may be either permanently or temporarily transferred to another. An illustration appears in this bill. The dredges used on the Mississippi River below Cairo are not required for the whole year, and there is a provision that for a part of the time they may be used above Cairo. Whether the transfer be permanent or temporary, there is a proper accounting to be made between the two portions of the river, so that the amount of compensation for the use of the dredge which belongs below Cairo may be credited to that account and charged to the other.

Section 6 provides that certain provisions included in previous river and harbor bills shall be subject to that provision of the act of 1899 authorizing the Attorney-General's Department to act.

Section 7 repeals previous provisions heretofore made for six projects, and orders that the money remaining to the credit of each shall be turned back to the Treasury. These are not large in any case, but it was thought desirable to abandon further work on all of these projects.

Section 8 repeals the act passed in the year 1876 authorizing the residents and property owners of Neville Township, county of Allegheny, and State of Pennsylvania, to close the channel on the south side of the island by the construction of a causeway or otherwise. That provision was included in the bill of 1876, probably under local influences, but it appears not only that the closing of this branch of the channel on the south side of the island would promote the danger from overflow, but would also cause the flooding of a considerable district now thickly populated. The committee thought best to recommend that this provision be promptly repealed.

Section 9 provides that the amount for the uninterrupted gauging of the waters of the Mississippi River and its tributaries be fixed at $9,600. This provision is necessary, in view of some ambiguity in the act of August 11, 1888, as to whether the amount is $6,000 or $9,600.

Section 10 is a provision to which I ask the attention of the House, which seems to me to provide for the adoption of a better policy. It is to the effect that the Secretary of War may, whenever application be made before the expiration of the time limited, and the reason for such extension shall be deemed by him sufficient, extend the time for the completion of any bridge. In practice many bills come to Congress for the extension of the time limit fixed for the construction of these bridges. Rather than to go through that process, which often is one of circumlocution and under which Congress invariably, I think, accepts the recommendation of the War Department, it seemed best to give that general authority to the Secretary of War to extend this time limit whenever the reasons seemed to him sufficient.

Section 11 provides that the Secretary of War may fix regulations as to the speed of vessels in places improved by the Government. Take, for instance, the St. Clair Flats Canal that I have mentioned. There is a special statute or regulation in regard to that. The two piers are only about 300 feet apart and the channel only about 262 feet wide. The going through of large boats causes a great movement in the water, and if these boats went beyond a certain rate of speed it would very materially impair if not ultimately destroy this canal. In many harbors and rivers the same is true, namely, that if a boat proceeds at a too rapid rate of speed it is likely to throw down the whole improvement or cause very serious injury. It is provided that the regulations shall be posted in conspicuous and appropriate places for the information of all who may be affected by them.

To remedy an ambiguity in the act providing penalties for the depositing of refuse in the harbor of New York City, section 12 is to the effect that the repealing clauses in the act of March 3, 1899, which some attorneys of standing have claimed repealed the act, shall not be held to refer to that act prohibiting deposits.

Section 13 provides for the printing of a copy of the laws pertaining to rivers and harbors, and also for the bringing down to date of a document published in 1897, I think, giving a list of surveys and preliminary examinations made, and also a statement of all appropriations made for all projects since the formation of the Government. Each of these documents or books will be of very great value.

It also contains a provision that the Secretary of War shall ascertain and report to Congress all cases in which improvements on navigable waters of the United States have been or are being undertaken by municipalities, private corporations, or individuals, either alone or in conjunction with the Government, and information shall be furnished also as to the places in which work is done near to piers or wharves belonging to private individuals or corporations.

That I believe is all, gentlemen, that I desire to state upon this bill. Perhaps it would be well for me to dwell briefly on a subject touched upon at very considerable length in the report. The committee, not only this winter but last, made examination of the expenditures for the Missouri River and found that the commerce on that stream was entirely disappointing; that on the stretch below Sioux City there has been appropriated by the Government $8,723,000, and all there was to show for that was an annual traffic of 263,114 tons, of which 218,514 tons was made up of sand and building materials, carried an average distance of less than 2 miles.

They found that, excluding these building materials carried less than 2 miles, the total tonnage below Sioux City was only 44,600 tons, and that if you bunch all the tonnage of 263,000 tons, the average haul is less than 4 miles. This showing does not present to us any promise in the way of commercial development or justification for the continuance of these large appropriations.

It appears that in 1899, on the Hudson River, for which there has been appropriated a sum considerably less than for the Missouri River, there was a traffic of 1,500,000 tons and more; and for the Ohio River there was a traffic of 13,579,000 tons; and for the St. Marys River there was a traffic of 24,554,000 tons in 1899. and I may say that in the last year that has increased to over 28,000,000. There you have it, 28,000,000 as against 44,600 of traffic, excluding the sand, and a much larger sum appropriated for the Missouri River.

Mr. REEVES. You said 1,500,000 tons for the Hudson River.

Mr. BURTON. I meant 15,000,000 tons. I thank the gentleman for the correction. In the multitude of figures it is sometimes difficult to get them all right. On the Detroit River over 40,000,000 tons are carried in a year, and there has been appropriated for that stream less than for the Missouri River below Sioux City. There has been appropriated for that portion above Sioux City to Stubbs Ferry, or Fort Benton, $2,179,000, for a traffic of 23,041 tons.

Three years ago, when this bill was under discussion, I attempted to show to the committee that an amount was appropriated there for ice harbors so considerable that it would be cheaper each autumn to burn every boat on that stretch of the stream and buy them and make a gift of them to the owners in the spring than to attempt to maintain these so-called ice harbors. It is perfectly manifest to everyone that the greater share of these amounts goes for what is called the rectification of the banks. For the systematic improvement, as it is called, of one reach of the Lower Missouri River, located in one Congressional district, I believe, the sum of $2,600,000 has been expended, without securing any salutary results. If that systematic improvement were extended from the mouth to Kansas City, at least $30,000,000 would be required.

The members representing that section appeared before us last winter and proved to us most conclusively that in the years before these large appropriations were made for the Missouri River there was a very considerable traffic upon it; and it would seem to the committee that in view of the fact that when no appropriations were made or no considerable sum was appropriated there was a large traffic, and that when enormous appropriations—for enormous is the right word in comparison with the benefits—are made there is no traffic, it might be well to return to the old order of small appropriations and a more considerable traffic.

Mr. CLARK. Have you got to a place now where you can answer questions conveniently?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; I shall be glad to answer the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. On page 82, in lines 10, 11, and 12, there is an item—and the Secretary of War shall cause an examination to be made of the lower portion of said river with a view to ascertaining whether navigation can be maintained at a reasonable cost by dredging and the removal of obstacles; also at and near Hermann, West Glassgow, Lexington, and St. Joseph with a view to ascertaining what improvements in those localities, if any, are necessary for navigation.

I want to ask you if that is for surveys, as we usually understand the meaning of the word?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. It says "examination."

Mr. BURTON. Yes. There is one provision there in which the gentleman, I think, is interested. I think this, however, will cover the case. It will be noticed that the whole amount for the whole Missouri River aggregates $80,000.

Mr. CLARK. What I was asking you about was if lines 10, 11, and 12 provide for what are usually called surveys.

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. One other question: I want to ask you if you, individually, or the committee have any objection to having the same amendment in this bill that Mr. DOUGHERTY and myself secured the adoption of in the last bill, to permit the owners of farms on the Missouri River to build dams, dikes, and so on, under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BURTON. Subject to the approval of the War Department?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. None whatever.

Mr. CLARK. I will offer such an amendment at the proper time.

Mr. BURTON. I would state to the gentleman, so that it may be understood, that the appropriation is by no means so large as it was in the bill which failed, and I will state further that this inclusion of these items in the body of the bill, in section 1, gives the direction for a survey a little higher standing than before.

Mr. CLARK. That is what I wanted to understand.

Mr. BURTON. I understand the gentleman intends to offer an amendment to the effect that dikes and dams and works for the protection of the land bordering on the river may be made by abutting owner or municipalities, provided they are approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. And the plans are to be submitted to him before any improvement is made?

Mr. CLARK. Yes; just the same amendment that we adopted here a year ago.

Mr. BURTON. I can see no objection whatever to a provision of that kind.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, I have detained you longer than I intended, and have gone over this bill at considerable length. I maintain that, more than any measure brought into this House, the money expended under this bill will, in this commercial age, benefit the people of the United States.

It will be conceded that river and harbor improvements must be made. There is a great variety of ways in which these improvements can be made. On this subject I can not do better than to repeat a portion of an address delivered at Baltimore last October:

The different commercial countries have adopted various regulations in providing for river and harbor improvements. No country has at all times or at all places pursued an entirely uniform policy. There may be said to be three distinct systems:

1. That under which channels and harbors are improved by municipalities and private corporations, which for compensation impose charges upon shipping or commerce. This system is illustrated in Great Britain. The Central Government does not improve channels or harbors, except for the purpose of national defense, but municipalities and private corporations have expended for these purposes greater amounts than in any other country. Not many years ago the Tyne at and below Newcastle was improved at an expense of over $20,000,000; the Mersey and Clyde at still greater expense; the Manchester Canal, 35½ miles in length, was built at a cost of $75,000,000 or more; $150,000,000 has been expended for canals in the interior of the country.

Theoretically the charges imposed are commensurate with the cost of the improvement, but in practice it is rarely so. Oftentimes a harbor is improved by a municipality to promote its trade, as by the city of Bristol, or by a private corporation to provide better means to send its products to market, as at Cardiff to facilitate shipments of coal.

2. A system under which the central Government improves harbors and channels, and imposes charges in the form of tolls, extra duties, port or wharfage dues, the income of which is in greater or less proportion to the expense. This method is well illustrated by the action of the Republic of Uruguay, which last December contracted for the improvement of the harbor of Montevideo at the expense of $9,916,336, and made provisions for payment by the imposition of an extra duty of 3 per cent on dutiable imports and 1 per cent on dutiable exports. It should be noted that under this and the preceding system the furnishing of anchorage and turning basins, docks, and sometimes warehouses is included in expenditures upon ports.

The policy indicated in this second method is pursued in France in reference to harbors, where large amounts are collected for dock dues. In numerous instances where this method has been adopted the expense of an improvement has been apportioned between the General Government and the city or locality especially benefited. The port of Antwerp has been improved at an expense of $30,000,000. Approximately three-fifths of the expense has been paid by the Belgian Government and two-fifths by the city of Antwerp. In the improvement of the harbors of Trieste, recently authorized by the Government of Austria-Hungary, a smaller proportion of the expense is to be paid by the city. In the construction of the Elbe-Trave Canal, opened June 1, 1900, and which joins the North Sea and the Baltic, the Government of Prussia contributed a little less than one-third, and the balance was paid by the city of Lubeck.

3. The third system is that under which the General Government improves channels and harbors and imposes no charge upon commerce with a view to obtaining compensation for the improvements. This method is in vogue in the United States both as regards rivers and harbors. In France it is followed in the navigation of rivers and canals, all tolls upon which were abolished in 1880. The policy pursued in the United States has not been altogether consistent or uniform. The very first act on the subject recognized a policy similar to that described in the first system described above, namely, the making of improvements and imposition of charges by a private corporation or municipal body.

It was passed on the 11th day of August, 1790, and gave consent to the operation of acts passed, respectively, by the States of Rhode Island, Maryland, and Georgia, authorizing the levying of a charge on the tonnage of ships by the River Machine Company in the town of Providence, by the wardens of the port of Baltimore, and the collection of such a charge for the purpose of improving the river Savannah. Similiar statutes were passed at a later date consenting to the operation of acts passed by the States of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and Virginia.

Provisions authorizing very limited expenditures for this purpose were included in bills for the Navy, for fortifications and for light-houses, but no general adoption of a policy of improving rivers and harbors appears until later. Statutes were passed authorizing surveys, notably for the waters tributary to the Mississippi, and on the 6th of April, 1802, during the Presidency of Thomas Jefferson, an act was passed which stands out prominently as the first appropriation for improvements of this nature. It appropriated $30,000 for repairing and erecting public piers in the river Delaware.

The act admitting the State of Alabama, November 2, 1819, set apart 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the lands lying within the State for public roads, canals, and improving the navigation of rivers, of which three-fifths was to be applied on objects within the State, under the direction of the legislature thereof, and two-fifths for the making of a road or roads leading to the said State, under the direction of Congress.

On the 3d of March, 1817, President Madison vetoed a bill setting apart certain funds for constructing roads and canals and improving the navigation of water courses, on the ground that he found no warrant in the Constitution for such expenditures by the National Government. Notwithstanding this veto, appropriations were made under the next Administration, and in the great commercial and industrial revival which followed the end of the Napoleanic wars in Europe, and which extended in an exceptional degree to this country, a different opinion prevailed. It may be regarded that under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution and the authority vested in Congress to regulate commerce between the States, the right to take control of and to make appropriations for river and harbor improvements is well settled, though these appropriations have been made irregularly and at times only for a limited number of objects.

On the 7th day of May, 1822, an appropriation was made for a sea wall on the Isle of Shoals, on the coast of New Hampshire and Maine, and a harbor or shelter for vessels from the ice in the Bay of Delaware near Cape Henlopen. This was contained in a statute pertaining to light-houses, for which appropriations were made from a very early day.

The first statute including any considerable number of projects was passed on the 24th of May, 1824, appropriating money for the removal of bars at six places in the Ohio River, including also a general appropriation for improving the navigation of the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Missouri to New Orleans and of the Ohio River from Pittsburg to its junction with the Mississippi.

Two days later money was appropriated for making or deepening the channel leading into the harbor of Presque Isle, now known as the harbor of Erie, in the State of Pennsylvania, and for repairing Plymouth Beach, in the State of Massachusetts, and thereby preventing the harbor at that place from being destroyed.

From this time on annual bills were passed for a plurality of objects of much the same nature and in much the same phraseology as in the river and harbor bills of to-day, until and including the year 1838. After this year, while the general policy was recognized and appropriations were made in almost every year, the passage of general bills was, with two exceptions, suspended for twenty-eight years.

Those exceptions were the bills of June 11, 1844, and August 30, 1852. The regular passage of river and harbor bills was again resumed in the year 1866. Beginning with that bill, appropriations have been regularly made. Bills for the purpose were passed annually from 1866 to 1882, with the single exception of the year 1877, after which they were passed biennially until and including the year 1896, since which time but one general bill has been passed—that approved March 3, 1899.

The question remains, How shall this work be done? Now, there might be a division; that is, a fraction of it might be paid by the General Government and a fraction by the parties thought to be peculiarly interested. I will, with the consent of the committee, print briefly some remarks that I made on that subject in 1896.

There might be an adjustment made of it after the improvement of a channel is completed, so that the dredging or maintenance should be kept up by the localities most interested. The line might be more strictly drawn, I think, between that which should be done on the one hand by the General Government and that which should be done by municipalities or private interests on the other.

But who will provide for the great interstate rivers and channels? How will you provide for the channel, to use an illustration that I have several times employed, of St. Marys River, between Lake Superior and Lake Huron? The critics of this bill have charged that up to the State of Michigan.

I will be perfectly frank in saying that the cities of Cleveland, of Buffalo, of Chicago, and of Duluth are a great deal more interested in that channel than any city in the State of Michigan, because it provides them with facilities for through traffic from the head of Lake Superior and all parts of that lake to Chicago and Lake Michigan, also to Lake Huron, and especially to the ports of Lake Erie, making it possible to bring down fourteen or fifteen million tons of iron ore, thereby aiding and giving this country that preeminence in the manufacture of iron and steel which we have been gaining from day to day and year to year.

Is not that a national improvement? How are you going to provide for that navigation? While I am not so sure about the levees of the Mississippi, how are you going to make the navigation of that river a State project? The same is true of the port of Boston and of the ports of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Galveston, and San Francisco and Portland, all outlets for the wealth of this country, so that the improvements there are for the benefit of the whole country.

In submitting this bill from the committee we maintain that it is not a measure for the benefit of certain localities, it is not a measure for the benefit alone of cities or towns here and there. It is not a bill which brings special privileges or advantages to individuals or to communities. If there are such items in the bill, let members of the committee point them out. If we have made mistakes in this regard, we desire to know. It is not a measure merely for the removal of rocks from the path of the mariner and to make his course plainer and safer. This is a bill which confers inestimable benefits upon our common country and upon all its people. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question now that he has finished his speech?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. MOON. I want to state a fact and then ask a question, not in any antagonism to this provision, but rather in order to obtain an explanation. You will find on page 62 of the bill that you provide for the improvement of the river above Chattanooga, Tenn., the sum of $50,000. The chairman, of course, understands that that appropriation is not for any particular work at any particular place.

Mr. BURTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon, I did not hear. Is it page 62 to which he refers?

Mr. MOON. Yes. It is to remove temporary obstructions to the river. Well, now, above Chattanooga, down to Colbert Shoals and Bee Tree Shoals, is the largest tonnage on the river and there are perhaps more temporary obstructions than above. I notice upon page 61 that you make an appropriation confining the expenditure to Colbert Shoals and Bee Tree Shoals alone. Now, this appropriation I concede is a very liberal and just one in view of the appropriations made heretofore. The question I want to ask the chairman is this: Why does he not leave in the discretion of the Engineer Corps the right to appropriate any part of either the $200,000 or the $400,000 under the contract system here to the removal of any temporary obstructions between Colbert Shoals and Bee Tree Shoals and Chattanooga, instead of putting it all on the work there?

Mr. BURTON. That was in pursuance of a policy of the committee not to scatter appropriations and leave incomplete a number of projects, but to finish one as soon as possible. The estimated amount for the improvement of that river from Riverton to Chattanooga is $4,800,000. It will probably cost a million more. It is certainly very plain, before the upper portion can be utilized it will be necessary to improve the lower part, because otherwise the commerce of the upper portion would have no outlet, and it was thought best to secure the improvement at the Colbert and Bee Tree Shoals before taking up any other part.

Mr. MOON. That is in pursuance of a policy of the committee upon all rivers?

Mr. BURTON. In a word, not to scatter the appropriations?

Mr. MOON. I have no serious objection, but I wanted the gentleman's explanation to go in the RECORD. That was the object of my inquiry.

Mr. SIMS. I notice that the appropriation from Riverton to the mouth of the Tennessee River is $19,000, a distance of 226 miles. Is that the full amount recommended by the local and Chief Engineer?

Mr. BURTON. That is the full amount recommended by the local and by the Chief Engineer.

Mr. SIMS. Is there not an unexpended balance?

Mr. BURTON. There is. The act of 1899 carried an appropriation of $100,000 for this reach of the river, from which there is still an unexpended balance. I think that portion of the river is well provided for, and the results, I will say to the gentleman, obtained in the expenditure of the money, have been very satisfactory.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman whether there is any provision in the law now that leaves it in the discretion of the Secretary of War to make any change in projects which have heretofore been adopted by the Government—I mean any change of plans?

Mr. BURTON. No general law. In some instances where we have thought it desirable to give the Secretary of War the right to modify, we have inserted a provision to that effect.

Mr. CUSHMAN. In the project which is now under the continuing-contract system, for instance, our project at Everett, if it is desirable to vest in the Secretary of War authority to make a change in the plans there, would that enactment properly come in the river and harbor bill or in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. BURTON. It would more properly belong in the river and harbor bill, but the better way would be to bring it up by separate resolution.

Mr. CUSHMAN. And not as an amendment to this bill?

Mr. BURTON. I will say to the gentleman that it is my intention to call up a bill or resolution passed by the Senate on that subject and obtain unanimous consent for its passage in two or three days. If that can not be done I will ask to have it inserted as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. On page 51, line 14, it is provided "from the balance remaining on hand to the credit of the lower portion of said Coosa River, between Wetumka and the railroad bridge, a further sum of $10,000 shall be expended upon that river above the said railroad bridge." I understand from that that there is now remaining to the credit of the lower portion of the Coosa River an unexpended balance.

Mr. BURTON. About $25,000. It was almost if not quite $25,000 at the date of the last report, but it is now somewhat less, because there is a plant there that has to be taken care of.

Mr. THOMPSON. The purpose is to take from this appropriation made for the lower end of the Coosa River, near the outlet, a sum of money and expend it on the upper end, which is contrary to the policy the gentleman has just stated in reference to other streams, because the portion of the river lying above lock 4 on this river can not be utilized until the lower portion is open, for it would have no outlet to the Gulf.

Mr. BURTON. The policy or recommendation of the committee was to transfer $10,000 of the $25,000 to the upper portion of the river. First answering that question, the gentleman from Alabama will realize that no hard and fast rule can be made, although we have followed as far as possible the one to improve the river from the lower portion up. To that there are several exceptions; first, where there is an independent commerce on the upper portion of the river for a considerable reach, and access can not be obtained from that portion or reach to the lower portion or mouth of the river without the expenditure of an undue amount of money.

In my remarks three years ago, I mentioned the Tennessee River between Chattanooga and Knoxville—a stretch of 188 miles—as an illustration of that situation. The committee did not think it best to recommend further continuance for the improvement of the Coosa River. We regard that, I may say frankly, as one of the most, if not the most, objectionable projects for which appropriations have been made in the past by Congress. One million two hundred thousand dollars has been expended, and it would require at least $6,000,000 to build 30 locks and obtain only 4 feet of navigation.

When the locks and dams are finished I doubt very much whether boats would patronize it. I do not believe 4 feet of navigation, where a boat must go through 30 locks and have the delays incident to it, will develop traffic worthy of the name. The committee regard the continuance of that improvement as wasteful to the very last degree. It is true that $1,200,000 has been expended on it, but for some years past no appropriation has been made to continue the work. That being the fact, it is not desirable to maintain the plant at Wetumka.

The amount there might just as well be diverted to something else. We have diverted the $10,000 to the upper portion of the river, and we have provided that from the balance a survey shall be made of the Coosa and Alabama. Furthermore, I want to say to the gentleman, that we have an estimate from a local engineer in charge there that says it will cost not merely $6,000,000, but $10,000,000 and over to complete that improvement. I should be very glad if the gentleman would discuss the matter in his own time. I shall insist that the committee give him full time to be heard, at which time he may advocate that improvement on the Coosa River.

Mr. THOMPSON. I shall do that.

Mr. BURTON. But I have expressed the opinion of the committee in regard to that improvement.

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. TALBERT. On page 113, in the seventeenth line, I notice under the section that begins on page 102 that the Secretary of War is directed to cause preliminary examinations and surveys to be made, etc., of the Edisto River. Is it not necessary to say from what point to what point?

Mr. BURTON. It would be better. Of course if there is this general authority, which sometimes they like better than to have it limited, they will go on the river and find out what its capabilities are for navigation.

Mr. TALBERT. I suppose it is better to leave it for them to determine how far.

Mr. BURTON. Quite as well, I think. I do not think it is a matter of special importance. If the gentleman would like to have the boundaries fixed, the committee is entirely willing. In the surveys presented to us, where the member desired that it be limited from such a point to such a point, it was inserted in the bill.

Mr. TALBERT. In the survey, where it empties into the sea, opposite Edisto Island, up to the line of Edgefield and Aiken counties.

Mr. BURTON. If the gentleman desires we can have that when we reach it. It can be inserted.

Mr. BELLAMY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. BELLAMY. I would like a few minutes to discuss the bill, especially in relation to North Carolina.

Mr. BURTON. I trust the gentleman will have opportunity. If there are no more questions there is no objection to his proceeding now. The other gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] desires to ask a question.

Mr. SMALL. I will call the attention of the gentleman to page 48 of the bill, from lines 11 to 14, providing for improving the Scuppernong River, North Carolina, in accordance with the report submitted in House Doc. No. 131, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, $10,000. The report of the engineers recommended $14,000, if I am not mistaken, for the purpose of completing the project, and I ask the gentleman if it would not be in the interest of economy to make the entire appropriation, in order that the project of deepening the channel or dredging the bar at the mouth of the Scuppernong River may be completed?

Mr. BURTON. I will say to the gentleman if we followed that rule with the Scuppernong we should have to follow it in a hundred cases. What the interests of economy would have required would have been the omission of the Scuppernong entirely and the completion of some other project already under way; but, as I understood it, that was regarded to be quite as important as others in North Carolina, and, as the committee so understood, it was placed in the bill; but there are numerous projects here where we are not able to provide a sufficient amount to complete work. The margin between the amount appropriated and the amount to complete is comparatively small in a few cases. I think the gentleman will find that the $10,000 expended there, particularly if the contract for it is joined with other projects, will prove quite sufficient to bring the results that are expected.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman intimates that that item might have been discarded entirely in the interests of other projects. I desire to ask the gentleman if the other projects referred to are in North Carolina?

Mr. BURTON. I will say so; yes, sir. I will say further that we omitted three or four in North Carolina. Town Creek, Fishing Creek, Contentnia Creek, and New River, in North Carolina, were omitted from the bill.

Mr. SMALL. I would not disparage any of the items in the State, but——

Mr. BURTON. Oh, I do not want the gentleman to understand that his action excluded other projects from the bill. I am particularly desirous to relieve him of any responsibility for having pushed out anything else in the bill.

Mr. SMALL. I have great respect for the gentleman, but I differ with him as to the importance of the item in relation to the Scuppernong River. Another inquiry: I introduced a bill authorizing the appointment of a board of engineers to consider the subject of an inland waterway from Norfolk, in the State of Virginia, to Beaufort Inlet, in the State of North Carolina. This is not included in the bill as reported by the committee. If I may do so without impropriety, I would ask the gentleman the reasons which actuated the committee in not including that provision for the survey of this inland waterway?

Mr. BURTON. First, there were numerous claims from different localities in the country for the survey of inland waterways, as from Delaware and Maryland, and the coast of New England, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, and Texas. It did not seem to us fair to include this item in North Carolina without including all the rest. That was in pursuance of a rule, as far as possible, to treat all alike. The second reason is this: In the year 1900 a provision was inserted for a survey of an inland waterway in this very locality. The estimated cost, I think, of 16-foot navigation was $1,900,000, for 18-foot navigation a very much larger sum.

Either of those amounts was sufficient to preclude the desirability of an appropriation being made for it now. After one waterway has been surveyed in North Carolina—and so far a preference has been given to it in comparison with other States—and an estimate came in of so great size as did come in, it did not seem desirable to have another waterway survey there right in the same neighborhood. Such a course would not only threaten undue appropriations, but it would be unfair to other localities whose inland waterways remain unsurveyed.

Mr. SMALL. I desire to submit another inquiry to the gentleman, if I may do so.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. SMALL. What was the policy of the committee in including in the bill appropriations for additional examinations and surveys?

Mr. BURTON. To limit them as far as possible.

Mr. SMALL. That was the general policy which governed the committee?

Mr. BURTON. Yes. We did not wish, in any case, to have any one Congressional district, no matter how much water front it might have, to have more than one, or at most two. It is possible some exceptions have been made in relation to matters of a very general nature, but we limited them as far as possible. There are less by fifty than were included in former bills.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to ask in relation to the provisions for improving the Mississippi River from the Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, found on page 80:

Continuing improvement, $2,000,000, which shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for the general improvement of the river, for the building of levees, and for surveys, including the survey from the Head of the Passes to the headwaters of the river, in such manner as in their opinion shall best improve navigation and promote the interests of commerce at all stages of the river.

In view of the fact that the plans of the Mississippi River Commission have frequently been modified, I would ask the chairman of the committee if he will say what the present plans are that this appropriation is applicable to?

Mr. BURTON. That would, of course, involve full acquaintance with the plans of the Mississippi River Commission, but I think I can state generally.

Mr. HEPBURN. I mean generally. Where is the major portion of this money probably to be expended?

Mr. BURTON. First, not the major portion, but the minor portion——

Mr. HEPBURN. If you will allow me just a minute, I will state the reasons why I made this inquiry.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Last night, in a newspaper, I read of the organization of a land syndicate for the purpose of reclaiming 3,500 square miles of land lying in the basin of the St. Francis River. The statement was to the effect that one-third of the necessary work had been done by the United States Government and another third had been completed by the States of Missouri and Arkansas; that the Government was making other contributions to this work, so that the company would soon have 2,000,000 acres of land fully reclaimed, and very largely at public expense. I wanted to know if these plans of the Commission looked to the reclamation of those lands.

Mr. BURTON. I do not know that I can state as to these particular lands. The plans of the Commission look to continuing the construction of levees, following the usual rule that they have followed, paying half the expense of construction, the other half to be paid by the localities having lands abutting on the improvements. Of this $2,000,000 it is possible that one-half will be expended for dredging, for the protection of harbors and making of revetments; the other half practically, year by year, for levees. Four or five hundred thousand dollars is perhaps the estimate of the annual cost of dredging.

The committee have made a change in the appropriation for the various harbors, New Orleans, Natchez, Helena, Memphis, New Madrid, Caruthersville, etc. The amount for these harbors is to be allotted from the $2,000,000 per annum for the river, but an amount not exceeding $155,000 per annum for all.

It was thought that such a course, taking these amounts for harbors from the general fund, would cause a close scrutiny to be made of the propriety of each of these improvements, which the committee could not make and which Congress could not make, and that it would lead to more judicious expenditure. These would probably require $150,000. The dredging would be, say, $400,000 more, and then for their divers dikes, revetments, etc., up to a million. The balance remaining for levees would probably be near to a million of dollars per annum.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him, under the plans of the Commission that are here referred to, how far, on an affluent of the Mississippi River, are they permitted or do they permit themselves to extend their levee works?

Mr. BURTON. That is, on a branch?

Mr. HEPBURN. On a branch.

Mr. BURTON. A very short distance, if any. I do not recall any at all made recently.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, with your permission, I want to ask another question.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Under the present policy of appropriation and recommendation of the committee, the larger portion of the appropriations is postponed. You leave them to be made from time to time by Congress and through the recommendation of another than your own committee. I want to ask the gentleman if in his judgment and the judgment of his committee, that is a wise procedure. In other words, ought not the committee that studies the subject of the rivers have the right to determine in what volume these appropriations from time to time shall go to a given improvement?

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman from Iowa is slightly in error in stating it is made on the recommendation of another committee. Technically, that is so.

Mr. HEPBURN. Are they not made in the sundry civil appropriation bill?

Mr. BURTON. They are made in the sundry civil appropriation bill, but they are made available to meet obligations under contracts made by the Secretary of War. So it is really not a matter left to the Committee on Appropriations at all, except as to the amount that will be earned on these contracts which impose an obligation on the Government.

Mr. REEVES. And those contracts made by authority of this committee.

Mr. BURTON. Yes. I want to say one word further about that. I regard these authorizations as very desirable, because it enables the work to go on, and that is what we want to do. It is a declaration by Congress that we intend to finish an important work and get through with it. It often secures the completion of the work for less than the estimates. With all these arguments the gentleman from Iowa is no doubt familiar.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is it not the theory of the Mississippi River Commission in building these embankments confining the water during the flood time that it makes it scoop out the bottom, and in that way aids navigation? Is not that the theory on which the Commission works?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; I think so.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is it not furthermore true that partially this benefit does accrue to the riparian owners?

Mr. BURTON. Very largely.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And is it not for that reason that the Government pays only half of the cost of this building of levees and requires the owners of the land to pay the other half? Is it not true that that is the only improvement in which the people along the banks pay for a portion of it?

Mr. BURTON. Now, while this is not the only item in which it is provided that the locality or individual shall provide a part, it is the only improvement on a large scale in which it is anticipated that part of the expense shall be paid by the abutting localities. There is no absolute provision in our bill compelling abutting owners to pay half, but we know it to be a custom for the Commission to require that an amount approximately equal to that expended by the Government for levees shall be provided by the locality.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I just simply wanted that fact brought out.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Is it not largely more?

Mr. BURTON. I think it has been estimated that 62 per cent has been paid by the localities and 38 by the Government.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio if the appropriation for New River was not omitted in view of the fact that the appropriations on the old project have been somewhat of a failure, and that therefore a new survey was required, for which an appropriation was included in the bill.

Mr. BURTON. It was thought not best to go on with the old project. There are no further appropriations, and we provide for a reexamination; and if on reexamination it appears worth while, it is for future Congresses to make the appropriation.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. And a new survey has been provided for?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In the stretch that exists between the city of Vancouver and Columbia River and the mouth of the Willamette River there is no appropriation made in the bill for that.

Mr. BURTON. The committee did not regard it as best. The fact about that is there has been a large amount expended, and there is no telling what the result of any particular improvement will be. Another thing: Until recently there was no railway at Vancouver. There has been a railroad opened, I think, on the north bank.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is a railway opened there. I do not know that any trains are now running, but there will be soon. The engineer estimates for $10,000 or $12,000 for the maintenance of the present work; and no appropriation was made toward that.

Mr. BURTON. In many instances in this bill there were appropriations made for maintenance where it was required. The trouble is whether we allow it to do so or not, or make the appropriation or not, nature will take its course there. It is a very strong river, and there is no telling where the channel will appear, and we have had a very large expenditure and a very long dike has been constructed, as the gentleman knows, and it has been rather unsatisfactory in its results.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Would it not be well to have some provision by which the Government might ascertain whether or not some benefit has accrued from the work that has been done?

Mr. BURTON. The reports of the engineers who have reported upon it are to the effect that it has not been of any assured or permanent benefit.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They do not undertake to give a report upon what the effect has been one way or the other.

Mr. BURTON. Now I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I notice in the appropriation which is made for the Cumberland River below Nashville this clause: "For the completion of the lock and dam at Harpeth Shoals and for maintenance, $180,000." My recollection of the correspondence that the gentleman from Ohio showed me was the engineer did not include the maintenance in the sum of $180,000. That was to complete lock at Harpeth.

Mr. BURTON. The amount here is $285,000 in the aggregate—$105,000 for one and $180,000 for the other; that is $5,000 in each in excess of the amount required for the work directed to be done. For lock and dam work the estimate for one is $100,000 and for the other $175,000. Five thousand dollars has been added to each item.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And that extra $5,000 for each item would go to cover maintenance?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. IRWIN. I would like to ask if the committee has included in their bill a provision providing for the estimate of cost and to report as to the advisability of extending the dam and heightening it at the head of the Falls of the Ohio as to afford a 6-foot stage of water for 50 miles above Louisville. I have looked over the bill and I do not see it. I may have overlooked it. I understood the committee favored that proposition.

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman will find in a provision for a survey on page 105, which I think amply covers the project desired by the gentleman. I should regard it as the more desirable form than the one he mentions, because it would give wider latitude to the engineer to recommend what improvement he thinks desirable, but that is a matter for his consideration.

Mr. IRWIN. It is not for the construction of a dam, but for the heightening of the dam. There is already a dam there.

Mr. BURTON. It is not complete. It does not extend clear across the river.

Mr. IRWIN. It does not extend clear across the river.

Mr. BURTON. Then a part of it is for construction. If the gentleman desires a change of phraseology, the committee, I think, would have no objection to it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if there are no further questions, I will ask again if there is anyone of those who desire to oppose the bill who would like to control the time. If not, I trust the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY] may be heard, if he desires.

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Chairman, I have the honor to represent, in part, in this body the State of North Carolina, and her people feel deeply grieved at the great injustice which has been done that State in the bill which has been reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. We had begun to think that the committee had overlooked the claims of the State to recognition in this respect until this morning, when I heard the statement of the honorable chairman of the committee, in which he took an illustration for his argument the port that I have the honor to represent on this floor. He used this language:

> I want to give a little illustration right in this connection of the appropriations for rivers and harbors and for fortifications at one place, namely, the appropriation for rivers and harbors for the Cape Fear River at and below Wilmington, and for fortifications at that place. It is evident that the appropriations for fortifications there are merely to protect the navigable channel from the ocean up to the town of Wilmington from hostile attacks. In six years the appropriations for the improvement of that channel from Wilmington down have been $345,000, or an average of $57,500 per annum.
> The appropriations for fortifications there have been $1,200,000 for Fort Caswell, and an average expense of $100,000 to $125,000 per annum, for the maintenance of the post, making up an aggregate expenditure of nearly $2,000,000, or very nearly six times as much for the improvement of the channel which these fortifications are intended to protect. I really think such a case as this should cause us to pause and weigh for a time the comparative advantage of the military establishment of the country and of this bill which more than any other looks to its commercial development.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if it had not been for those remarks made by the distinguished gentleman I should have thought that the omission of inserting in the bill the recommendation of the Chief Engineer as to the appropriations which are necessary for the port at Wilmington and the Upper Cape Fear were unintentional. But it looks to me now that there must have been a motive, although I do not directly accuse the distinguished chairman of having a motive to discriminate or single out this port. It looks to me as if it were not an act simply of casual omission, but a willful and deliberate omission.

It is unfortunate for the State that I represent that it has not a member on that committee. Our State has never appreciated the importance of retaining its members long enough to secure such an appointment. The port of Wilmington is the most important in the State of North Carolina. The State of North Carolina has more seaboard, has more navigable streams flowing to the sea than any State on the Atlantic coast with the exception, perhaps, of Florida which, of course, has a Gulf coast.

And yet that port only received out of a recommendation of $300,000 for necessary improvements and maintenance the sum of $150,000, and the upper Cape Fear which had a recommendation of $1,325,000 does not receive a dollar for the purpose recommended by the Chief of Engineers, and only $10,000 for the portion of the river between Wilmington and about 25 miles above it. So naturally it seems there has been a discrimination against it, and not only that, in the last river and harbor bill there was appropriated $1,000 for removing some obstructions from Brunswick River which were put there by the Confederate government to prevent the Federal cruisers from navigating the stream, and notwithstanding it went in the last bill and remained there in conference, it is omitted from the present bill.

Not only that. Innumerable surveys were ordered by the last bill, and even they have been eliminated; and in the last bill which passed the committee of conference and was reported to the Senate and there killed, there was an item of $150,000 for the Upper Cape Fear, and now not one dollar is contained in this bill for that great and necessary improvement. Am I not, then, correct in inferring that there has been either a willful or an unintentional discrimination against the State? Therefore, sirs, I must enter my protest in general terms here this day, and ask this House at the proper time when an amendment will be in order to give these appropriations which ought to have been included in this bill and which were included in the last bill.

Now, I do not wish to reflect upon the State of Alabama in the slightest degree and will not do so, but how is it that the city of Mobile gets an appropriation of $300,000 this year and the river leading thereto, including Mobile, nearly a million dollars, and yet Mobile within the last fifty or sixty years has received $3,700,000 in appropriations and the port that I represent only $3,200,000? The ports of Wilmington and Southport, which are practically one and the same, is no inconsiderable port in this Union. During the late war between the States the entire commerce of the Confederate government was carried on there for the last year of the war, and the armies of the Confederacy were clothed and fed by the supplies brought from Nassau and the West Indies. It was the only port in the South that the Federal cruisers could not blockade successfully. It was the mainstay of the Confederate government during that time.

I merely state this now to show its importance as a seaport and harbor. To-day it stands as the fourth or fifth cotton port in the United States. Its tonnage is immense. Its exports last year were more than $12,000,000, when the exports of Mobile were less than $11,000,000. Its tonnage for year ending June 30, 1900, was 699,000 tons, while Mobile's was 471,000. It has a better depth of water on its bar and its harbors than has Savannah, Charleston, Port Royal, Brunswick, or Mobile, as certified to in a letter written by Gen. John M. Wilson, Chief of Engineers, during the last session of this Congress, and yet that port has been severely slighted in this bill, and I can not see why, unless it be that the State of North Carolina has the misfortune of not having the honor of being represented on that committee.

Now, Mr. Chairman, at this time I only arose to briefly call the attention of this body to this injustice done the State which I represent, and I will ask this body at the proper time to consider and pass amendments which will bring about at least an equitable distribution of the fund of the river and harbor bill among the States according to the merits of the improvements. And right here, sir, I noticed in the press a few days ago that of the $60,000,000 appropriated in this bill, $47,000,000 go to the States represented by members of the committee—$47,000,000 out of $60,000,000—and yet the State that I have the honor to represent gets the paltry sum of $257,000 for the entire State, when even the port of Mobile gets $300,000, and it is an inferior port in point of importance to that which I represent upon this floor, and I must and do strongly protest against it to-day, and shall appeal to the sense of justice of the members of this body to rectify the wrong. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois rose.

Mr. BURTON. Do I understand that the gentleman desires to favor the bill or to criticise it?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I would state to the gentleman that Mr. LESTER, the minority member of the committee, was to yield me time. He has just stepped out of the room.

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman may be heard now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BURTON. How much time does the gentleman desire to occupy?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. About half an hour.

Mr. BURTON. There is one gentleman here, Mr. CANDLER, of Mississippi, who desires to be heard next. Will the gentleman postpone his remarks until after he is heard?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. One moment. There has been no arrangement for the control of the time. The Chair had expected to recognize the gentleman from Georgia, a member of the committee, who stated that he desired to yield thirty minutes of his time to the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman from Georgia is not present.

Mr. BURTON. I take it there can be no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] for thirty minutes.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I favor all of the provisions of this bill, and inasmuch as there does not seem to be strenuous, if any, opposition to its general provisions, I desire to use the time allowed me in discussing another subject upon which a resolution was prepared and introduced early in the session by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and is now pending before that committee, and in this connection, I regret that the distinguished chairman of that committee [Mr. HITT] is not now in his seat.

Throughout the discussion of Philippine matters in this House at this session, on both sides of the question, one point has been unmistakably evident and admitted on all sides, and that is that we are in the Philippines and are exercising control over them on the principle that might makes right, and that we are governing them not because their people want us to do so, but because we have the power to do so. That may be the reason, Mr. Chairman, why in this Congress and in the last Congress, the Committee on Foreign Affairs has never deigned to make a report on any of the various bills or joint resolutions referred to it protesting against the continuance of the Boer war and expressing sympathy with the Boers. The reason is that since the adoption of our present Philippine policy we are in the same position as Great Britain. Both countries are tarred with the same stick. Both are endeavoring to crush the independence out of smaller and less powerful peoples.

But, however it may be with the Government or with the Republican party, the people of the United States have a right to protest, and they will protest, and I hope the Democratic party, through its members here assembled, will protest against the great wrong done to humanity and the cause of human freedom and progress by Great Britain in its treatment of the South African republics, and against the unworthy manner in which this subject has been treated by the political party at present dominant in this country.

The joint resolution of protest introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] ought not to be smothered in committee. It ought to be brought out into the light of day, and the members ought to be made to go on record upon it. Never before in the history of the Republic has this country failed to express officially its sympathy with those who are struggling for independence, in whatsoever part of the world they might be. But now, deterred partly by this new spirit of anglomania and partly by the shameful consciousness that this Government is guilty in like manner, the majority party here dares not open its mouth on this Boer question one way or the other, unless it be to utter some cringing apology for the oppressive course of Great Britain in this miserable war.

The leaders of that party are only too ready to appoint a committee to go over from this country at the national expense, in knee breeches and powdered hair, to bow the knee of republicanism at the coronation of an English King, but they have not a word to say in behalf of the poor people of South Africa whom that same King is trying to shoot out of their homes, and whose territory and property he is trying to rob simply in order that some few English speculators and adventurers may get hold of the gold fields of the Boers and appropriate them to their own use and profit.

For this base, selfish purpose Great Britain is making a war as cruel and as unjust as history has ever recorded. That the invasion has not yet succeeded, after several years of warfare, is not due to any lack of energy on the part of the invaders. It has been due to the heroic and unconquerable defense of their country, their homes, and their liberty, by that little band of Boers, which has not been paralleled since Washington with his handful of undisciplined yeomanry fought and vanquished all the veteran armies which a previous King of England could send over here to coerce the American colonies. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The parallel, Mr. Chairman, is very exact. The number of Boer combatants in the field is not known, but it appears to have been thus far about the same as the number of men engaged in actual service in the American Revolution at any one time, say about twenty or thirty thousand men. Here is this little handful of men arrayed against the strongest war power in all Christendom; and what have they done? They have resisted successfully for three years and more the fierce onsets of the British armies, and have carried death and disaster by the wholesale into their ranks, and dismay, gloom, and consternation into the hearts of the British public at home.

Although the British war minister a year ago stated the number of Boer combatants as 20,000, the latest reports from General Kitchener, the British commander in South Africa, gives the number of Boer losses during the year as about 18,000 men, which, according to that calculation, would leave them about 2,000 remaining. But the cry is "Still they come." Where they come from may be a mystery, but in some way they manage to keep their ranks full and to mow down their enemy's ranks with the same precision as at first. From the very corpses of the Boer victims new men seem to spring up, all armed and ready for the fray. Well may England look aghast, as did Macbeth, when he saw the long procession of Banquo's descendants, and exclaim: "What, will the line stretch out to the crack of doom?" Yes, tyrannous England, it will! You can never conquer the Boers any more than you could the Americans.

Observe the method of the invaders. Against this small band of 2,000 starving, weary defenders, or 20,000, as the case may be, General Kitchener is massing his great army of 250,000 men, building massive cordons of fortifications, and spending English money like water, and all in vain. The Boers remain unconquered. In their despair and desperation the British commanders have resorted to methods which for cowardice and cruelty are unparalleled in the history of civilized warfare.

Defenseless Boer women and children and noncombatant old men are corralled together, like cattle, in British concentration camps and there submitted to a course of slow poisoning and starvation in the hope that, in the consciousness that those who are near and dear to them are suffering the pangs of starvation and death, the Boer fighters in the fields will lay down their arms and calmly surrender, be tried, perhaps sentenced to be shot or transported for a number of years. In other words, the British are now fighting the Boers with their own flesh and blood. The death rate in these camps is simply appalling. It is estimated that, according to the present rate of mortality in the concentrado camps of South Africa, it will take only two or three years to exterminate the whole noncombatant Boer population. In fact, it has been the boast of English officers that extermination is the motto of the British Government.

Prisoners taken by the English are treated with the greatest cruelty as a vent for English anger. Only a short time ago this Congress had its attention called to the case of Commandant Scheepers, the Dutch officer whom the English captured while he was lying sick in a hospital, and whom, in defiance of the laws of war and humanity, they executed while he was still sick and helpless. This is the glorious Christian civilization which it is said that it is the duty of the English to confer upon the benighted South African communities; and yet our Committee on Foreign Affairs and our Congress maintain the most painful silence in regard to these atrocities. Not only that, but ever since the outbreak of the war the Republican Administration has steadily given moral support, and in some instances actual physical support, to the British combatants and has denied all support or appearance of support to the Boers.

All resolutions or manifestations of sympathy with the South African patriots have been discountenanced and suppressed by the "powers that be." Only last week the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] called attention to a recent action of the Secretary of State, Mr. Hay, when requested to use his good offices to the end that a distinguished philanthropist and clergyman, Dr. Thomas, and his wife, be given a permit or pass to enter the concentrado camps in South Africa to distribute the relief fund raised in Chicago and elsewhere for the relief of the Boer women and children—mark you, not to purchase arms and ammunition for the Boer fighters, but to purchase the very necessaries of life, such as food, clothing, and medicine, in order to relieve the intense suffering and distress of these poor women and children.

Our pro-English Secretary of State, disregarding the common instincts of humanity contained in the request, refused to lend his good offices in that behalf, saying, as we are told, that the exercise of his good offices in that direction would be looked upon as meddlesome and might be considered a violation of neutrality. Mr. Chairman, if it be pleaded in support of this action of our Secretary of State, if it be pleaded in support of the silence of our Committee on Foreign Affairs, our Congress, and our Government that it is the duty of this country to maintain strict neutrality, the answer is that neutrality has not been maintained.

Neutrality has been violated. More than two years ago England sent over here a number of agents to secure, purchase, and forward to the seat of war a large consignment of horses, mules, and other munitions of war for the replenishment of her armies in the South African campaign. This matter was formally brought to the attention of the Fifty-sixth Congress. It was stated in due form that nearly 100,000 animals had been shipped in British transports from New Orleans, I believe, or were about to be shipped, together with various other supplies, to South Africa. On complaint of certain members the House referred the whole matter to the Executive Department, but nothing more was done about it. Congress ignored this most important breach of international law, and so it has turned out that to-day this country allows England to get supplies here to aid her in the war against the Boers.

On the other hand, this country refuses to recognize a state of belligerency between Great Britain and the South African Republics, and will not extend even a word of sympathy to the Boers. If this is not a violation of neutrality—if this is not a manifestation of gross partiality and partisanship—I would like to know what is. I desire here, Mr. Chairman, to have read as a part of my remarks some suggestions on the question of neutrality prepared by the Chicago branch of the American Transvaal League, and will ask the Clerk to read them.

The Clerk read as follows:

IS OUR GOVERNMENT VIOLATING THE NEUTRALITY LAWS AND THUS GIVING AID TO GREAT BRITAIN IN ITS UNRIGHTEOUS WAR AGAINST THE BOERS?

The treaty of Washington, concluded between Great Britain and the United States May 8, 1871, remains in full force. (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 17, p. 865.) On April 26, 1898, the day after war was declared between the United States and Spain, Queen Victoria issued a proclamation of neutrality, insisting in the following language upon the observance of the treaty:

"Whereas we are resolved to insure by every lawful means in our power the due observance by our subjects, toward both of the aforesaid powers, of the rules embodied in Article VI of the treaty of May 8, 1871, between us and the United States of America, which said rules are as follows:

"A neutral government is bound * * * Secondly, not to permit or suffer either belligerent to make use of its ports or waters as the base of naval operations against the other, or for the purpose of the renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms, or the recruitment of men.

"Thirdly, to exercise due diligence in its own ports and waters, and as to all persons within its jurisdiction to prevent any violation of the foregoing obligations and duties." (London Gazette Extraordinary, April 26, 1898. London Times, April 27, 1898.)

The principles of neutrality recognized and embodied in this treaty were enforced against the United States by various other countries. The Brazilian Government by its proclamation of May 5, 1898, declared:

"The exportation of material of war from the ports of Brazil to those of either of the belligerent powers, under the Brazilian flag or that of any other nation, is absolutely prohibited."

His Majesty the King of Denmark, by proclamation dated April 29, 1898, forbade Danish subjects, under penalty of punishment, to commit certain enumerated offenses against the laws of neutrality, among others (section 3):

"On or from Danish territory to assist any of the belligerent powers in the enterprises of war, such as supplying their ships with articles that must be considered as contraband of war."

Her Majesty the Queen Regent of the Netherlands issued a similar proclamation April 26, 1898, warning Dutch subjects under penalty not—

"To export arms, ammunition, or other war materials to the parties at war. Herein is to include the exportation of everything that is adaptable for immediate use in war." (Paragraph B, article 2.)

The United States is conceded to be a neutral nation in the war between Great Britain and the South African Republics. Article VI of the treaty of Washington, therefore, as applied to the present case, would read as follows:

"The United States is bound not to permit or suffer Great Britain to make use of its ports or waters as the base of naval operations against the South African Republics, or for the purpose of the renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms."

Over 150,000 horses and mules have been bought at New Orleans and shipped to Cape Colony to be used by Great Britain in her military operations in South Africa. If the augmentation of her military supplies from that port were stopped, the South African war would come to a speedy end. Few persons will venture to deny that horses and mules designed for use in military operations are within the meaning of the term "military supplies" as used in the treaty of Washington. It is laid down by all writers on international law that they are contraband of war and liable to confiscation as such. If they are contraband, it can only be because they are military supplies.

In article 24 of the treaty of 1778 between the United States and France it is stated that "horses, with their furniture, are contraband of war." (Wharton's International Law Digest, vol. 2, sec. 372.)

Also in the treaty of December 1, 1774, between Holland and Great Britain it is declared that "horses and other warlike instruments are contraband of war."

Horses are generally considered as contraband of war, and are so mentioned in many treaties between different states. (See Hill's International Law, p. 661 et seq.)

THE NEW ORLEANS SUIT.

That the neutrality laws are being constantly violated by the United States in permitting horses and mules to be shipped from its ports is so clear as to be recognized by everyone, except for a misconception which prevails about the result of a proceeding in equity which was instituted early in 1901, in the Federal court at New Orleans, for the purpose of enjoining the shipment of horses and mules from that port to Cape Colony. It is a well-recognized principle of equity jurisprudence that an injunction will be granted only to protect property rights.

The bill was accordingly filed by private individuals who alleged that they had property in the Transvaal and Orange Free State which was being destroyed by the armies of Great Britain, and that these armies were enabled to continue their work of destruction only by the supplies of horses and mules shipped from the port at New Orleans. The application for an injunction was denied on the ground that the enforcement of treaty obligations is a function of the executive branch of the Government, with which courts of equity have nothing to do. The district judge in delivering his decision expressed his opinion that there was nothing in the principles of international law or in the terms of the treaty of Washington to prevent citizens of neutral nations from selling supplies of war to a belligerent. The court discussed the right of private citizens to sell supplies to foreign nations even in time of war, but did not enter upon the question whether the United States was not permitting Great Britain to make use of its ports or waters for the purpose of augmentation of military supplies. The entire discussion of questions of international law was beside the point, as the court does not assume to decide the case on any such grounds. On the contrary, the court says:

"If the complainant could be heard to assert here rights personal to themselves in the treaty just mentioned, and if the mules and horses involved in this case are munitions of war, all of which is disputed by the defendants, it would become necessary to determine" whether the treaty was meant to prevent private citizens from selling supplies to belligerents. The court then discusses that question and proceeds: "But the nature of this cause is such that none of the considerations hereinabove set out need be decided," because "the case is a political one of which a court of equity can take no cognizance, and which in the very nature of governmental things must belong to the executive branch of the Government." (Pearson v. Parson, 108 Federal Reporter, 461.)

It will thus be seen that the question whether an unlawful use is being made of the ports and waters of the United States was not passed upon by the court, but the whole matter of the enforcement of the treaty was relegated to the executive branch of the Government. Courts do not and can not enforce political obligations, and it devolves upon the President to enforce the treaty of 1871 and close the ports of the United States against any use thereof by a belligerent power to augment its military supplies. Treaties, according to the Constitution, are the supreme law of the land. That supreme law commands the Executive to prohibit the augmenting of British military supplies from our ports. Precedents justify him; and the cries of 100,000 women and children imprisoned in the deadly camps of South Africa, as well as the voice of justice and humanity the world over, implore him to do his duty.

Is our Government observing the duty of neutrality imposed by the treaty of Washington when it permits the port at New Orleans to be used for the purpose of "augmenting" these supplies?

Is a treaty which imposes upon Great Britain the duty to remain neutral when the United States is at war not equally binding upon the United States when Great Britain is at war?

Is there any good reason why the Government of the United States should not enforce the treaty of Washington against Great Britain as Great Britain enforced it against the United States?

Is the fact that stock raisers make money out of this business to be accepted as an adequate excuse for the continuance of this traffic?

Shall the United States stand on record much longer as the friend and ally of Great Britain in its war against the South African Republics?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, England has been our consistent enemy from the days when the colonies uttered the first word of resistance to her oppressions. Our foe in 1776, in 1812, in 1861, yea, and in 1898 when, as recent developments have shown, the British minister here sought to organize the governments of Europe to antagonize the United States in her purpose to drive the Spaniards out of the island of Cuba. But since the day when Dewey sailed into Manila Bay and destroyed the Spanish fleet, thereby removing beyond all peradventure of doubt any misgiving she might have had concerning the outcome of the war, England has been only a fair-weather friend.

Then, Mr. Chairman, why should this country favor England and allow her to use our ports as a base of supplies to aid her in her shameless assault upon the rights and liberties of the Boer people? The inconsistency of our course will be manifest to all men when it is remembered how this country caused to be arrested and imprisoned a man who sought to forward supplies to Cuba during the Cuban war because we considered it a violation of neutrality; and how strictly the treaty between Great Britain and the United States was applied and enforced both by England and this country with respect to neutrality stipulations during the Spanish war. But at that time Spain, in spite of her barbarities and cruelties, appears to have had some rights as a nation, but now the poor Boers, whose only crime is a love of liberty and a determination to defend their homes, their property, and their families, are ignored by this great Republic as having no rights which a nation of free men is bound to respect.

This, Mr. Chairman, I repeat is the position assumed heretofore by our Congress and our Government. It is not the position, I am sure, taken by the great American public. Now, as always hitherto, the mute appeals of struggling liberty in any quarter of the globe strikes a responsive cord in the hearts and minds of the American people. The American people are devoted to the principles of liberty and independence. They believe in self-government, and they sympathize sincerely with all nations and people endeavoring to secure liberty and self-government.

They sympathize with the Boers, and they condemn the barbarous cruelties, the inhuman injustices, which have been perpetrated by the British commanders and armies in this campaign for the robbery and spoliation of these two little republics. They do not approve of the idea of the robbery in the abstract, nor do they approve of the manner in which it is conducted—by the burning and devastating of the homesteads of the Boers, by killing the population in cold blood, and by making war on defenseless women and children. They rejoice in the tidings that have been coming from month to month of the defeat of the British and of the utter failure of their efforts to crush the little band of patriots opposed to the royal armies. They read that the war has already cost

Great Britain nearly a billion of dollars, and they are glad of it. They are sorry for the common soldiers who have perished, and for their wives and children who have been made widows and orphans.

But as for the British Government, the verdict of America is, it serves it right. We on this side of the Atlantic know full well that the common people of England, the people who make England great and prosperous, are at heart opposed to this war and heartily wish it had never been instituted. But so far as that is concerned, Mr. Chairman, it is England's affair and not ours. Our duty in the premises, in the first place, is to preserve perfect fairness and neutrality in our dealings with the two combatants, even if we do nothing more.

But, also, it is our moral duty toexpress our disapprobation of the continuance of the war on general principles and to use our best endeavors as a friendly nation to have it stopped. This being the opinion of the American people, it is therefore the duty of Congress to pass a resolution desiring the discontinuance of the war, and this would be done practically by acclamation if the Foreign Affairs Committee could be induced to report. As I have already said, the inaction of the committee and of Congress in the premises is shameful and a gross perversion of our usual practices in such cases. It is not too late yet, Mr. Chairman, to remedy this national wrong, although it may be very difficult to explain to the world how it has happened that we have acted so tardily in a matter in relation to which this country would naturally be looked upon as the leader among the nations of the earth.

I sincerely trust, Mr. Chairman, that this Congress will shortly set itself and the country right before the world in regard to this inhuman and indefensible Boer war. If this is not done, if we allow this last opportunity to pass without taking advantage of it, the war will soon be over by the victory of the Boers and by the relinquishment of its impossible task by Great Britain, and we will have lost our only chance to redeem ourselves as a nation in the judgment of all civilized nations and to prevent ourselves from being held up forevermore as a subject of scorn and contempt throughout the world. [Applause.] This country can not afford to give up its proud prerogative as the special champion and guardian of the cause of human freedom and self-government on the earth. Let us recognize betimes the danger we are in of losing it, and let us preserve it by doing simple justice to the Boers, to Great Britain, and to ourselves. [Prolonged applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 3278. An act to correct the military record of C. R. Dickson.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Chairman, there is not much left to talk about in regard to this bill, and as I have no purpose to indulge in any exhortation upon the subject of the Boer war or any other war, my remarks will necessarily be short. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY] took exception to the treatment that the committee had given his State, and particularly Cape Fear River and Wilmington. I simply want to say in answer to him that up to June 30, 1900, the total amount that had been expended for Cape Fear River at and below Wilmington was $3,291,691.91, and that there was expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, $71,796.07 on this project, and that there was on hand an unexpended balance to the credit of this project on July 1, 1901, the sum of $29,855.93. The amount required to complete the proposed project at this point is $885,000.

Mr. BELLAMY. Will the gentleman permit a question at this point?

Mr. REEVES. Certainly.

Mr. BELLAMY. You speak of an unexpended balance of $29,000?

Mr. REEVES. Yes.

Mr. BELLAMY. Do you not know as a fact that every one of the barges and dredges have been tied up because there was not a dollar to run them?

Mr. REEVES. No; I do not know that.

Mr. BELLAMY. That fund has all been exhausted.

Mr. REEVES. No; I do not know that. On the contrary, I know that the report which I have here, and to which you have access, shows the figures exactly as I have given them.

Mr. BELLAMY. That was a year ago.

Mr. REEVES. No; that was not a year ago. That was the 1st day of July last. The local engineer in the prosecution of this work made his recommendation to the War Department, in which he states that he can expend, including maintenance during the next two years, $378,000. The Chief of Engineers, in reviewing this recommendation of the local engineer, advises an appropriation of $200,000, and this committee in this bill provides an appropriation of $150,000. The tonnage for the year 1900 at and below Wilmington was 669,356, and above Wilmington the tonnage is 129,622. These amounts are very considerable and mark this as a very worthy project; but the gentleman is seriously in error when he states that it has not been treated as fairly as other projects in the country, and to use his own language, if I understood him, when he says that there is a manifest purpose to do an injustice to this project and to his State.

The proof of my statement is found in one simple statement of fact. The amount of appropriations required to complete projects which have received the approval of the Chief of Engineers is something over $300,000,000. The amount carried in this bill, in round numbers, by appropriation and authorization is $60,000,000 and a little over. Less than one-fifth of that which is required in the country at large is provided for in this bill, and in this particular instance about which the gentleman complains we gave him $150,000, whereas the Chief recommends $200,000; in other words, we gave him three-fourths of that which the Chief recommends as against only 20 per cent given the country over. So I think that upon reflection the gentleman from North Carolina will be able to say to his friends down at home that they have been treated first rate.

Mr. BELLAMY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. REEVES. Certainly.

Mr. BELLAMY. Do you not know as a fact that the engineer in charge of the river and harbor improvements at Wilmington recommended $1,325,000 for the Upper Cape Fear and that the committee did not give anything?

Mr. REEVES. No; I do not know that to be exactly correct. This is true: The local engineer and the chief engineer both say of the river above Wilmington that until such time as Congress shall see fit to undertake an improvement of canalizing the river by a system of locks and dams, nothing further is needed except slight sums for its maintenance. That is the recommendation and statement of the engineer in charge down there.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to travel over the same ground that the chairman of our committee has traveled over, because his statement has been absolutely complete, but I do want to talk for a few moments about a few other things—some of the difficulties, if you please, that confront us in the preparation of this bill.

As I have just said, to make a complete bill and provide for all of the projects that have received the indorsement of the Chief of Engineers would require a total of between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000, an amount too great to be contemplated in any one bill. The committee felt that if we appropriated, and authorized by way of future appropriation, $60,000,000, we were going to the full limit of what we ought to do. So, as you see, less than one-fifth of the amount required to do all the work of this kind in the country was possible at this time. Our work, therefore, became largely one of selection.

It is not fair to the whole country to apportion this line of appropriation in proportion to the volume of commerce upon a stream entirely. Where the population is greatest and where the commerce is greatest there, no doubt, should be the greatest appropriations; but it is not quite fair to make that the only rule. There is a large portion of the country in which the population is sparse, relatively speaking, but which is capable of immense development, and in which they are urging and insisting most earnestly that they shall have recognition in this character of improvements. We of the committee, therefore, have felt and do feel that we can not make an appropriation bill of this kind and base it solely upon the value of the commerce existing in the different parts of the country, but that it must be modified by the capabilities of the region for immediate and great development. Having that in mind, and desiring as closely as we could to protect the main arteries of trade, we framed this bill after the fashion in which it is presented to you here.

The bill carries in cash appropriations $24,014,107, and it authorizes future appropriations amounting to $36,674,106.

An inquiry was made some time since by a gentleman of the chairman of the committee [Mr. BURTON] as to whether or not these authorizations were not made upon the recommendation of some other committee. In addition to what the chairman of the committee said in answer to that inquiry, I beg to say that these appropriations as made are made upon the recommendation of the Secretary of War by virtue of the authorizations made by this Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and the part that the Secretary of War takes in it is practically the clerical part of determining how much of it can be profitably expended in a given year.

Some of the rivers, and some of the harbors as well, have presented problems most serious to us as a committee, and ought to be, and no doubt are, serious problems for the consideration of the House. Take, for example, the Monongahela River in Pennsylvania. The commerce on that river is something over 6,000,000 tons annually. Now, I take it that every gentleman interested in the development of the country at all will admit that wherever you find a river or a harbor having 6,000,000 tons of freight annually it simply must be taken care of, practically without regard to what it costs. There is no escape from that. The embarrassment in the Monongahela River, however, grows out of what has heretofore taken place.

Many years ago, I think in 1848 or approximately at that time, the State of Pennsylvania chartered a private corporation for the building of a series of locks and dams on this river, and that corporation charged a toll for passing through them. Three or four years ago Congress was induced to make the navigation of this river free by the purchase of these locks and dams, and we did so at a cost, if I remember right, of $3,700,000. It now develops that these locks and dams are practically worthless, that they are worn out, and we are called upon to make new appropriations there to rebuild them or others near the sites of the present ones. Now, if we had consulted the feelings of the committee, in view of this condition of affairs, there probably would have been no appropriation at all recommended; but when we came to consult the necessity for appropriation, we felt that we must commence the rebuilding of these dams and the protecting of this immense traffic.

The Ohio River presents one of the most difficult problems in this whole country as a river and harbor improvement. I would, if I could, call the attention of every member of this House to the actual condition of affairs on the Ohio River. A system of locks and movable dams has been devised that when completed will cost between $30,000,000 and $35,000,000. There are 37 of these movable dams, and while it can not be said that Congress has adopted that whole scheme and entered upon the construction of all these locks and dams, yet it must be said, and said truly, that we are prosecuting that work with a good deal of vigor.

The commerce of the Ohio River amounts annually to thirteen and a half millions of tons, and it is desired to have these locks and dams, to the end that there may be proper and adequate means and facilities for handling this great volume of trade. Now, if there is any gentleman in this House that thinks he knows any scheme by which that large expenditure, or the major part of it, can be avoided, he is welcome to my place on the River and Harbor Committee in the next Congress to present his scheme. I know of no way that it can be avoided. That is not all the embarrassments in the Ohio River.

In 1852 Congress passed a special act authorizing a railroad bridge to be built across the Ohio River. So anxious in that early day was the Congress and the people at large for railroad building and that means of transportation that Congress provided in this bill that any crew of any steamboat navigating the Ohio River should so adjust the boat and its pipes, smokestacks, and equipments that they would not interfere with this bridge, under penalties. In other words, the interests of the railroads were regarded as infinitely superior to those of river traffic. It is very interesting to us now to see the evolution of thought on the subject from then until 1869, seventeen years, by which time Congress changed the entire tenor of its legislation, and provided, in passing a special bill for a bridge across that river, that it must be so constructed as not to interfere with the traffic of the river.

Following, some later, it put a provision into all special bills authorizing Congress to alter, amend, or repeal the privileges granted to these railroad and bridge companies for the construction of bridges. We are confronted to-day with a proposition that there are numerous bridges on this river that are an impediment to the proper navigation of the river. They are hindrances by the manner in which they are constructed, and the proposition has been advanced that the Government shall at once make an appropriation to pay for the remodeling of these bridges at I do not know how many million dollars of expense.

We have in this bill that is now presented a provision requiring the Secretary of War to give us a list of all the bridges over the Ohio River, together with an estimate of the cost of reconstructing each and every of these bridges so as to destroy their feature of impediment to the river traffic; and we have also authorized him to call upon the Attorney-General for an opinion upon each and every of these bridges as to the liability of the Government for the expense to be borne in changing these bridges and as to what ones of them the Government is liable, if at all, for any of them.

I merely cite these facts to the end that you may be aware, if you have not had your attention called to it otherwise, of the fact that in the near future you will be called upon to pass on that question.

Mr. MANN. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REEVES. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. In the same line of the suggestion of my friend as to the bridges over the Ohio River as constructed so far, can the gentleman tell us is it settled that the Government has the authority to require the removal of a bridge over a navigable stream if the bridge has been constructed without authority primarily of Congress or of the engineers? Can Congress require its removal at the expense of the owners and have it reconstructed? And if it has been constructed by consent of Congress or of the War Department, can the Government require it to be removed except at the Government expense?

Mr. REEVES. An answer to the inquiry of my colleague embraces several conditions. First, a bridge may be lawfully over a stream without the authority of Congress. The authority may have been given by a State to construct a bridge over a stream at a time prior to any time that the General Government took jurisdiction of the river. There are numerous cases of that kind. The Supreme Court of the United States uniformly holds that in that kind of a case the bridge is as lawfully there as if the authority had been given by the Congress.

When a bridge is lawfully in its place, either by act of a State or by an act of Congress, if the Congress in giving its assent does not reserve the right to alter or amend or repeal the provision authorizing its construction, but without limitation gave the company the right to build it, my opinion of the law is that the Government can not alter it or change it without paying the expense involved in doing so, and I think that view is sustained by the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of the Navigation Company v. The United States, reported in 148 United States Reports.

Mr. MINOR. Will the gentleman permit me an interruption?
Mr. REEVES. Certainly.
Mr. MINOR. I want to state a case in my own State. A bridge was constructed some years ago by authority of the county board of supervisors of the city, the State never having taken any action on it, and the draw is 78 feet in the clear. Now, under the new plans and specifications it is proposed to enlarge the Sturgeon Bay Canal, and the engineers recommend that there shall not be less than 100 feet in the clear. Now, the question arises what authority has the War Department over that matter, and can they compel the widening of that draw without expense to the Government?
Mr. REEVES. If under the laws of Wisconsin this bridge company that constructed this bridge at the place suggested had the right to do it then, that bridge is lawfully there, and if lawfully there by virtue of any authority, in my opinion Congress can not change it and widen its draw without the Government paying the expense for so doing.
Mr. MINOR. I wish to say further that the plans and specifications of the bridge were submitted to the War Department and approved.
Mr. REEVES. I do no think that that would have anything to do with it.
Mr. MANN. May I interrupt the gentleman?
Mr. REEVES. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. I do not desire to break into the gentleman's argument, but I have a specific case in mind that I would really like to have his opinion upon. The Calumet River is in the States of Illinois and Indiana. As we understand, the statute provides that the War Department may issue a permit for the construction of a bridge wholly within the limits of a State. There were originally three bridges over the Calumet River—the Baltimore and Ohio, the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, and the Pennsylvania Railroad bridges—side by side. A few years ago, when the bridges were nearly worn-out, the War Department, I think under an erroneous assumption, gave authority to reconstruct these bridges so that they are still there, and constructed in such a manner that it is almost impossible to make use of the river at that point. Would not the Government, in the opinion of the gentleman, have authority to require the removal of that obstruction without expense to the Government, assuming that no competent authority gave a legal right to reconstruct the bridges, although originally the bridges were undoubtedly put there by competent authority?
Mr. REEVES. Answering specifically the inquiry of the gentleman, I should say yes. The Government can order any bridge removed or altered in its construction or amended in any way, I have no doubt. That they will have to pay for it if in the granting of the authority it has not reserved the right to do this I think is equally true.
Perhaps, however, I should await the opinion of the Attorney-General before becoming too explicit on these given cases. But I have made the suggestion that members who have not had occasion to think of it may know what is confronting us.
Mr. HEPBURN. Before the gentleman leaves the subject of bridges, would it incommode him if I asked him a question?
Mr. REEVES. Oh, no.
Mr. HEPBURN. I find on page 98 of the bill this authority:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to extend the time of completion of any bridge, the construction of which has been or may hereafter be authorized under any law of Congress, etc.

I want to ask if there were any cogent reasons presented to the committee for usurping in this way the authority of another committee, and what was the reason that they took upon themselves jurisdiction over the matter of bridges? I suppose there must have been some cogent reason for it, and I would be glad to be enlightened on the subject. I am not criticising the committee; I simply want to know why.
Mr. REEVES. I do not seek any controversy with the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce as to the jurisdiction of the respective committees. In so far, however, as any of these bridges that are in process of construction anywhere interfere with the reasonable and proper navigation of the stream which they cross. I do not think there is any question but that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has the jurisdiction to insist upon a modification of the plans.
Now, there are a few bridges—I think over the Ohio River, but of that I am not sure—in process of construction, bridges where modifications have been required by the Secretary of War in the interest of the river navigation. This is an effort not to cripple the bridge companies on the one hand, but where alterations have been required in the interest of navigation, to give power to the Secretary of War to extend the time for the construction.
Mr. HEPBURN. I presume the gentleman knows that it is not unfrequent that matters of that character extending the time for the construction—there being almost invariably a time of limitation introduced into this House, and has been for twenty years—and it is always sent to another committee than the one of which the gentleman is a member.
Mr. REEVES. That is true.
Mr. HEPBURN. And that the committee has had a recognized jurisdiction over that subject?
Mr. REEVES. I think that is absolutely true.
Mr. HEPBURN. Now, the gentleman may not know that it very often occurs that committees are deceived as to the purpose of corporations and individuals seeking this franchise; that they get them for the purpose of holding other people up, of speculating in them, and that perhaps the question ought not to be referred to one gentleman or one man.
Mr. REEVES. That may be a reason for an objection to this provision of the bill. I know of no case such as the gentleman speaks of, where some company has procured the right to build a bridge for the purpose of keeping some one else from building it.
Mr. HEPBURN. I can say, as Falstaff said to another, discussing the question of paternity, "That thou art my son. I have in part thy mother's word and in part my own belief." [Laughter.]
Mr. REEVES. The views of the gentleman may be well founded, but I regard it as a proper criticism and a proper suggestion that if the Secretary of War has a right to extend the time for the completion of a bridge of this kind, the provision should be most carefully guarded. But in so far as this committee is concerned this provision only pertains, or was designed to pertain, to bridges in process of construction where alterations are required during the time of the construction, and to give a reasonable opportunity for the extension of time to complete the work.
Mr. BISHOP. And in the interest of navigation?
Mr. REEVES. Yes; in the interest of navigation.
Mr. HEPBURN. If that was the only purpose, the committee were unfortunate in the use of language.
Mr. REEVES. That is a mere matter of opinion.
Mr. HEPBURN. Well, from the gentleman's position I have no doubt he will join me at the proper time in raising and maintaining a point of order that should be made against this proposition.
Mr. REEVES. My friend should not be too sure that in this little colloquy in this pleasant way I have come over to his side of the question and intend to join him in any attack, directly or indirectly, upon any of the provisions of this bill.
Mr. HEPBURN. No member of the committee ever did. [Laughter.]
Mr. REEVES. And I do not believe that rule will be violated now. I was about to suggest further, Mr. Chairman, in speaking of some of these projects that confront the River and Harbor Committee and in which we feel we have practically no discretion except to recommend money enough to do the work required; there is the Mississippi River, for instance, carrying the largest single appropriation of any of the projects in the country, with her 3,000,000 tons of freight at the mouth of the river. I do not know of anything we can do but to go ahead and complete the project that has been proposed.
There is the Columbia River—with nearly 2,000,000 tons of freight—in that part of the country that has not received the greatest consideration along this line, and I know of nothing that we can do but to complete it, and in that connection, while the project at the mouth of the river will cost three or four millions of dollars, let me say there is one up the river, at The Dalles, where the present project for getting around that contemplates $4,000,000, and I want to say right here that I do not know of any project in the country that, in my judgment, is entitled to earnest consideration and fair dealing more than the building of a canal around The Dalles in the Columbia River.
We did not do it in this bill. We did not provide for it, and the reason we do not is simply because we can not do everything in this bill, and we are already doing much for that river in this bill—nearly a million of dollars to be expended at the mouth of the river—and some critic of this kind of legislation may rise up after a while and point to the mouth of the Columbia River as one of the places where we have most foolishly expended money. I for one have grave doubts as to whether or not the project at the mouth of this river at an expense, in round numbers, of $4,000,000 will not be a total failure when it is finished. The reason for it is simply this: That in building these extended jetties out into the ocean to deep water silt, sand, and material that is carried out into the ocean is deposited, and it may be that we are simply moving the bar farther out into the ocean.
At the mouth of the Mississippi River the cross currents are such as to catch up this sand and carry it away, and we may fairly hope that the improvement may be lasting. I personally interrogated the engineer in charge of the Columbia River within the last year upon the question of the permanency of the improvements at the mouth of the Columbia River, and the most that I could get him to say was that he hoped the improvement would be lasting and permanent. The truth is that there are no sufficient cross currents to make it certain that this sand that is carried down there will be carried away, as will be the case at the mouth of the Mississippi River.

Boston Harbor—and I have a friend here who will talk to you about that, I presume, directly—is to cost us in round numbers $8,000.000, to make a proper channel out to deep water. Well, she has 20,000,000 tons of freight annually in that harbor. If there is any gentleman in this House who can say in good faith that he thinks we ought not to spend the money and make that channel, no matter whether it is eight millions or ten millions or twelve, or six, or five, if we are not to have a channel to get that 20,000,000 tons out and away, then that gentleman may have my position on this committee, and present some other scheme that will save this money to the Government. I know of no way except to appropriate the money and do the work.

Galveston Harbor has nearly 2,000,000 tons of freight and occupies the same position. The Delaware River leading up to Philadelphia has 24,000,000 tons of freight annually, and I know of nothing we can do but to give them deep water to the sea, although it will cost several millions. Of this 24,000,000 tons of freight on the Delaware, nearly 5,000,000 tons is foreign trade. Cleveland Harbor has her 7,500,000 tons of freight annually. The Chicago harbors, the Chicago River and the Calumet River, have in round numbers 14,000,000 tons of freight. I do not know how much New York Harbor has. It is so great that at most it could only be stated in figures, and to the mind of the average man it would mean nothing. The Hudson River has 15,000,000 tons of freight. I know of nothing that we can do but to recommend the appropriation of the money and go on and complete these improvements, whatever they cost.

There is one other class of cases that I want to call attention to, and that is the Black Warrior and Tombigbee rivers in Alabama. A gentleman speaking a few moments ago made comparison between what we had done in this river and what was done in North Carolina. Now, I want to tell you what actuated the committee in making the appropriations for this continuous stream of the Black Warrior and Tombigbee.

There are in Alabama immense coal fields. The supply is simply inexhaustible. A condition exists in the world on the coal question that commanded our attention. Briefly, it is this: In England to-day there are only about 3,000 square miles of coal, and in Germany about 5,000 square miles. England has been exporting 40,000,000 tons of coal annually, and Germany has been exporting a large amount. Both these countries to-day are trying to preserve their coal for their own future use.

Men interested in this line of industry have calculated that we to-day in this country are on the eve of exporting coal in a sufficient quantity to bring into the coffers of the people of the United States in round numbers $150,000,000 per year. Now, this coal field in Alabama, with this stretch of river reaching down to Mobile Bay and from there down into the ocean, affords about the best opportunity for getting coal sent out of the country of any of the places in the United States. And, by the way, we have here in the United States, in comparison with the volume of coal in England and Germany, 200,000 square miles of coal. So our supply is inexhaustible in any fair sense of that term, and I for one, as a member of the committee, only agreed with other members in holding that we were in favor of spending a million or two dollars on the Tombigbee and Black Warrior rivers, to open a channel from these coal fields to deep water, as the readiest and best means of exporting coal, and taking advantage of the situation in that line of industry, of any place in the country.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question there?

Mr. REEVES. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does the gentleman regard it as a public advantage to export coal to our manufacturing rivals?

Mr. REEVES. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not true that every ton of coal that is sent by us to England or Germany simply increases their power to rival us in manufactures?

Mr. REEVES. I do not think so. I do not think that conclusion is by any means correct. England or any other country 3,000 or 5,000 miles away from us can not compete with the United States if she has to haul her coal from here to do it. But the coal industry of this country has in it capabilities of bringing into this country, in round numbers, I think, $150,000,000 a year from outside, and any line of business that has that possibility in it is, in my judgment, worth fostering by reasonable appropriations for facilities to do it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think the time awarded to me has about expired. I have only desired to suggest a few general facts, some of which, at least, tend to show the difficulties that have confronted us in the preparation of a river and harbor bill. [Applause.]

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. REEVES. Yes.

Mr. TALBERT. Speaking of the immense amount of coal that will be exported from the United States, is it not a fact that English vessels coming to the ports of the United States—Savannah and other ports—bring an immense amount of coal as ballast?

Mr. REEVES. I do not know that to be true.

Mr. TALBERT. Do you know it not to be true?

Mr. REEVES. I do not think it is true. That is as near the point as I can go.

Mr. TALBERT. I only wanted to ask the question for information, if it was not a fact that English vessels do bring coal as ballast to the ports of the United States.

Mr. REEVES. I know of no such carrying properties as that. I only want to add, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that I for one do not claim this bill to be absolutely perfect. I do not believe it to be possible to make an absolutely correct river and harbor bill any more than you can make an absolutely correct tariff bill. It is an approximation at best. It is coming as close to the mark as you can. We have considered as best we could the interest of every river and harbor in this country from the standpoint of its commercial help to the whole country, and we have appropriated among these different rivers in cash appropriation and authorization a little over $60,000,000 in that way which has seemed fairest and best to us. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I shall at the proper time introduce the following amendment:

Amend by inserting in the bill, on page 55, between lines 16 and 17, the following:

"Improving the Tombigbee River from Demopolis, Ala., to Columbus, Miss.: Continuing improvement with a view to securing a navigable depth of 6 feet at low water in said river from Demopolis, Ala., to Columbus, Miss., $100,000, and the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the necessary lock sites in said river between Demopolis, Ala., and Columbus, Miss."

I offer this amendment in all seriousness and sincerity to carry out a policy already indicated in law heretofore enacted by this body. In the river and harbor bill which passed Congress in the first session of the Fifty-first Congress, and which was approved September 19, 1890, and which is still the law, being unrepealed, Congress enacted this provision: "Improving Tombigbee River from Demopolis, Ala., to Columbus, Miss., extending improvement to secure 6 feet draft at low water," thereby adopting a channel depth of 6 feet in this river from Demopolis to Columbus. This was pursuant to the recommendation of the United States engineer. No appropriation, however, has been made for carrying out this important provision thus adopted by the Government, and in order to carry it out I offer this amendment.

This is no fad, and if accomplished will be no ornamental improvement, but will be one of practical results. It is a matter that interests my whole State and commands the interest and attention of our best citizens and highest officers, and is also of vital interest to our neighboring States. In order to demonstrate this I call your attention to the proceedings of a river improvement convention, held in the beautiful little city of Columbus, Miss., on the 30th day of July, 1901, and I especially ask you to note those present at that convention, which was presided over by Mississippi's distinguished and able governor, the Hon. A. H. Longino.

You will find these proceedings in the memorial I sent to the members of this House in the hope of interesting you in the improvement of this important river, and I now call your special attention to the same, which I read:

PROCEEDINGS OF THE TOMBIGBEE RIVER IMPROVEMENT CONVENTION, HELD IN COLUMBUS, MISS., JULY 30, 1901.

The Tombigbee River Improvement Convention assembled in Columbus yesterday at noon at the opera house. The auditorium of that building was filled with delegates from all the counties interested in this important project. Delegations were present from Monroe, Lowndes, Clay, and Noxubee counties in Mississippi, and Pickens, Sumter, Greene, Marengo, Washington, Mobile, Choctaw, and Clarke counties in Alabama. In addition there were a number of the leading and distinguished men from both States. On the platform were Governor Longino, Senator A. J. McLAURIN, Congressman PATRICK HENRY, from the Vicksburg district; Congressman CANDLER, from this district; Congressman J. H. BANKHEAD, from Alabama; Gen. S. D. Lee, Lieutenant-Governor Harrison, Hon. E. S. Craighead, the editor of the Mobile Register; Hon. E. O. Sykes, of Monroe; Hon. T. R. Maxwell, De Soto; Col. Thos. J. O'Neill, Hon. J. T. Senter, Hon. M. A. Franklin, Maj. John P. Mayo, Hon. E. R. Sherman, Capt. C. G. McGee, Mr. W. M. Pentecost, Prof. Joe Cook, and others.

The convention was called to order by Hon. E. R. Sherman, who introduced Col. Thomas J. O'Neill, who had been selected to formally welcome the delegates to Columbus. Colonel O'Neill read his address, and in it he took occasion to not only emphasize the welcome which this city had for every man who came here to lend his support and influence toward the improvement of the Tombigbee River, but he reviewed the wonderful progress and development which Columbus had made in the past few years, and pointed with pride to the fact that education and morality have kept step with our material progress. He closed by assuring the delegates that the full measure of our hospitality was extended all those who had come within our gates to aid in the good work which the convention was about to undertake.

At the conclusion of Colonel O'Neill's address Mr. Sherman placed in nomination the name of Mississippi's distinguished governor, A. H. Longino, as permanent chairman, and he was elected by acclamation. Messrs. John P. Mayo, of Lowndes, and Walter Windham, of Pickens, were appointed a committee to escort the permanent chairman to the stand, and as he appeared he was greeted with an ovation. Governor Longino thanked the convention for the honor which it had paid him, and said it was a pleasure for him to be identified with any movement which had for its end the material development of the State. He pointed with pride to the changed conditions of the present as contrasted with the past, when conventions were held almost solely for the purpose of nominating candidates and declaring political platforms, and he stated that it was a splendid omen for the future to see the men of all sections coming together in a movement to develop their country and to add to their material wealth. Governor Longino stated that the convention had work before it and he would not make an extended talk. His address was dignified and appropriate, and was heartily appreciated by the assembly, which applauded him enthusiastically at its conclusion.

He asked the further pleasure of the convention, and Capt. Willis B. Harris moved that Mr. P. W. Maer be made secretary of the convention. Mr. J. T. Senter was also nominated as assistant secretary, and Lieutenant-Governor Harrison presented the name of Mr. Craighead, of Mobile, as assistant secretary also, and the nominees were elected.

After the election of secretaries the work of the convention was undertaken, and upon motion of P. W. Maer a committee of three was appointed on credentials, and he suggested that during the performance of their work the convention hear from Senator MCLAURIN, a suggestion which was received with great favor. The motion for a credentials committee prevailed, and Governor Longino appointed on that committee Col. T. J. O'Neill, Capt. C. G. McGee, and Mr. William Pentecost. The committee retired to undertake their work, and Senator MCLAURIN was introduced.

If Senator MCLAURIN had any doubt as to his standing in Lowndes County it was removed in the hearty reception given him when he advanced to address the convention. He was applauded to the echo and applauded again. He thanked those present for their manifestation of esteem for him and stated that he was not prepared for a speech. He came to Columbus to show his interest in the movement and to aid and help it in any way which it was possible for him to do. He said he desired to have a business talk with the delegates, and he proceeded to make a fine speech, in which he reviewed the industrial conditions of the South and the increasing demand from all sections for means of cheaper transportation. He said the rivers of the South were the means of affording it, and no matter what were our ideas and convictions as to the wisdom of expending money in those channels, it seemed to be the fixed policy of the Government to continue it, and he was in favor of the South getting her share.

He stated that he had long since made up his mind to do what he could to secure appropriations to open up and develop the streams in Mississippi and to improve her harbors on the coast and the improvement of the Bigbee was one subject which would receive his special attention. When he pledged anew his influence and support to the movement of making the river navigable through Government appropriations, he was given an ovation, and it was some time before he was allowed to continue. Senator MCLAURIN made a fine speech, and he was attentively and favorable received by the convention.

After Senator MCLAURIN'S speech, the hour being late, an adjournment was taken until 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

As Major Rossell, United States engineer, and Congressman BANKHEAD and other members of the convention were compelled to leave the city last night, it was decided at the afternoon session to dispense with the session of the convention to-day and to transact all the business before the assembly yesterday afternoon.

Governor Longino called the convention to order at 3 o'clock, sharp, and introduced Hon. PATRICK HENRY, from the Vicksburg district. Judge HENRY said that he came from a district already committed to appropriations from Congress, and that as the Representative of that district he would use his influence and exert every effort that the appropriations would continue. If the improvement of the Tombigbee could be furthered by his influence or work, he assured his hearers that the project would receive it.

He was followed by Congressman BANKHEAD, from Alabama, who made a splendid speech. If the convention had accomplished nothing else but to secure Mr. BANKHEAD'S address, it would have been voted a success from this one feature alone. From his long years in Congress and his service on the River and Harbor Committee he gave his hearers the benefit of his experience in river and harbor matters, and it was advice and counsel worth receiving and heeding. Mr. BANKHEAD stated that the improvement of the Tombigbee was a feasible project, and that he was already committed to it. He told the convention how to proceed with its work, and the delegates later followed his advice in the appointment of a permanent memorial committee to bring the matter before Congress.

Mr. E. R. Sherman moved that the chairman appoint a permanent committee on memorial and other matters to prepare same for presentation to Congress, the chairman to be chairman of that committee. Colonel McClung, of Pickens, introduced another resolution, that a committee of 200 be appointed from Columbus and 100 from each county contiguous to the river to prepare said memorial as a substitute for Mr. Sherman's resolution, but Congressman BANKHEAD stated that he thought better results could be accomplished by a smaller committee, and Mr. Sherman's motion prevailed. The chair appointed the following committee: Messrs. E. R. Sherman, William Pentecost, C. G. McGee, John P. Mayo, and P. W. Maer, from Lowndes County; Hon. Walter Windham, of Pickens; Dr. R. L. Patty, of Noxubee; Hon. Sam Jones, of Sumter; Hon. E. O. Sykes, of Monroe, and Hon. A. C. Danner, of Mobile. This committee will immediately take up the work of preparing the memorial to Congress.

There being no further business, the convention adjourned sine die.

A. H. LONGINO, Chairman.
P. W. MAER, Secretary.

I have gone into this thus fully to show those present and the interest manifested. An improvement which interests the Governor and the United States Senator and the Congressmen of a State, and the Congressman of another State, and brings together an opera house full of prominent and patriotic citizens of different States to consider it, is not a matter of mere local importance but is of national interest. I now desire to read to you and impress upon your earnest and candid consideration the memorial prepared by the committee appointed at this convention, of which committee you will note the Governor of Mississippi is chairman and the other members are prominent and influential gentlemen of Alabama and Mississippi, who are anxious to see the country built up and developed.

This is the memorial:

MEMORIAL.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists beg leave to show that the Tombigbee River after improvement for perennial navigation will become a waterway of great national importance.

The length of the Tombigbee River from its mouth to Columbus, Miss., is 347 miles, being 191 miles from Mobile to Demopolis and 156 miles from Demopolis to Columbus. The fall in the river from Columbus to Demopolis is 107.8 feet.

By the river and harbor act of September 19, 1890, Congress adopted a channel depth of 6 feet at low water from Demopolis to Columbus, but no provision has as yet been made for carrying out this work.

To secure such a channel locks and dam will be necessary, and for inaugurating their construction it is earnestly urged that appropriations be made at the present session of Congress. Barge navigation from Columbus, Miss., to Mobile, Ala., will develop a carrying trade of immense proportions, not only in outgoing products for export, but in the incoming to the Tombigbee Valley and contiguous territory of great tonnage in corn, flour, meat, grain, and other necessaries of life from the West via the Mississippi River at a minimum cost of transportation.

NATIONAL IMPORTANCE OF THE IMPROVEMENT OF THE TOMBIGBEE.

In order to set forth the importance of this project and its far-reaching effect upon the country at large and the tremendous impetus which it will give to American commerce, your memorialists with all possible brevity present the following statistics and suggestions:

INCOMING WESTERN PRODUCTS.

There have been brought into the valley of the Tombigbee during the planting year just closed 6,000 cars of corn, 1,500 cars of flour, 1,000 cars of hog products, 1,750 cars of oats, besides many carloads of mules, live stock, and agricultural implements. These commodities were purchased from a wide area of grain-producing territory, embracing Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Ohio, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Nebraska.

That with a cheapening of freights there will be a corresponding increase in the consumption of the above-enumerated articles is axiomatic and beyond contravention, carrying the twofold blessing of better living to the consumer and a larger market to the producer.

But this up-river tonnage, large as it is, is the mere return of empties in ballast by comparison with the vast freight that would move out down the river with all the year round navigation.

COAL AND IRON.

The Tombigbee River parallels the great iron and coal district of Alabama for 150 miles, being within 25 miles of the finest deposit of brown hematite ore on the North American continent, and as near as 40 miles to inexhaustible quantities of bituminous coal of unequaled quality. There have passed across the Tombigbee River at Columbus during this year to the tipple on the Mississippi River for transshipment to New Orleans and points south 16,000 carloads of coal. How much more than this would pass down the Tombigbee to Mobile can only be guessed at; but, beyond peradventure, Mobile, with its improved harbor and nearness to the coal fields, must become the great coaling station of the Gulf, supplying our war vessels and merchant marine at less cost than will be possible in any other port in the United States.

Alabama, now occupying second place in the American production of pig iron, must have an outlet to the markets of the world, and the cheaper and more direct this outlet can be made the greater will become the annual output of her mines, with its consequent beneficences to producers and carriers alike. With the building of the Nicaragua Canal the cheaply made pig iron of Alabama would float out to the Far East in such bulk as to make our present conception of trade seem small and despicable. To this great volume of traffic must be added the finished products of iron and steel for bridges, structural uses, boiler plates, armor plates, and the thousand other tools and implements the world has need of.

Five railroads already in operation connect by short haul the Tombigbee River with the coal and iron of Alabama, and the Illinois Central has recently had a survey made for the building of another road into a section of the coal fields hitherto undeveloped.

COTTON.

There is produced in the fertile valley of the Tombigbee and along its tributaries, one-twelfth of the raw cotton of the South. This cotton is of very superior quality and in high favor with spinners at home and abroad. Whatever part of it may go for export, and by coastwise transportation to New England points will, perforce, seek the sea through this open waterway to get the profit of reduced freight rates; a reduction which will amount to half the rate now in effect. In addition to cotton in bales must be comprised its by-products, cotton-seed oil, meal and hulls, equal in value to the cotton itself and twice its tonnage.

The seed of all the cotton produced along the Tombigbee is crushed by mills situated upon its banks or nearly adjacent to it. Surely cotton, which has kept the pendulum of American finances a-swing so long, rounding out the favorable balance sheet of each year's trade, is entitled to all the fostering conditions that can be created for it.

TIMBER AND LUMBER.

Nowhere in America, with its fast-disappearing forests, can finer virgin timber be found than along the Tombigbee River. This timber is of great variety and size, including white oak, pitch pine, black walnut, beech, cypress, and sycamore. This timber heretofore has been left standing because of a lack of adequate and cheap transportation. Efforts have been made to reach the port of Mobile from time to time by rafting at high stages of water, but these ventures have been found to be unremunerative and unsafe and have been abandoned altogether.

At many points along the river there are stave factories and sawmills that could easily increase their output if water carrying facilities could be had. The business of one stave factory alone, located in Columbus, now amounts to 1,000 carloads annually.

LIME AND CEMENT.

Touching, and contiguous to the river for miles and miles, there are great fields of lime rock from which can be and has been made the highest standard of merchantable lime. Water transportation is the life of the lime industry.

At Demopolis, on the high lime-rock cliffs overlooking the river, there is nearing completion a $2,000,000 plant for the manufacture of cement. The capacity of this establishment is from 400 to 500 barrels per day. The building of this important enterprise was made possible by the improvement of the river to that point, and by the fact that that part of the river has been placed on the continuing-improvement list. These bluffs are a feature of the bank formation of the Tombigbee River. They are all of the same geologic character and extend, at intervals, from Demopolis to Columbus, and for miles above. That mills for converting them into cement of great commercial value will follow the course of the river as it is made navigable seems as certain as that light will follow the sun around the world. Not only so, but should work be begun on the river at once, the Government could, in all probability, be supplied at the very lowest cost with all the cement needed to construct the masonry of the Nicaragua Canal.

Having as succinctly as possible enumerated some of the great benefits, national in scope, to accrue from the opening up of the Tombigbee River, your memorialists most earnestly urge that this great work be inaugurated and continued with rapid prosecution until a channel depth of 6 feet at low water shall have been obtained from Mobile to Columbus. The mind of man can but vaguely conceive and imperfectly conjecture the future greatness and industrial development of the United States, and in that development no factor will be greater in importance than an unobstructed passage through its waterways. In this development the Tombigbee River will play no minor part. Never blocked by ice, it flows through a country better timbered, richer in agricultural resources and mineral deposits than any other river of like length on the globe.

A. H. Longino, Governor of Mississippi; E. R. Sherman, Wm. Pentecost, C. G. McGee, Jno. P. Mayo, P. W. Maer, of Lowndes County; Walter Windham, of Pickens County; Dr. R. L. Patty, of Noxubee County; Sam Jones, of Sumter County; E. O. Sykes, of Monroe County; A. C. Danner, of Mobile County, Committee.

In the pamphlet containing this memorial no doubt you noticed the map, on which is indicated the vast coal and iron beds contiguous to this river; and also you noticed in the same pamphlet the pictures of the steamer Vienna plowing the waves of this beautiful river, loaded with the fleecy staple cotton. The difficulty is that the Vienna can only navigate this river during high water and for only a small part of the year. But you will say the tonnage is small. Yes, comparatively so at present; but it takes navigation to make tonnage. Open up this river to navigation the year round and the tonnage will leap to an undreamed-of amount. [Applause.]

On the banks of this river is Columbus, the queen city of east Mississippi, which has a number of factories now, and above it is Aberdeen, the pride of the prairie belt, and Fulton, the gem of the historic hills. Open up this river and these wide-awake, progressive places will be filled with factories and new business enterprises, and the contiguous country will blossom like American Beauty roses. This river flows through the Bigbee Valley, which vies with the valley of the Nile in fertility and richness of production. Along it the cotton and agricultural grain products are in abundance, like the crops of ancient Egypt, inexhaustible, pleading for an outlet to the world, ready to furnish tonnage. An abundant virgin forest, to make enough lumber to supply untold demand, nods in the breezes and beckons you to gaze upon this river and behold the great national advantage to be attained by opening it up, and enough lime rock is contiguous to the river to make sufficient high-standard cement to construct the masonry of the Nicaragua Canal. [Applause.]

With all this to be obtained by making this river navigable, how can you have the heart to defeat my amendment?

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. TALBERT. Does this amendment which the gentleman proposes to offer begin a new line of improvement?

Mr. CANDLER. No, sir.

Mr. TALBERT. Is it just a continuation of an improvement, or does it open up an entirely new field?

Mr. CANDLER. It does not open up an entirely new field.

Mr. TALBERT. Then an appropriation has been made heretofore?

Mr. CANDLER. An appropriation has been made heretofore.

Mr. TALBERT. But has been discontinued?

Mr. CANDLER. An appropriation has been heretofore made of a temporary character, and we want to make it of a permanent character, and do it in the interest of this trade. I think we ought to make appropriations for permanent improvements to the commerce, and that is the reason why I am going to offer this amendment.

Mr. TALBERT. I hope it will pass.

Mr. CANDLER. River improvement is for the purpose of making commerce, adding to trade, and increasing business, and nowhere is there a more inviting field than this to which I invite you. The people of east Mississippi are struggling with railroad monopoly, and I appeal to you to give them relief by giving them water navigation.

Up to a short time ago they had railroad competition, but the use of aggregated capital has deprived them of this by combining all the railroad interest there in one great system, and now I appeal to the Government to come to the relief of the people by improving this river and thereby giving them cheap freight rates through the means of river navigation. I plead with you to thus come to the relief of the masses by the adoption of this amendment. There is an available appropriation of $16,000, in round numbers, for this river from Demopolis to Columbus, and in this bill there is an item of $4,000 for the river above Columbus. Now, adopt this amendment and we can go to work and permanently improve this river. It ought to be done, and I appeal to this House to do it in the interest of commerce, trade, and business, and for the direct benefit of the masses of the people of that section of the country and for the general good of the country at large. [Applause.]

[Mr. COCHRAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12346, the river and harbor appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had presented this day to the President of the United States for his approval bill of the following title:

H. R. 4381. An act to authorize the Central Railway of West Virginia to build a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near Morgantown, in the State of West Virginia.

WITHDRAWAL FROM THE FILES.

By unanimous consent, Mr. LAWRENCE had leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Fannie E. Walker, Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana for two weeks, on account of important business.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. WACHTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I desire to send to the Clerk's desk a clipping handed to me this morning from the Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune which relates to a certain matter interesting to the Speaker and myself.

The Clerk read as follows:

While the Cuban reciprocity fight was at its warmest and the "insurgents" were making daily assaults against the Ways and Means Committee, Speaker HENDERSON sent for Representative WACHTER, of Maryland, of the Baltimore district.

"Why are you so much interested in this sugar-beet question?" demanded the Speaker, angrily. "You have no sugar-beet interests."

"Well, it seems fair enough to me," replied the Baltimore man. "Furthermore, I have some constituents who own sugar-beet factories."

"How many?"

"Oh, two or three."

"How many have you got interested in the Sparrows Point improvement, for which $300,000 or $400,000 are asked?"

"My whole district is virtually interested in that."

"Well, then, it is up to you, if you are a good Congressman, to choose between sugar beet and your item in the river and harbor bill."

Mr. WACHTER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that there is not a member on the floor of this House who has a higher regard for the press of this country than have I. I number in the press gallery among my friends a great many gentlemen in whom I have the greatest confidence. I am one of those who contend that there is and ought to be as much honor in the press gallery as on the floor of this House. Regarding this publication, I desire to say, with all the emphasis of my nature, that it is an unqualified falsehood made out of whole cloth. I never had such a conversation with the Speaker.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I submit that there is no question of personal privilege stated in the article, and the gentleman has stated none.

Mr. WACHTER. "The gentleman" has been attacked by the public press.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is not a matter of personal privilege. There is no reflection on his integrity as a member of the House, and there is no question of personal privilege involved.

Mr. WACHTER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask for a ruling, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that this is an attack upon a member of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The Speaker holds that it is an attack upon him in his representative capacity?

The SPEAKER. In his representative capacity.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the Chair holds that, I have nothing to say.

Mr. WACHTER. I am glad to hear the Chair decide that. I not only consider it an attack, but a cowardly attack.

Mr. Speaker, I am not interested in any appropriation for Sparrows Point. Sparrows Point is not in my district, and I desire also to say that no man, be he Speaker or whoever he may be, has any right to question me in an angry manner as to any position I may take as a member of this House. I am here representing a district, the same as every other man on the floor, and if I do anything wrong in this House it is for the people in my district to say whether or not I shall be here. The gentleman in his article stated that there was an appropriation for Sparrows Point for three or four hundred thousand dollars, which the Speaker spoke to me about. I desire to say that during this entire session I have not uttered a word to the Speaker as to legislation for my district or my State. As chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills I am frequently in the Speaker's room to present bills for him to sign, but never during the Fifty-seventh Congress have I had a talk with him upon legislation or as to legislation in my district. Now, Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk and desire to have read a telegram from my colleague who represents the district in which Sparrows Point is located.

ANNAPOLIS JUNCTION, MD., March 17.

To Hon. FRANK C. WACHTER, House of Representatives:

See chairman River and Harbor Committee for me and ask him to put cost of surveying Sparrows Point Channel in his appropriation. I am sick and can not be in Washington to-day.

A. A. BLAKENEY.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that came without any solicitation. It shows conclusively that Sparrows Point was never interested heretofore in any legislation; and for the information of this House I desire to say that the Sparrow's Point Company, or the Steel Company of Maryland, has paid for its own dredging for ten years, and it has cost them from sixty to one hundred and twenty thousand dollars. They have their own independent channel.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is high time that some steps be taken to prohibit this ambuscade business by the press. Who knows who will be the next victim? We are paralyzed to act. If that clipping goes to my district I can not meet and explain to everyone, although I think my people have sufficient confidence in me to know that I would not be a party to any such transaction as that. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say emphatically that the Speaker and I have never had a talk about any appropriation or legislation in this the Fifty-seventh Congress, and I think it is very unfair for the press of this country to vilify the Speaker, using a member of this House as a club to do it with. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT.

On motion of Mr. BURTON (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

CHARLES H. HAWLEY—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

To the Senate of the United States:

Senate bill No. 336, entitled "An act to grant an honorable discharge from the military service to Charles H. Hawley," is herewith returned without approval.

This is a mandatory bill, revoking the order of dismissal issued thirty-nine years ago and directing the issuance of an honorable discharge from the Army to this man, whom his superior officers, including the Commander in Chief, Abraham Lincoln, held to be unworthy to serve in the Army of the Union thirty-nine years ago. I do not at this time express an opinion upon the constitutional questions involved in the bill. I think it in the highest degree inexpedient to reverse the order of dismissal nearly forty years after the event, when it is out of the question for anyone to possess the knowledge and the means of arriving at the judgment which was possessed by the fellow-officers of the man at the time they dismissed him.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, March 15, 1902.

JAMES W. HOWELL—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate of the United States:

Senate bill No. 24, entitled "An act for the relief of James W. Howell," is herewith returned without approval.

This is not a bill which confers jurisdiction. It is mandatory in its character, directing the Secretary of War to revoke and set aside the proceedings, findings, and sentence of a court-martial held thirty-seven years ago. I do not at this time express an opinion upon the constitutional questions involved in the bill. It is enough to say that this man was convicted of mutiny, sentenced to be dishonorably discharged from the Army, and confined at hard labor for a term of years. A portion of the confinement was remitted by Executive clemency. It is to the last degree improbable that now, thirty-seven years after the event, there is as good an opportunity to pass judgment upon the facts as was the case when the fellow-officers of the offender found him guilty of an offense so serious as to call for the punishment they inflicted. There is perhaps no other heritage an American would so like to leave to his children as an honorable discharge for services well and gallantly performed in the civil war; and the honorable discharge thus granted to those who with blood and toil have earned it is cheapened and rendered of little worth if also granted to their unworthy brothers who have forfeited the right to receive it.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, March 15, 1902.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the message be printed, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

ISAAC P. BROWN.

Mr. COCKRELL. A day or two ago the bill (S. 3826) for the relief of Catherine A. Brown was passed, and we neglected to amend the title of the bill as it should have been amended. The bill is still in the hands of the Secretary. I ask that the votes on passage of the bill may be reconsidered and that the name in the title be changed from "Catherine A. Brown" to "Isaac P. Brown."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be sufficient, would it not, to amend the title without a reconsideration of the third reading and passage of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose it would. I move that the title of the bill be amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Isaac P. Brown."

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5224) for the relief of Edward Kershner.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 1545) to establish a marine hospital at Savannah, Ga.

The message further returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the joint resolution (S. R. 68) authorizing and requesting the President to extend to the Government and people of France and the families of Count de Rochambeau and Marquis de Lafayette an invitation to join the Government and people of the United States in the dedication ceremonies of the monument of Count de Rochambeau, to be unveiled in the city of Washington.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

BILL BECOME A LAW.

The message also announced that the act (S. 608) for the relief of George K. Bowen, having been presented to the President on the 5th instant, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which it originated within the time prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, has become a law without his approval.

AFFAIRS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I ask to have printed as a Senate document certain letters, being the correspondence of the Federal party in Manila and the correspondence of that party in the United States, relating to the development, organization, and policy of that party. I ask that the document also include the memorial which has been presented to the Senate and which has been printed. I ask that these papers may be printed as a single document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With the memorial?

Mr. RAWLINS. With the memorial. They all relate to that matter and furnish information which I think will be desirable to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent to have printed as a document the papers which he presents, together with a memorial relating to the same matter. Is there objection?

Mr. SPOONER. Would the Senator have any objection to having the matter referred to the Committee on the Philippines? The chairman of the committee is not present to-day.

Mr. RAWLINS. There is nothing objectionable, I think, in these letters. They are simply matters of information and tend to throw light upon the memorial that was presented here. The views are not partisan.

Mr. BURROWS. I did not hear at the time what the request of the Senator from Utah was.

Mr. RAWLINS. The request which I made was this: I sent to the desk some letters or correspondence between the correspondent of the Federal party in Manila and the correspondent of that party in the United States. These letters began in December, 1900, about the time of the organization of that party. They throw much light upon the genesis of that organization, its development, its purposes, and the objects which it has in view. It is in elucidation of testimony which has been given by Governor Taft and others relating to the work which has been accomplished in the islands. The views will not be my own, nor would they be those of the Senator's, but it simply enables us to put a true estimate upon the value of the memorial which has already been offered to the Senate and published.

Mr. BURROWS. What does the Senator request?

Mr. RAWLINS. The request is that these letters, together with the memorial, be printed as a document.

Mr. BURROWS. Would it not be agreeable to the Senator to have the letters and the memorial referred to the Committee on the Philippines? We are taking testimony upon that subject. Why not let them go before the committee?

Mr. PROCTOR. The committee will meet to-morrow morning.

Mr. RAWLINS. I have no objection to submitting this matter to the Senator from Michigan or to the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines for inspection. I do not think it is necessary that the papers should be referred to the committee.

Mr. CARMACK. What possible objection can there be to printing them?

Mr. BURROWS. I move that the memorial and the letters be referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. HOAR. I will wait until the motion has been stated by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves that the papers presented by the Senator from Utah be referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I hope that motion will not prevail. I present these letters simply for the information of the Senate. There is absolutely nothing in the letters which can be objectionable. They may be retained in order that the Senator may inspect them, if he so desires, and I will not insist upon the order at this time; but I do not care to have them referred to the committee, because it is work that is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, allow me to suggest to the Senator from Utah that the committee is taking testimony and that testimony is being printed. I understand these letters to be in the nature of testimony, and I think the true course to pursue is to allow them to be referred to the committee and let them be incorporated in the testimony that we are taking, so that we shall not have a number of documents in one place and testimony in another.

Mr. HOAR. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator. If I have taken the floor from him, I beg his pardon for doing so.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to my honorable friend who made this motion, and to other gentlemen, whether it is not well to observe in general what, so far as I understand it, has been the almost uniform custom of the Senate, and that is, when a document which he deems important for the understanding of a question by the Senate is presented, compact and brief, so that no vast expense is incurred, and under his responsibility declares that it is something which he desires to have printed to have it printed. Otherwise when any Senator has such information as that it will be his right and in a great many instances his duty to make it a part of remarks in the Senate. In that case it has got to go into the RECORD.

It is not a very small thing yet, and I think it is not likely to be a very small thing to represent a State in this body. When the Representative of a State in this body says to his fellows that something is important for his use and for their consideration which should be presented in that way, it never has been the custom, though it may have happened occasionally, to go behind that request and that assurance.

Here a Senator who is on the committee which is charged with the investigation of one of the most important pieces of political history ever enacted in this world, a matter which some people believe vital to the character and the prosperity of this country, says that he would like to have in separate form for his use and the use of the committee, and not available in a number of volumes which may be, before they get through, as big as an encyclopedia, a particular piece of information, and to have a dozen Senators rise and say that shall be buried if we can bury it, I think is not a very good method of proceeding.

If such privileges be denied to me I shall see that every time I make such a request I shall have the document put into a speech where I can have it as a document, and it will also in addition burden the RECORD.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. HOAR. In one moment. I want to submit to my friend from Iowa whether he believes there is a Senator on this floor who, if he rose and asked to have printed in a few pages of a document something relating to finance or appropriations or anything else would ever dream of denying it. The Senator from Iowa is a Senator for whose judgment and experience and wisdom and sincerity we all have the profoundest respect; but all having the profoundest respect for him, we must claim to stand as his equals here, however practically inferior we may be.

I hope this objection will not be pressed. I do not think it will serve any cause to do it. Now, I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. BURROWS. I only wish——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HOAR. I do.

Mr. BURROWS. I only wish to correct the Senator from Massachusetts. If he understood me to state that I made this motion for the purpose of suppressing it, I made no such statement and have had no such purpose.

Mr. HOAR. I did not make any such statement.

Mr. BURROWS. I understood the Senator to say that this was done for the purpose of suppressing it.

Mr. HOAR. I did not say that, but that is a very different thing from what the Senator suggested. I did not say either.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts attributes to me a desire to suppress information, because I object to the printing of a document in the manner that a Senator asks to have it printed. I do not know what the papers contain. I heard, however, the reason given by the Senator from Utah why he wanted to have it printed, namely, that it was in explanation and to some extent, I suppose, in contradiction of the testimony taken by the committee——

Mr. HOAR. And which has been read here in debate already.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; testimony which has been taken by the committee with special reference to the testimony of Governor Taft. The Senator asks that it be printed as a document and segregated from the testimony that has been taken by the committee, and especially the testimony of Governor Taft, which this is to contradict or explain. I see no greater reason for printing it as a document than I do for printing the statement of Governor Taft as a document. Yet nobody has asked that that be done.

I do not consider this to be in the light of an ordinary presentation by a Senator of a memorial or a matter presented by a citizen. This is testimony as much as the testimony of General Otis, which is now being taken by the Committee on the Philippines. I think whatever there is in regard to that subject should be in a single document, whether it shall comprise 500 pages or 100. If one Senator arises here and asks that a portion of the testimony shall be printed, another Senator arises and asks that another portion be printed, and thus we shall have the testimony taken before the committee divided up into Senate documents.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. CARMACK. I should like to ask the Senator how this matter could be printed as a part of the testimony taken before the committee. It is not the testimony of any witness.

Mr. ALLISON. It can be printed in that way just as other papers have been printed. I have presented matters before the committee and asked to have them incorporated in the testimony. The Senator from Utah can do that and no one will object to it. The greatest latitude is permitted by the committee as respects the matter.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator from Utah could not present it to the committee as bearing upon affairs in the Philippines and have it printed as a part of the hearings unless it came in as a part of the testimony of some witness. I know that occasionally, for instance, the other day General Hughes presented a publication of the New York Tribune, which I suppose some member of the committee had handed him for that purpose, and he made it a part of his testimony; but I do not see how otherwise you could incorporate anything of that sort in the testimony of a witness.

Mr. ALLISON. I certainly have heard no objection to any member of the committee presenting such matter there.

Mr. SCOTT. We can not hear over here. The Senators are engaging in a private conversation.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to say that I know of no suggestion made by any member of the committee that documents or papers should not be incorporated in the testimony. I care nothing about this matter; I do not know what these papers contain.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose that it is not testimony which it is proposed to have published, but that it is an anonymous letter, pure and simple, which contains in the judgment of the Senator who offers it matter grave enough in the way of reasoning or otherwise to be presented in some form to the Senate. Is it a good rule, I ask the Senator, the Senator who offers it being responsible for the decency and propriety of its character, to say that whenever a Senator desires to do that he has got to put it into a speech and make it go into the RECORD? There is the whole practical question in my mind. Without being sure, the Senator will, I think, agree with me that there have been a hundred cases in my experience here where when a Senator has proposed to offer something of that sort it was said, "You had better print it as a document or put it into the RECORD without reading," and that is always done.

Mr. ALLISON. I know of a number of instances where we have objected to petitions and memorials and matters of that character being printed as a document.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator has never had such a refusal made to a request of his, and I never had such a refusal made to a request of mine.

Mr. ALLISON. I never make a request, or rarely make a request, to have a memorial printed as a public document——

Mr. HOAR. I have made the request several times.

Mr. ALLISON. Unless it is of the utmost importance. I care nothing about this matter one way or the other.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ALLISON. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. RAWLINS. I ask for the return of the letters to my desk. I thought that I might get them printed in the usual way without occupying unnecessarily the time of the Senate. I knew that I could not only have them printed, but printed in the RECORD. I know that they contain nothing to which any Senator would make an objection.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island will state it.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the order of business under which the Senate is proceeding?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Resolutions coming over from a previous day.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the resolution may be read, so that we may know what business is before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Utah to ask that he might withdraw these letters.

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes; I asked that they might be returned to my desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the letters are withdrawn.

CIVIL-SERVICE EXAMINATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. GALLINGER, as follows:

Resolved, That the Civil Service Commission is hereby directed to transmit to the Senate a statement showing the number of persons examined during each fiscal year from 1884 to 1901, inclusive, giving by years the number who passed, the number who were rejected, the number who were certified as being eligible for appointment, the number actually appointed, and the number of eligibles now on the several rolls of the Commission; also the number placed in the classified service by Executive orders or rules of the Commission, without examination, since the date of the enactment of the civil-service law approved January 16, 1883.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire a slight amendment to the resolution. In reporting the list of eligibles now on the rolls, let it be reported by States. I move that amendment to the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Commission," insert "by States;" so as to make the clause read:

And the number of eligibles now on the several rolls of the Commission, by States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to modify the resolution by including the following words at the end:

Including the date of each such order and the number placed in the classified service under each such order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

LEGAL AND TRAFFIC RELATIONS OF RAILROADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. MORGAN, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to send to the Senate a statement of the legal and traffic relations between the railroads that connect with the waters of the Pacific Ocean and the Government of the United States. And that the Secretary of War is directed to send to the Senate a statement of the legal and traffic relations between the railroads in the Philippine Islands, and as to the charters and ownership of such railroads.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this resolution went over yesterday on my objection, because it is difficult for me in reading or rereading the resolution to find out what the Senator is driving at.

If the Senator wants all that great realm of testimony which has been thoroughly investigated in what Congress has done, showing the relations of the Pacific railroads to the Government, he is embarking on a most extensive project. We have had that subject before us. Committees have explored it and have gone deeply into it and have submitted very voluminous reports, and the reports have been the subject not only of observation and consideration but controversy. Does the Senator from Alabama desire to reopen that investigation and to start the War Department upon a renewal of it? The language is:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to send to the Senate a statement of the legal and traffic relations between the railroads that connect with the waters of the Pacific Ocean and the Government of the United States.

That is a very broad region to investigate. The Department can not do that in one week nor two weeks, nor in one month nor two months, unless it simply transmits to us a statement of what has been done heretofore. I do not know that the Senator seeks anything that is so extensive as that. If his inquiry is only directed to something that is superficial, easily come at, easily sent to us, I have no objection; but I think he ought to state to us what, in his mind, is the force of the words—

A statement of the legal and traffic relations between the railroads that connect the waters of the Pacific Ocean and the Government of the United States.

And the following clause:

And that the Secretary of War is directed to send to the Senate a statement of the legal and traffic relations between the railroads in the Philippine Islands, and as to the charters and ownership of such railroads.

That clearly is a new matter. It has not been embraced in previous inquiries and previous reports. It is absolutely new. Whether that would be extensive or not we do not know. I do not suppose there are many railroads in the Philippine Islands. The questions of charter and ownership there are questions which are now being investigated by the Committee on the Philippines. It is very important in dealing with those islands and the people of the archipelago that the matter of railroads, the matter of charters, of franchises, shall be guarded most jealously; and the committee to whom that subject has been sent by the Senate is now wearing itself out, I may say, in recurring sessions every day, to the exclusion of other business. One of the subjects it has investigated, or is going to investigate and to report upon, is the question of franchises and charters. If the Senator believes that that can be better done by asking the War Department to do it, he may be correct. I wish he would tell us just what he does want.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine seems to be in a state of alarm about this matter, and I think it is my duty to explain it to him. I assure him there is nothing at all in the woodpile of any color whatsoever. There is no trouble whatever expected, none invited, and none anticipated. Perhaps the Senator from Maine can answer the question that I have in mind and upon which I desire to inform myself, so that, as a member of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, I can ascertain whether it is necessary to have some legislation here to correct what I conceive to be a very awkward state of law.

There are two Pacific railroads, the Union and Central Pacific, and their branches, that were sold under decrees of the Federal courts and bought in by private corporations or private individuals. I am informed—I do not know how true it is—that the present organization of these companies is conducted under charters granted perhaps by the State of Utah. There remain upon the statute books of the United States, however, a number of very important statutes regulating the traffic relations between the United States and these same railroads, which have never been repealed or modified by any act of Congress. That presents a question whether or not a State charter can repeal or modify an act of Congress, whether it is not necessary to have this matter ascertained, and if it is required to have legislation to make them conformable to the present situation of the laws of the land.

Mr. HALE. Right there—for the Senator is an old and experienced legislator and a good lawyer—does he expect that under this inquiry the Secretary of War will give us an opinion as to the legal effect? We certainly do not call upon any Secretary to do that.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the traffic relations between the United States and these railroad companies to which I have alluded are matters of fact; they are not matters of law. I do not know whether the traffic relations between the United States and these railroad companies are being conducted under acts of Congress or under acts of the State of Utah or by some other agreement. They would have to be conducted, if they were conducted legally, according to the laws of the United States, and yet I do not quite see how that is possible. For instance, under the laws of the United States still remaining unrepealed, the Government has the right to two directors in the board of direction of these railroad companies; it has the right to transport over these railroads its freights, its soldiers, its mails, etc., under certain stipulations provided for in the statute itself.

I do not know how far these are being respected, whether they are the rules of action or not. I do not know that it is absolutely necessary to take Congressional action upon this question, and I want to find out. I am just simply an humble and modest inquirer as to the situation. That is all. I have no scheme in my mind of trying to hurt anybody or scare anybody about this business.

Mr. HALE. I do not think that anybody is very much alarmed.

Mr. MORGAN. No; I reckon not; and they ought not to be.

Mr. HALE. But it is a matter of consideration when we start these inquiries that we should start them right. As I have just intimated, we do not call upon the Secretary of War or any other Secretary for a legal opinion. We want facts. If the Senator will modify his resolution, so that it will read: "A statement of the traffic relations between the railroads that connect with the waters of the Pacific Ocean and the Government of the United States," and a recital of the statutes upon which said relations are based, then the Senate Committee on the Judiciary can furnish us with a legal opinion on the case. I do not want to ask the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of War for a statement as to the legal relations between those railroads and the United States. I do not want him to argue the question.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Hitchcock is a very fine lawyer, and I was trying to avail myself of his knowledge of the statutes and the law in having them copied in the report, and let us judge what are the legal relations and what are not. I do not care about his opinion as a matter of law, except that I value it very highly; but I thought that was a very clear way to get at it—to ask him to state what are the legal relations. He could proceed to say that they depend upon this statute, that, and the other, which remain unrepealed, and in that way he would state the legal relations. I do not ask him for his legal opinion; really I ask him for a matter of fact—what relations created by law are subsisting in the practice of this Government in connection with these railroads, their traffic, etc.

I think the resolution is entirely harmless, but I am willing to enlarge it, so as to take the statutes upon which to predicate action, if action be necessary.

Mr. HALE. Then I move to strike out the words "legal and."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the resolution, in line 2, by striking out the words "legal and," before the word "traffic."

Mr. MORGAN. Has the Senator any further amendment to offer?

Mr. HALE. Only when I get the rest I have indicated.

Mr. MORGAN. The rest you have indicated?

Mr. HALE. That the Secretary shall furnish us the statutes upon which these relations have been established.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HALE. Then, afterwards, after the words "United States," I shall move, in line 4, to insert "with a reference to the statutes upon which such relations have been established."

Mr. MORGAN. Why not say "being conducted?" I do not know about their being established.

Mr. HALE. Very well, I will say "are being conducted." It is the same thing.

Mr. MORGAN. Very good. Has the Senator any further criticism or improvement to make in the resolution? I want to accept these amendments.

Mr. HALE. I think I ought to exercise great modesty in undertaking to improve upon anything the Senator proposes.

Mr. MORGAN. I want to accept these amendments, if the Senator is through with his proposition.

Mr. HALE. I am very nearly through. I do not know that I shall offer any further amendment. Let the amendment be read from the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, after the words "United States," it is proposed to insert "with a reference to the statutes upon which such relations have been conducted."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. MORGAN. I accept that modification, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama accepts the amendment, and his resolution will be so modified. The resolution will now be read as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to send to the Senate a statement of the traffic relations between the railroads that connect with the waters of the Pacific Ocean and the Government of the United States, with a reference to the statutes upon which such relations have been conducted. And that the Secretary of War is directed to send to the Senate a statement of the legal and traffic relations between the railroads in the Philippine Islands, and as to the charters and ownership of such railroads.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator rise to the pending resolution?

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. President, I have not any special knowledge as to the propriety or impropriety of the pending resolution, and in the remarks which I shall make I have no disposition to delay unduly its passage; but I have in my hand some interesting correspondence which may with all propriety be laid before the Senate. I did not want to occupy unnecessarily the time of the Senate in openly discussing this correspondence.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is something of uneasy disturbance in the Chamber, and the Senator does not speak loud enough to be heard.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I have said that I have no special knowledge as to the propriety or impropriety of the pending resolution. I do not know that I have any objection to it, but I have in my hand some interesting correspondence, which ought to be in the possession of the Senate and of the country, having relation to the Philippine Islands. I did not want to occupy any part of the time of the Senate in its presentation and I thought it was unnecessary. I have looked through this correspondence. It is not in advocacy or encouragement of hostility against the United States; it is not in contradiction of anything as to which Governor Taft has testified. It is simply matter of information, of facts developed historically in the course of the origination and development of what is known as the Federal party. Hence to elucidate that history, the petition of that party, setting forth the ends of that organization, has been laid before the Senate and printed as a document.

These letters were designed to be presented to enable us to obtain an accurate estimate and a true value of the statements therein contained; but when I offered them and asked that they be printed as a document the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who is exceedingly sensitive when it comes to the question of any sort of disclosure relating to the Philippine Islands, saw fit to interpose an objection unusual in the history of the Senate. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] asked that a compilation relating to this vital question, made by some clerk in the War Department, be printed as a document, and no objection was interposed. Senators upon the Republican side present documents time and time again relating to this same subject, and we of the minority have never deemed it necessary to interpose an obstacle to the disclosure of any information which any Senator upon the other side has upon this question; but the moment that I rose as a member of the minority, having the honor to be upon the Committee on the Philippines, and asked that this correspondence be printed as a document, in order that we might have it for our convenient use in the progress of the investigasion which is going on relating to these islands, suddenly the Senator from Iowa rises and interposes his persistent objection to that simple performance.

Mr. President, it was suggested that these papers be referred to the Committee on the Philippine Islands and be printed in the course of the testimony. They are not testimony; they would be inadmissible as testimony in the investigation which that committee is now conducting. The papers contain correspondence. If I may be permitted to so far allude to the procedure of that committee, an attempt on the part of the minority to put in an excerpt from a distinguished author relating to these islands was objected to and excluded by the Senator from Iowa, who now interposes this obstacle. Doubtless if these letters were there presented we should find the same objection there that we find here.

Mr. President, I ask, without reading, that this correspondence may be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks upon this resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks that the papers he holds in his hands be printed as a portion of his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. SCOTT. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I read the following:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., December 27, 1900.

Señor BUENCAMINO, Manila, P. I.

SIR: Permit me to offer my congratulations for your wisdom and patriotism in agitating and aiding the formation of a "Federal" party for the purpose of accepting and giving allegiance to the Constitution and sovereignty of the United States. You are now pursuing a course in which many American citizens, consistent with honor and dignity, can give you support and encouragement, in fact, upon which all can unite. One of the leading papers of this city commends your movement in an abstract which I inclose.

The difficulties of inaugurating proper legislation for the countries acquired from Spain, due to late war, are set forth in an article concerning "cases" now before our United States Supreme Court at Washington, which I herewith inclose. It will give you an idea, from the American point of view, of the difficulties the President has had in dealing with the matter, complicated as it was by the insurrection gotten up by Señor Aguinaldo in your islands. The Congress, where it properly belongs, has had no chance to enact any legislation on account of President delaying action, by reason of said insurrection, claiming sovereignty should first be established. In the meantime, cases stated were brought before Supreme Court for defining status of islands acquired, Congress delaying further action since establishment of military authority over the islands pending those decisions.

When the court, which is the highest in the land, hands down its decision, it will define not only status of islands but dispose of the matter, so that Congress will be enabled to enact the necessary legislation, giving said islands a legal status under the Constitution of the United States in accordance with said decisions.

Unless I am very much mistaken the decision of the court will be the President has no authority to govern Porto Rico or the Philippines in the way he has been doing, as colonies with a mixed civil and military government. On the contrary, under the Constitution, it will no doubt be decided the Congress should have granted and inaugurated a Territorial form of government. In brief, that is the appointment by the President of a "governor" for the islands, and the islands to be represented in Congress by a "Delegate" to the House of Representatives, all the other governing power of the islands—with the exception of making treaties and tariff laws—in your own hands, consistent with the Constitution, with all the rights and privileges pertaining to a citizen of the United States, the same as has been granted to Hawaii. This will give you a form of government that will satisfy your highest aspirations, and at the same time make you stronger on account of being part of the United States of America.

This, Señor, is the end and aim you should bend all your energies in attaining, as under the decision of the Supreme Court the matter is likely to be taken out of the hands of the Commission appointed by the President and the whole matter placed before Congress.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I can conceive that some of the Senators on the other side desire to hear the reading of this paper, and therefore I would suggest that conversation be conducted in a lower tone.

Mr. SCOTT. It is impossible for us to hear the Senator from Utah, as he is reading in such a low tone of voice. If he will only raise his voice so that we can hear him and give us the names of the writers of these letters as he goes along, we shall be very much obliged to him.

Mr. RAWLINS. I thought in suppressing my voice to a low tone I was acting in sympathy with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT], rather than pain him by reading so he could hear this correspondence, which he so stoutly objected to. However, if he desires now to hear it, as I thought he would on a little reflection, I will endeavor to raise my voice so that all the Senators on the other side may have this necessary information; or, rather, I will ask the Secretary to read it.

Mr. WELLINGTON. If I may interrupt the Senator for a moment, I would appeal to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] to withdraw his objection. It is customary for the Senate, when a Senator makes a request of this kind, to allow the matter to be printed as a public document; and I trust the Senator from West Virginia will withdraw his objection.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. RAWLINS. I decline to yield to the Senator now.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope the Senator will be kind enough to read to the Senate the names of the gentlemen who sign these different letters giving this information, and then I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. RAWLINS. I decline to be interrupted by the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah declines to yield.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, as Senators seem disposed to object to my elocution and reading, I will ask that the Secretary be permitted to read these letters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator asks that the Secretary read the letters.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Secretary will give the name of the writer. I could not hear the name as given by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Secretary will please take up the reading of the paper at the point where I left off.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the paper begun by Mr. RAWLINS, as follows:

You should therefore speedily form a strong, influential "party" of your citizens, capable of commanding the respect and receiving the support of a majority of your people, that the Administration can recognize, so you will be in position to elect a Delegate [should have said Representative] to Congress at once as your representative, should decision prove to be as stated, which is in accordance with opinion expressed by ex-President Benjamin Harrison. In fact, you had better do this as early as possible, sending one of your brightest and ablest men to represent you before the American people, even if Congress is not in session, for the purpose of offsetting mischievous propaganda of Señor Aguinaldo's agents in this country, a specimen of which (concerning Señor Fontela) I inclose.

When Señor Sixto Lopez was in this city recently, he was refused a public hearing before a ministerial association on the grounds "they would not recognize an enemy of the United States, representing people who were in insurrection against the righteous authority of the American people," though many were introduced and shook hands with him after public meeting was over.

Señors Lopez and Fontela are simply wasting time and money in this country, as the American people at the last election overwhelmingly defeated any effort looking to granting "absolute independence." The President has neither the power nor authority to grant it, and Congress could not if it would (as the middle and great West is in favor of holding the islands), and yet the American people desire in their hearts to deal as justly and magnanimously with you as the Constitution and the laws will permit.

I also inclose an article in reference to Porto Rico, showing her desire for Territorial rights. What you call the Federal party they call the Republican party. As you will notice in the article, in sending a representative do not make the mistake of sending a "resident commissioner," as our form is different from the Spanish. But send a "delegate" as a Territorial representative, like Hawaii did, so he will have a legal status in a representative sense that Congress can "recognize" as part of the country.

In conclusion, my dear Señor, if everything is not entirely plain to you, if you will call on Judge Taft, of the Commission, regarding Territorial form of government he will doubtless explain it to you. It will give yourself and followers as much, or quite as much political power, as if you were "independent." Your connection with the United States will give you the advantages of stability that will cause capital to flow in and make your islands blossom like the rose.

If you have no correspondent here, Señor, it will afford me great pleasure to offer my services to act as such, and will have placed before the American people any information you desire in aid of your cause. I regret I can not aid you with money, but if you will accept of services, I can be of assistance to you, Señor, in many ways.

In regard to Supreme Court decision you will doubtless be informed before receipt of this letter, but will send you a copy of the decision in full as soon as it is rendered, and will keep you posted from time to time as matters concerning Philippines arise.

When you reply, kindly give me name and address in full. I have been connected with the same political party (Republican) as President McKinley for twenty years, and voted for him for both terms, yet, in common with many other Republicans, have not approved of all the acts of the President, for governing the countries acquired from the Spanish Crown.

Wishing you the compliments of the season, I also pray the richest blessings of our Heavenly Father may rest upon you and aid you and your friends in your cause, and that it may speedily bring peace and prosperity to your land and your people. Upon the enduring foundation of liberty, inaugurated by George Washington and reaffirmed by Abraham Lincoln, that it has pleased Almighty God to bless the people of these United States.

With assurances of highest esteem, I have the honor to remain, Señor.

Sincerely yours——

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. GALLINGER. What is the name?

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the signature to that letter, Mr. President?

The SECRETARY. There is no signature.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question for information. I observe there was no signature to that letter read by the Secretary, and I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if he is at liberty to say whether or not he knows who the man was who wrote the letter. I am not asking his name at this time, but I ask the Senator if he knows who wrote the letter.

Mr. RAWLINS. The correspondence will disclose all about it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I simply asked the question of the Senator.

Mr. RAWLINS. The correspondence will disclose, and if the Senator will pay attention to it he will find out.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am paying very close attention to it.

Mr. RAWLINS. I ask that the Secretary continue reading the correspondence.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading, as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., January 2, 1901.

Señor BUENCAMINO, Manila, P. I.

SIR: Found the opinion or address of the Hon. Benjamin Harrison, the distinguished and eminent ex-President of the United States, was published in full in a magazine (The North American Review), which I send you at once by mail.

It will explain itself and enable you to understand the decision of the Supreme Court when it reaches you.

Now, if the decision of the court is adverse to the view, construction, and application of the law, in the manner President McKinley's Administration has applied it to your country; if you have not already done so, would suggest you call your friends together at once, that are cooperating with you in the formation of a loyal party, for the purpose of setting up a Territorial government, as would be the right of loyal citizens of the United States, under the Constitution of the United States.

I would issue an address or proclamation calling on all your citizens to loyally cooperate with you for such purpose.

Stating in your address—

(a) The futility of any further opposition to the sovereignty of the United States.

(b) The granting of "absolute independence" as a national political issue was dead for the next four years, as the proposition was overwhelmingly defeated by the people at the late election by the reelection of President McKinley.

(c) There would be no change in the political complexion of the two great "parties" in Congress for two years, and very little prospect of any political changes then that would affect the status of the islands.

(d) They would find that "liberty" under the Constitution of the United was a greater and grander "independence," and that it would satisfy the highest aspirations of the Filipino people.

(e) Giving them greater freedom, with a liberal and representative form of government, than "absolute independence" under Señor Aguinaldo.

(f) They would have full control over their domestic affairs through a legislature elected by the people, the only restriction being they pass no laws not in conformity with the Constitution of the United States.

(g) That it would give them a greater "autonomy" than they ever hoped for or conceived of.

(h) That "liberty" under the sovereignty of the United States means "government of the people, by the people, for the people" for the preservation of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

(i) The Declaration of Independence, done by and for the people in the name of Almighty God, guaranteed by "a bill of rights" resting on the Constitution, grants the same "liberty" to the Filipino people that has been the inspiration of hope and incentive of the progress in the cause of the highest civilization as is enjoyed in the land that is a refuge and asylum for the righteous and oppressed of the people of the earth.

The time, place, basis of representation, number of delegates to said convention you can best decide for yourselves better than you could be advised by one without any knowledge of the condition of your former system of government for your domestic affairs.

If convention is properly assembled, you can elect a "delegate" to represent you in the House of Representatives of the United States Congress for a Territorial form of government.

Now, I necessarily leave out many details of the meeting, as in all this I am anticipating the decision of the Supreme Court will be of such a character that you will be "as of right" entitled to Territorial form of government, as men on American territory.

Now, in whatever you do, under no circumstances oppose or permit to be set up any opposition to any of the acts of the Commission sent by President McKinley. As in whatever they do, of any acts you do not approve, you will have the right of appeal by judicial proceedings through Federal courts provided by the Constitution, the judges of which are appointed by the President, when you have been accorded a Territorial form of government, or which can most likely be changed by your own legislature, as most of the acts of the Commission will be of a civil character, though acting in a judicial capacity. In fact, work together with the Commission; let their actions and yours be in harmony, their acts supplementing yours, so your cause can be advanced in every way without prejudice or animosity.

I send you by mail bundle of leading New York and Philadelphia papers, showing the paucity of information regarding your islands, though two of your Manila papers have correspondents in the western part of this country.

In letter sent you a few days ago, Señor, I overlooked to refer to the cooperation of Señor Paterna. I hope and trust you also have the cooperation and support of Señor Salas, who made such a fine impression on the Commission when giving hearings on the "harbor bill," and whose speech I read with much pleasure.

As an illustration of the national life possible to the people of your islands at this the dawn of the twentieth century, I inclose the scholarly and brilliant address in full, delivered by Judge Grosscup, and eminent jurist, at the national conference held in Saratoga, N. Y., August 19, 1898, which I hope yourself and colleagues will carefully read and digest.

I also take pleasure in sending you, Señor, with compliments, a copy of our Constitution, Declaration of Independence, and original Articles of Confederation. [Afterwards sent 10 additional copies.]

And now permit me, Señor, to wish yourself and all your colleagues a most gracious and happy new year, to the end that peace and prosperity may soon be restored to your islands.

Renewing my assurances of highest esteem, I have the honor to remain, Señor,

Yours, sincerely.

JANUARY 10, 1901.

Señor BUENCAMINO, Manila, P. I.

SIR: Permit me to again tender my congratulations to you and your compatriots for your success in agitating and forming a loyal Federal party.

The establishing of a daily newspaper and three weeklies, published in Spanish and Tagalog, in provinces of Pampangas, is a very wise move, but it is also "good politics" to have the support of one of the American papers published in Manila. It would be very much to your interest to make arrangement with one of them, so you will command the support of the Americans and at the same time keep them informed of your aims and aspirations. They would also be copied and published by the newspapers in the United States, which would be of great value to you.

A New York paper publishes: "Señor Paterno and others are seeking to develop two factions in the Federal party." Say to Señor Paterno, it is to be deeply regretted and deplored that any schism or faction be developed at this time. Everything that tends toward factionalism should be kept out of your councils and party in order that you will be as one mind in the building up of a strong, loyal national party, without which very little can be accomplished.

A dispatch from Manila among other things states: "The general municipal elections take place in December."

This will not interfere with your right, under the authority of the Constitution, in agitating for a Territorial form of government, under which Señor Paterno and other Independence Radicals will find full scope for all their abilities. While it is not quite equal in authority to the Federation recently established by Australia, who knows but in the years to come there may not be a Philippine Federation. But, my dear Señor, these things have to grow; it is an outgrowth and visible sign of their advance in civilization, and is not made in a day.

It is not apparent at this time any Philippine legislation will be enacted by Congress at this session, as it is the short and closing session of the Fifty-sixth Congress. The new or Fifty-seventh Congress will be convened December 2, 1901, for President McKinley's new term. In the meantime the cases now before the Supreme Court will be disposed of and the way cleared by their decisions for action by the new Congress after they convene in December, unless called in "special session" after the inauguration March 4.

You will find inclosed a copy of the act of Congress making a Territory of Oklahoma, which was the last Territory created on American soil or territory. Hawaii differed in the fact it was annexed before it was made a Territory.

The Congress in making a Territory of Luzon or the Philippines will no doubt enact such regulations as will meet your conditions.

You will, therefore, see the necessity of having a strong loyal party, so you can send a "delegate" to Washington to represent you, as advised in previous communication, in agitating before the American people and Congress for that form of government, as the "representative" of a people giving allegiance to the sovereignty and Constitution of the United States in American territory.

Sent you by mail bundle of papers, and also inclose some clippings, which you will find of much interest. The papers are mostly supporters of the Republican party. The —— is "independent" in politics, prints the best news without fear or favor, and gives both sides, so that you can form more intelligent opinion of the public questions now before the people.

You will observe, Señor, in the agitation the country is undergoing by reason of cases before the Supreme Court, all citizens, irrespective of party, are actuated by the single desire that justice be meted out to the new territory and people that have come under the American flag, under the laws laid down by the Constitution.

Send you by mail ten copies of the Constitution of the United States and Declaration of Independence, which you will present to your compatriots with compliments. In honor of the birthday, February 22, of the patriot, statesman, and first President of the United States, Gen. George Washington, under whose Administration it was inaugurated, and also of the birthday, February 12, of the great commoner, patriot, and martyred President, Abraham Lincoln, who preserved it.

Renewing my assurance of highest esteem, Señor, I have the honor to remain,

Sincerely, yours.

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is the name?

The SECRETARY. There is no name signed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCOTT in the chair). The reading will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., January 12, 1901.

Señor BUENCAMINO.

SIR: Send you herewith part of the act of Congress (Chap. 162, Fifty-first Congress, sess. 1) approved May 2, 1890, making the Territory of Oklahoma.

As you will perceive, it is a "temporary government," preparatory to becoming a State when it shall have fulfilled the legal requirements.

This need not necessarily be implied in your case, and it will leave the way open for political negotiations with Señor Paterno and other Independence Radicals, so you can all work together in harmony.

There are no doubt some things in the act that will not suit or apply to conditions in the Philippines. My object in furnishing you with a copy is for the purpose of giving you a framework which you can use to frame a law that will meet your conditions.

I have not the slightest doubt it will meet with your approval and fulfill the aspirations of your people for many years.

It is the form of government established by precedent under the Constitution, to which you are in justice entitled, and which the Congress can grant.

It will give you a substantial basis for a national party, and, with the Declaration of Independence guaranteed by the Constitution, a "platform" for your party that will enable you to present a definite form of government to your people.

As stated before, do not oppose the Commission now in Manila, as the municipal governments they are creating will eventually come under the jurisdiction of your legislature when a Territorial form of government shall have been granted.

It will be to the interest of your people to send a "delegate" to the United States as early as possible, as advised in previous communications.

And now, Señor, I feel that I have done all that an humble citizen who loves his country can do, in pointing the way to you to those rights of citizenship which I believe to be the highest and best in the world, to a rightful participation in which under the flag of our country I have endeavored to aid you. I will continue sending the newspapers, and unless something of importance occurs will await replies before sending you any further communications.

I hope and pray that God will crown your efforts with success that the further shedding of blood may be stopped.

Renewing my assurance of highest esteem to yourself and compatriots, I have the honor to remain,

Sincerely, yours.

Mr. CULLOM. Is there any name signed to the communication just read?

The SECRETARY. It is blank.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, is this entirely a no-name series?

Mr. RAWLINS. I will give the name.

Mr. HOAR. I object to the Senator's interpolation.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I addressed the Chair, and supposed I was recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to ask the Senator from Utah whether we are to have the name of this correspondent.

Mr. RAWLINS. Oh, I think so. You will have it, I think. If you will listen to the correspondence it will develop.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have listened to considerable correspondence, and I have been utterly unable to ascertain whether the letters were signed by anyone.

Mr. RAWLINS. In a plot like this it is always better to keep the reader or the hearer in expectation of what is to come. The Senate will get it.

Mr. CULLOM. May I make a modest inquiry, and that is whether what has been read was all written by one man?

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have on my desk here a speech——

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I was about to make a suggestion to the Senator which I think he will approve and will accept, probably. I have here the speech——

Mr. RAWLINS. I decline to yield. I do not wish to occupy unnecessarily the time of the Senate. I insist that the Secretary proceed with the reading.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Would not the Senator accept a proposition——

Mr. RAWLINS. No.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. RAWLINS. I insist that I have the floor.

Mr. HOAR. My point of order is that it is the duty of the Chair to obtain the consent of the Senator who has the floor before any other Senator is allowed to speak. That rule has been violated three times within a short time. I think it is necessary to call the attention of the Chair to it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Does the Senator from Utah object——

Mr. RAWLINS. I decline to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the Senator from North Dakota desired to ask the Senator from Utah a question, and the Chair supposes that the Senator from Utah declines to have the question propounded.

Mr. RAWLINS. I decline to yield.

Mr. HOAR. Let the reading proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will be proceeded with.

Mr. RAWLINS. I send to the desk and ask to have read another letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Copy of translation.]

MANILA, P. I., March, 1901.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor of acknowledging your three letters of the 23d of December and two of last January.

I give you a thousand thanks for the high praises you bestow on the Federal party, and also for the good suggestions you make for the final success of the new policy in the Philippines.

The party has had the good fortune of being acknowledged by the Philippine people up to the present time, so that from the 23d of December last, a very short time, we can count more than 200 committees, and also it has deserved the confidence of the government established here and especially that of Mr. Taft, president of the Civil Commission.

Up to the present time our attention and efforts have been directed, in cooperation with the Government, in pacifying the insurrectos, and I can assure you that fortune has come to the party in this matter, so that they have obtained the surrender of the insurgent general, Señor Martin Delgado, who was operating in the island of Panay and province of Iloilo with his soldiers, and also those of Colonels Intong, of Cavite; Bueg, of Zambales; Angeles, of Hagonoy, and of Simeon Tecson, of San Miguel de Mayumo, with more than 600 guns and munitions of war.

Within two weeks we hope to obtain the submission of Generals Trias, Alejandrino, Lacuna, and other notable insurgents, and I even have hopes in bringing about the surrender of Don Emilio Aguinaldo.

The difficult and still humanitarian policy of General MacArthur and the very popular and friendly policy of the Taft Commission act entirely in harmony with the workings of the party, and so we are going on rapidly obtaining the above-mentioned good results.

After we have effected making peace if not in all at least in the greater part of the archipelago then we will occupy ourselves in forming a policy; but it is impossible to do anything at present until the provincial governments and municipalities are organized.

I wish to say that at present every political formula is not the free vote of the people, and as such it can not serve as a secure basis for a Democratic government or administration.

It is necessary to allow the free action of the Civil Commission of America, and to nourish it faithfully and actively as you advise.

And after the municipalities and governments are established and perform their duties regularly, then the citizens of the Philippine Islands will exercise their votes with entire liberty; nevertheless the importance of the great questions already submitted to the decision of the Supreme Court of the Republic, which you name to me, has not escaped my notice. These affect seriously the Philippine problem, but although I have formed a certain criterion on the above-mentioned questions, it has no other basis but my own personal knowledge, and so no formal expression of a collective opinion can be given.

In conclusion I wish to give you my most heartfelt thanks for your kindness in writing to me and sending me the newspapers, pamphlets, and books, and beg to remain,

Yours, very sincerely, FELIPE BUENCAMINO.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I ask the Senator from Utah, if I may interrupt him for a moment, to hear a proposition concerning this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PETTUS in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes; for a question.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I understand that the Senator who made the objection has withdrawn the same, and I ask the Senator from Utah whether he would not take his original proposition, to have these documents printed without further reading?

Mr. RAWLINS. If it is now in order and the Senate consents to the printing of the letters complete in the RECORD and as a document, I will waive their reading.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I understand the objection has been withdrawn.

Mr. RAWLINS. Then I will ask that, without reading, these additional letters be printed in the RECORD, and that all of the letters, together with the memorial of the Federal party, be printed as a document. If I get consent to that——

Mr. WELLINGTON. I think there will be no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks for the publication of the letters in the RECORD, and their publication, together with the memorial of the Federal party, as a document. Is there objection to that request?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not object; at least, not now. I desire to state, however, that I have on my desk a speech recently delivered by General Funston—a very entertaining document. It seems to me, in connection with the material which the Senator from Utah proposes to have inserted in the RECORD, this speech likewise should be inserted in the RECORD and should also be printed as a document. I ask unanimous consent that it be so printed, in connection with the material which the Senator from Utah has presented.

Mr. HOAR. Let one request for unanimous consent be put at a time.

Mr. RAWLINS. Is there consent to my request, or is there objection? I should like to know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objeciion to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears no objection——

Mr. RAWLINS. Is it so ordered?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, the request——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota will suspend for a moment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I shall not interfere with the Senator from Utah——

Mr. RAWLINS. I desire to know whether the order has been made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order has not been made. The Senator from North Dakota rose, as the Chair supposed, to make objection. The Chair paused to hear him.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am not going to object to the Senator's printing the material which he has presented. I simply wish to make a statement that, in view of some things which have been said to me, I withdraw my request for the insertion of Funston's speech and make no objection to the Senator from Utah having his material printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection on the part of any other Senator? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

The papers referred to are as follows:

MARCH 4, 1901.

Señor BUENCAMINO, Manila, P. I.

SIR: With the passage of the Spooner resolution, with the important amendment incorporated therein through the efforts of Senator HOAR, the Congress closes with that legislation for the "temporary government of the Philippines." It may be interesting to state when your cablegram signed by the directory of the Federal party was published in the newspapers I sent copies of the four communications I had written you to Senator HOAR. Copy of letter addressed to him accompanying them I herewith inclose. Amendment introduced shortly afterwards. How much influence they had upon the action he took concerning the Spooner resolution I am not informed, but as to the vital importance to you of his amendment the newspapers I have sent you will inform you better than I can in a short letter.

I hope and trust the communications, with books and papers, sent you have come to hand, and that you have brought them to the attention of your compatriots of the Federal party, as they are intended for the benefit and advantage of all loyal Filipinos who desire to share and participate in the rights and privileges of Federal citizenship under the sovereignty and Constitution of the United States, so far as my humble efforts can aid you.

I was in error as to your right to elect a "delegate" (should have used the word "representative") at present time, as Judge Taft, if you brought matter to his attention, no doubt informed you that Congress has to enact legislation before you can elect a "delegate" to Congress; but it does not prevent you from agitating for a "Territorial" form of government in accord with the copy of the act of Congress enacted, creating the Territory of Oklahoma, forwarded you, if that is your desire. A Territorial form of government will fulfill the aspirations and desires of Señor Melliza, a copy of whose testimony before the Philippine Commission presided over by President Schurman, at the session held in Manila May 14, 1899, I have before me.

In fact, if it was only fully understood, there is no reason why your friends serving in Señor Aguinaldo's cause should not join and cooperate with you, as they will gain more, as I stated in previous communication, than they can ever hope to achieve under the leadership of Señor Aguinaldo by "insurrection." Right here let me state, in reading the testimony concerning outbreak of insurrection through lack of definite information as to the intentions of the United States by the Administration, your people can understand the situation better when I inform you the President is what one of our leading papers described as an "inveterate opportunist." As a politician he is a "drifter" with the current of the least resistance. As a statesman (who dreamed McKinley would be assassinated?)—well, he is not an Abraham Lincoln, notwithstanding his "benevolent intentions." An eminent jurist in conversation once observed to me, "it was wonderful how much backbone President McKinley had when he was wrong, and how little when he was right," which practically comprehends the whole Porto Rican and Philippine situation. The Porto Rican legislation enacted by the Congress under his Administration is an illustration of that sage observation.

Now, Señor, if you desire Federal citizenship under the American flag, with all its duties, rights, and glorious privileges, you must work, agitate, bend all your energies in solidifying your party, gaining the cooperation and support of your people with that single object, and that alone in view; all others are secondary.

I would impress upon you the necessity of sending two of your ablest men—it is too much work for one man; one to act as secretary—to act as your representatives to Congress and before the American people in behalf of your desire for Territorial form of government, as you will have to make the strongest kind of a political fight in Congress to achieve your desires.

You should send these two men as early as possible, as the committee of Congress will no doubt, upon the rendering of the decisions of the Supreme Court—which have not yet been handed down—draw up plans for establishing a permanent form of government, in readiness to submit to Congress upon its assembling December 1. There is another point to keep in mind, with the retirement of the present Attorney-General, Mr. Griggs. If the decision of the Supreme Court is adverse to the Administration, as many eminent citizens believe it will be, it will be possible for a complete volte face on the part of the Administration, and it will be a great aid to you to have your representatives here in that contingency.

If a "carpetbag" government like Porto Rico received, with no rights as American citizens, is satisfactory to you, you will have to do—nothing, it will come.

The character of governments so far submitted, contemplated, or organized in your islands are simply colonial "carpetbag" governments, with no rights as American citizens.

The amendment to the Spooner resolution that was added through the efforts of Senator HOAR was made solely for the purpose of defeating the schemes of "franchise grabbers and trusts" from obtaining such a control over your political affairs that would forever defeat your aspirations for a republican form of government. As these corporations are dependent upon legislation for their existence and favors, they will naturally be for that character of government they could most easily control, which will give an idea of the vital importanceof Senator HOAR'S amendment, the significance of which your chambers of commerce that protested against it did not comprehend.

I have forwarded the leading papers to you, as also to Señor Arellano and Dr. Tavera.

In conclusion, still advise no opposition to actions of Philippine Commission. If you desire Territorial form of government as an American Commonwealth, like was inaugurated to Hawaii under President Harrison's Administration, it is your right and privilege to agitate for such government, without prejudice to your relations with the Commission. Do not let Commission persuade you to defer agitation. If you have not already commenced, begin at once, so that your political organization be perfected and of sufficient strength to obtain compliance with your wishes and desires, under the decisions of the Supreme Court (which will reach you no doubt before this communication), when Congress takes up the matter for final disposition at its meeting in December, unless called in special session prior to that time. You will be greatly aided in your efforts by pamphlets that are issued monthly by the Philippine Information Society, Boston, giving extracts from official records of everything concerning the Philippines, from time of "insurgent movement of 1896" to present time, for the information and enlightening of the American people.

Do not forget the provisional government that is being organized and set up, by and with the authority of the President through the Spooner resolution, is only temporary, is subject to change by action of Congress, and is final only when Congress finally enacts legislation for a permanent form of government in your islands. The character of that government will depend on the strength and cohesion of the desires of your people.

I hope and pray the grace of God be with you, your president, Dr. Tavera, and all your colleagues, that success crown your efforts in behalf of an enlightened national life.

I have the honor to remain, Señor, sincerely, yours,

——— ———.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., April 1, 1901.

Señor BUENCAMINO.

SIR: Since writing the 4th ultimo, it is with profound sorrow I inform you death has removed General and ex-President Harrison. You have no doubt been informed of particulars by cable in your newspaper. I have forwarded you the leading New York and Philadelphia (Republican and Democratic) papers, which will inform you of public opinion concerning him through their editorials.

These, in addition to the articles he wrote, published in the North American Review, which have been forwarded you (the March number of which is now on the ocean, directed to your president, Dr. Tavera) will give you an idea of the profound loss the peoples of Porto Rico and the Philippines as well as the United States have sustained by his demise at this time. In a letter dated January 10, 1901, which I received from him in acknowledgment of some information I furnished him, he concludes with the sentence:

"We are involved in infinite trouble when we attempt to adjust our relations to our new insular possessions upon any other basis than that they are a part of the domain of the United States and their civilized people citizens of the United States."

What a contrast to the attitude of the present Administration! This explains why and how Hawaii was made an American Commonwealth, while Porto Rico was made a "carpetbag" colonial satrapy, with a semblance of Territorial government without any rights as American citizens, the Administration claiming the right of Congress to make such departure from former precedents by virtue of the concluding paragraph in article 9, Spanish-American treaty, made at Paris December 10, 1898.

The sinister interpretation of the concluding paragraph of that article, by which the promises of General Miles to the Porto Ricans were betrayed, I am of the belief, though without knowledge, has been due more to the retiring gentleman from the President's Cabinet, the Hon. John W. Griggs, who was the President's legal adviser, than to any other member. This is a "trust" Administration. The retiring Attorney-General was formerly a corporation counsel and ex-governor of the State that has legalized the largest number of the most atrocious combinations that ever industrially enslaved a free people or swindled the investors out of their investment.

What more natural than that the laws for the new people which have come under the sovereignty of the United States should be by and for the benefit of "trusts" rather than the people. His retirement, as a logical sequence, is followed by the appointment of another corporation attorney, Mr. P. C. Knox, counsel for the billion-dollar steel trust recently organized. A constitutional lawyer as Attorney-General, like the late Benjamin Harrison, for instance, is not wanted, or the construction of that concluding sentence would not have been so disastrous to the rights of the new insular peoples in its departure from the precedents and practice of the last one hundred and fourteen years. In fact, it would not have been clothed in the language it was unless, indeed, it was so ordered by the President and his Cabinet, with a full knowledge of its effect and subsequent application. It looks very much as if Mr. Griggs was running away from the results of his labor before the United States Supreme Court as Attorney-General, as the sophistries that befuddle the brains of the lawmaking power of a State legislature or a Congress is a very different thing when brought under the cold, searching light and logic of constitutional law of and by the United States Supreme Court.

The capture of Señor Aguinaldo and the gradual suppression of all organized or armed resistance to the exercise of the sovereignty of the United States imposes additional duties and responsibilities on you.

In your relations to the Philippine Commission as a political party these developments bring you to "a parting of the ways."

Immediately upon receipt of this communication I beg of you to call on your president, Dr. Tavera. Request him to at once call your colleagues together, and have drawn up a calm, dignified protest, to be placed before Judge Taft and other members of the Commission upon the inauguration of "civil government" among you on July 1.

I would state—

(a) You have loyally assisted the Commission, etc. (as press dispatches announce you have done).

(b) You have taken the oath of allegiance to the sovereignty of the United States and faithfully obeyed the laws set up by the Commission, etc.

(c) As many other stipulations as events and circumstances will justify.

(d) Conclude with the words:

"You accept the temporary government provided by the passage of the Spooner resolution by the Congress authorizing the President of the United States to set up such government, which is being inaugurated by the Commission, reserving the right of appeal to the Congress of the United States for a permanent form of government, consistent with the rights, duties, and immunities, as citizens of the United States under the Constitution, by reason of giving obedience to its laws, acknowledgment of its sovereignty, and allegiance to the American flag and Constitution of the United States."

At this point permit me to suggest you protest against the adoption or use of any other flag than the American flag. It is very important to you, as it is the emblem of American liberty and citizenship. The proposition to give you a separate flag may be for the purpose of flattering your susceptibilities, but it is the badge of "carpetbag" government without American rights and citizenship. That was the reason why Porto Rico put out so few American flags and so many Spanish flags the Fourth of July following the "carpetbag" enactment "provisional act for Porto Rico," when they became acquainted with its character of "government" after it was inaugurated. Stick to the Stars and Stripes, Señor; it represents honor and justice, with the rights of American citizenship.

I have drawn a framework for your protest which you can fill in better than I with present information. Send me a copy and details of presentation. As Administration maintains such a strict censorship, very little news gets into our newspapers concerning your people or what you are doing except such as pass through their hands, as you will notice by the many papers I have sent you.

I strenuously advise you to take this action, for the reason and purpose that you be not placed in a false position before the people of the United States as accepting the form of government inaugurated by the President through the Commission, with its deprivation of rights as American citizens, to a participation in the rights and duties of an elective republican form of government in the fullest sense, as granted in a Territorial form of government—like was granted to Hawaii—so that you be not fooled with the makeshift that was fastened on Porto Rico.

In your future actions and relations politically with the Commission after inauguration of civil government, let it be on parallel lines rather than together. I caution and warn you to beware of the blandishments and offers of political office from the Administration, when they find you may work in opposition and do harm to their plans. This is the most adroit and subtle political Administration we have had for some time, and notwithstanding its words about "our duty" and its "benevolent intentions," everything bends to political expediency, as witness the Porto Rico tariff bill now in United States Supreme Court for judicial interpretation, and will work your undoing and jeopardize your prospects as future American citizens if you yield your convictions to them. You must use your judgment and keep your hands free.

If you once get them in the "lion's mouth" they will disarm you. In fact, from to-day's dispatches (in New York Times, March 31) indications are they will give Señor Aguinaldo and his following offices (when they take the oath of allegiance) if by so doing it will divide and nullify your efforts in behalf of an elective republican form of government. All the nice things that are being said to you about "rights," "citizenship," "Declaration of Independence," and "Constitution" was said to the Porto Ricans. They were betrayed, and so you will be, unless you effect a strong national party and see that they are carried out by the Congress. If you sup with this Administration, to paraphrase a famous statesman (the Hon. Joseph Chamberlain) upon another occasion, "you must use a long spoon." It is a game of cold-blooded politics, notwithstanding its "benevolent intentions."

Do not set up any opposition to civil government, but redouble your efforts (induce Señor Aguinaldo and his friends to join you) to have politics of your islands solidified for presentation of your claims to Congress in December. In this respect you must work separate from the Commission, and is your only salvation to your successful grant of an elective republican form of government for your islands. There are other matters vital and germane, but can not be taken up at this time until matters now before United States Supreme Court have reached decision. In fact, when decisions are handed down the whole matter may be very much simplified, as I firmly believe it will be, but you will be on safe side by following course outlined.

I send you herewith No. VII, first series published by Philippine Information Society, Boston, Mass. Would especially call your attention to the letter of Lieut. Gen. Sir Andrew Clarke, R. E., C. C. M. G., etc., page 50, to Mr. Forbes. Transmitted by him to Mr. Hay, and by him sent from the American embassy in London to Commissioner William R. Day. Also letter G. S. Clarke to Captain Mahan, U. S. N., page 60. The parallel which they find in the Philippines to Malay States is capable of very easy solution under Territorial form of government, by the extension of the jurisdiction of United States courts, as was done in the enactment Fifty-first Congress, chapter 182, session 1, of "An act to enlargo the jurisdiction of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

You will observe this will enable those portions of your islands to continue their present forms, like the tribal relations of the American Indians—of those of your people who have not yet advanced in civilization sufficient to be granted the franchise or an elective form of government. You understand the Territorial form of government carries with it the jurisdiction of the United States court and can be extended over balance of your group by act of Congress with the divisions of the court stationed at such places as you may agree upon.

This need work no great changes in your civil laws except such as may be necessary to meet new conditions. In fact, some of the original forms in practice when Louisiana was purchased are in use to this day, and the laws of the original 13 States, some of which differ from the other, have been harmonized through the operation of the laws of the United States court, some of the States making new constitutions from time to time irrespective of laws prevailing in other States, except they must conform to laws enacted by Congress for United States court for their guidance and practice.

I withheld this part of the act for Indian Territory, for this very contingency, until the time was ripe to present this information and suggestions to you. It is part of the act creating Territory of Oklahoma, which I have already sent you (section 29 following section 28 of the other portion), and is one act, having been enacted at the same time.

All the suggestions contained herein will in no wise prejudice your standing in law or morals before the American people. It is simply preliminary to the great work of pressing your claims on the attention of Congress, which, at the next session, in December, will be overwhelmingly Republican, which will require singleness of purpose and solidarity of action on the part of all your people to accomplish your desires. As stated in previous communications, all other questions are secondary.

Your religious questions and all other matters will then properly come before your legislature, which will be elective, if you succeed.

What a field is here offered for the furtherance of enlightened, political, commercial, and social aspirations by all the people of your islands. In a participation under the sovereignty of that government which is holding aloft the "torch of liberty" in the march of progress and enlightenment to the oppressed of the world.

May the grace of God be with you, Señor, now the shedding of blood is practically over, in the attainment of your desires.

Renewing my assurance of highest esteem to yourself and all your colleagues, I have the honor to remain,

Sincerely, yours, ——— ———.

P. S.—I have directed Mr. L. K. Fuller, secretary Philippine Information Society, to send you the other pamphlets they have issued from Boston, Mass.

POST-OFFICE, PHILADELPHIA, PA.,
REGISTRY DIVISION,
November 5, 1901.

WM. C. DIX,
130 Maple Terrace, Merchantville, N. J.:

I have to inform you, in reply to your inquiry of July 19, 189-, that the registered letter addressed to Señor Buencamino, Manila, P. I., is reported by the ——— office to have been delivered upon written order of the addressee May 15, 1901.
(62119-F.)

Very respectfully,

THOMAS L. HICKS, Postmaster.
JOHN FIELD, Postmaster.
By D. S. ROGERS, Registry Clerk.

FEBRUARY 22, 1902.

In forwarding this letter took the precaution to register it. No receipt of delivery was received. On July 19 made complaint of nondelivery. On November 5, 1901, received notice as per inclosed from Post-Office Department.

It indicates letter was "held up" and delivered to my correspondent "upon the written order of the addressee May 15, 1901."

It is also in evidence the letter was opened by reason the fact no protest was laid and the further fact the "separate flag," which Administration was getting up, which was published with unctuous detail by the Press, Philadelphia, at the time—of which the late Postmaster-General, Charles Emory Smith, is editor—was dropped, though the Press has never breathed a word as to the reason why.

To the honor of the Filipinos be it said, they preferred the Stars and Stripes, and repudiated the carpetbag badge that was to "benevolently assimilate" them.

As no reply was received to this communication, have been in doubt as to whether the copy "of the extension of the United States court in Indian Territory" was delivered.

JUNE 5, 1901.

Señor FELIPE BUENCAMINO, Manila, P. I.

SIR: The United States Supreme Court has rendered its decisions on insular matters, but the case known as "the fourteen diamond rings," which vitally concerns you, has been laid over until next term.

I immediately mailed you the leading papers (9) of New York and Philadelphia giving report in full. Comment from me would be useless in view of the various interpretations the press of the country has made.

The decisions are so complex, conflicting, and unsatisfactory matter is far from settled. Standing out clear and plain above the uncertainties of whatever construction is placed on the decisions is the fact the Congress has sole authority over dispositon of the islands, as I informed you in previous letters. The President has none whatever, unless he is authorized by the Congress.

The President and his Cabinet have decided (June 4) that an extra session of Congress is unnecessary, and the subtle reasoning by which they arrive at this conclusion is well set forth in the dispatches of Maj. J. M. Carson (who is the Washington correspondent), of The Public Ledger, which is an "independent" journal, and The Press, which is an "Administration organ," whose former editor is the Postmaster-General in the President's Cabinet.

I would especially call your attention to the conflicting statements in the two papers in the information given out, which seems to be part of the policy of the Administration, in its no policy of drifting, drifting, yet more concerned about the effect of Dingley tariff on protected interest of trusts, etc., than on your status as citizens of the United States.

As an illustration of the hypocrisy and stultification of this Administration, it may not be amiss to inform you, though the late Benjamin Harrison, through his message to Congress February 15, 1893, instituted the measures that eventually created a Territory of the island of Hawaii, it was not finally enacted until the election of President McKinley, it having been laid over meantime by the election of the Democratic Administration under ex-President Grover Cleveland.

The treaty ceding the island of Hawaii to the United States was ratified in the autumn of 1897. The act annexing Hawaii was passed by the House June 15; by the Senate, July 7, 1898. The final act enacted creating Hawaii a Territory of the United States, with all the rights of Federal citizenship under certain stipulations, was passed in January, 1899, all of said acts (3) being signed and executed by President William McKinley in obedience to the laws of the Congress. Yet there are many Republicans still in Congress, who howled over ex-President Cleveland's course concerning Hawaii, who are upholding the Administration in its departure from former Congressional and constitutional practice concerning your islands. What hypocrites! They claimed they followed same "practice toward Porto Rico and the Philippines instituted by Harrison toward Hawaii." What imposture on the credulity of the American people! Their very acts which President McKinley signed convict them. Did they call the Hawaiians "Modocs and Apaches," like the New York Sun (Administration organ) did Filipinos? By no means.

I hope and pray you made protest, if civil government was instituted July 1, as advised in letter April 1. As the decisions of the Supreme Court concerning Porto Rico confirm statement in previous letters, Congress has the sole power of legislation for enacting the character of government for your islands, the President being merely an "executive" instead of a "president" clothed with "sovereign power," as many Administration supporters affected and claimed to believe, which the Supreme Court effectually and elaborately denied.

I would sincerely abjure you, that you manifest your capacity to maintain order, by cooperating in the institution of civil government, upholding and obeying the laws thereof, manifesting no displeasure over the change of front on the part of the Administration, as I formerly warned you was possible; but bend every energy to cement your inhabitants in one harmonious, loyal, law-abiding national political organization, keeping that shifty knowledge in mind, so you are thoroughly equipped for a presentation of your case to Congress that will command the support of the just and liberty loving of the American people. Nothing would please some of the Administration supporters better than to have an outbreak in your islands, to give them the chance to say, "I told you so. They are not fit for citizenship."

I am glad to see you are still endeavoring to induce those still in "insurrection" to surrender. It will be to your interest and conduce to your welfare, in the sympathy of the people of the United States, to make every effort to induce the last "insurrecto" to surrender, as it will render work in your behalf easier.

The next duty is to immediately call your compatriots together, have memorial to Congress drawn up, based on stipulations and reasons, as in letter April 1st. Notify every committee, give them a copy of the memorial, and have petitions attached. Have every intelligent, substantial citizen of your islands, irrespective of former opinions, place thereon his signature. You can divide into parties after you succeed in grant of government you desire.

You must attend to this at once, and have memorial and petitions in this country in the hands of your representatives at the earliest moment, not later than thirty days (or November 1), before the meeting of Congress, which takes place December 1.

In presenting scheme for Territorial government, you must agree on a definite plan as to what portion for Territorial and what portions "under jurisdiction of Supreme Court" and as to the boundaries of same, as you will observe in the acts of Oklahoma and Indian Territory.

I would draw plans so as to lay the foundation for a federation of your islands like Australia, at some time in the future, which I believe will eventually be your destiny. I am persuaded you will not desire statehood.

A Territorial form of government, which the Supreme Court in late decision declared Congress possesses the power to give you a form without regard to former precedents, and with all the rights and immunities as Federal citizens, will give you a national life under the inspiration of the Stars and Stripes, that will make your islands the gems of the Pacific in the arts, sciences, and industry, in the advancement and enlightenment of your people.

A gentleman who sent me a Manila journal has not received any for two months, so that I am in ignorance of what has been transpiring in your islands, aside from what has been published in our papers. I would appreciate it very much if you would send me the best American paper published in Manila, with the back numbers from July 1, if you can procure them.

In letter, April 26, concerning Chinese, omitted to say the act of Congress concerning exclusion law applies to your islands, which I think General Otis enforced on assumption of authority through the President as commander in chief over your islands, which, if I am not mistaken, has since been maintained.

At the time this letter will reach you the Fourth of July, celebrating the one hundred and twenty-sixth anniversary of American independence, will have come and gone. I hope before another "Fourth" comes around you will have received a constitutional government, in accordance with your desires.

Who ever dreamed, Señor, that when the bell with the inspiring inscription around the outside near the top—rang out on that eventful "Fourth" in 1776, with its momentous message of liberty, its sound would reverberate in the Philippines?

May God in His infinite wisdom guide and sustain you, that you succeed in attaining the character of government you desire, under the beneficent inspiration of the same bell, to a participation in the same celebration of glorious liberty on each recurring Fourth of July. At some celebration of that anniversary I hope a statue will be erected in commemoration of your patriot, Jose Rizal, on the Lunetta at the spot where he gave up his life in the cause of liberty for his people.

I send you herewith pamphlet which I procured from the superintendent in Independence Hall, which contains a picture of the bell on the second page, precious to every American; also views of the hall, Carpenter's Hall, where first Continental Congress met, and other places of interest in Philadelphia. I also inclose some photographs of bell, of Independence Hall when Declaration of Independence was signed, prayer at meeting first Congress, which I procured from woman superintendent at Carpenter's Hall. Would have sent these before, but held them to learn if there would be an extra session of Congress.

And now, Señor, my efforts in your behalf are nearly done. It will not be necessary to give much additional advice; matter now rests entirely with you and your people.

I have the honor to remain, Señor, sincerely, yours,

——— ———.

JUNE 17, 1901.

Señor FELIPE BUENCAMINO, Manila, P. I.

SIR: The report of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court as given in the various journals sent you no doubt perplex your people quite as much as the people of this country. I inclose you a clear, dispassionate review of the "Meaning of the Decisions in the Insular Cases," by Mr. Edward B. Whitney, New York City, published in the magazine supplement of the New York Times. It is the clearest exposition of those decisions that has been published. The Administration claimed a victory for its contentions before the Supreme Court, yet a careful perusal will disclose the fact, as stated in some of the journals sent you, the court went beyond what the Administration desired or anticipated.

The result being the Congress will review entire matter in its legislation, particularly for the Philippines, which will eventually come before the people for approval at their elections in the future for members of Congress and national election for President in 1904. The relations between the United States and the new insular peoples is therefore foreshadowed to become one of the national issues between our two great political parties.

I also inclose clipping concerning Chinese-exclusion act, which expires in 1902. This matter will also come up for discussion and disposal at coming session of Congress. It will answer inquiry in your esteemed favor of March 9, of the relation and bearing concerning the Chinese in your islands. Would urge speedy consideration of matter, so that whatever relations you desire established between the Chinese and your people should be presented to Congress early, through representative you may send, for consideration at their hands.

I would again call your attention to the small amount of news concerning your people, as to their doings and aspirations, in our journals. Sent you a copy of the June Forum, giving an account of "The Manila Censorship," by Mr. Harold Martin, which will explain matter. You will see why the Army is taking and given credit for the surrender of those who were in "insurrection" and the pacification of your islands. No reference in dispatches is made to your cooperation; on the contrary, the Administration and returning Army officers lead the people to think and believe it is necessary to keep a large force in your islands for the preservation of life, law, and order. The most notable exception in his fairness toward your people is the article by Gen. F. D. Grant in the periodical, Leslie's Weekly, which I have mailed you. If not too much trouble, I beg of you have full account and recital made of all the surrenders your party has participated in and accomplished. Send it to me by mail at your earliest convenience.

The Administration is withholding information of its purpose concerning establishing of civil government in your islands. Their "organs" stated it would be promulgated July 1, but so much doubt has been disseminated there is no certainty. In the policy of drift they are expert and accomplished "dissemblers." Impossible to learn from them what the Administration proposes or purposes doing, notwithstanding they claimed decisions of Supreme Court were in their favor.

With the changes in the superseding of officials by Administration in your islands (notice General MacArthur returns July 1) and consequent doubt you may be in as to relations and policy, never lose sight of the fact your main reliance is in Congress, no matter who comes or goes. The President (as an executive) has no authority whatever beyond what the "Spooner bill" gives him, in his authority over you in your civil relations, until Congress enacts the permanent legislation for your islands.

You thereby see the importance of having drawn up the memorial to Congress, as advised in letter June 5. You should give matter immediate attention, as it will consume much time in procuring the signatures of your citizens to the petition that should accompany memorial, so it will be in this country in time for presentation to Congress when it assembles December 1.

In drawing plan for Territorial form of government, would suggest, in addition to governor and other officials, you make provision for a lieutenant-governor, who shall be a native. Whether your deliberative body shall be a "council" or an elective legislature, you can make provision for the lieutenant-governor presiding over the body you decide on, the same as in our "State" government.

It will give you a direct participation and share in the responsibilities of the government Congress enacts, and under a Territorial form of government will serve as a basis in instructing your people in the duties of an enlightened self-government toward your freedom eventually as a federation like Australia, under the sovereignty and Constitution of the United States, when your people shall have made sufficient advance in civilization to bear and assume the responsibilities and duties of such a government.

I hope I may be spared to witness independence of this character granted to your people, in the providence of God, in the fullness of time, in the setting up of the nation or federation of the Philippines, under the inspiration of the Stars and Stripes. A Fourth of July celebration will then be a celebration of the Declaration of Independence to the Filipinos as well as to the Americans in fact as in name.

Is not this the quality of independence, Señor, to be desired, that will eventually make you a nation even greater than Cuba can ever be and be the gateway of the ideal of American liberty as well as commerce to the nations of the East?

Russia, Japan, and the Philippines, under the inspiration of the American flag and the United States, are the factors that are destined to rule the Pacific and the Eastern markets in the years to come, rather than England, Germany, or France. I can not believe there will be a war between Japan and Russia, though the Tory Government of England fans the fires of discord between them to keep English chestnuts from falling into a Chinese or India fire.

As the historical and consistent friend of America, my sympathies are with Russia and Japan. The day is not far distant when Russia will have a constitutional government by a parliament. And with the awakening to western methods that is destined to take place in China through the influence of Japan, the Philippines will occupy a proud place as a Christian people in the nations of the Pacific, that would seem to usher in the day when it may be possible to exclaim:

"Glory to God in the highest! On earth peace and good will toward men!"

My congratulations to your compatriots, Gen. Mariano Trias for his appointment as governor of Cavite, to Señor Ambrosio Flores as governor of Rizal; also to Señors Arellano, Torres, and Mapa as supreme court justices. Say to Trias and Flores to still continue their affiliation with and support of the Federal party, as I assume they are members, or the administration will cause a schism in your party to defeat your aspirations, as I have warned you.

I would particulary call your attention to the editorial inclosed, by Col. Henry Watterson, of the Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal. Though the Colonel has been a life-long Democrat (a brilliant member of his party), he expresses my sentiments precisely, although I am affiliated with the Republican party.

I await your replies to my communications, to which a prompt response would be appreciated. I beg to remain, Señor,

Yours, sincerely,

——— ———.

MERCHANTVILLE, N. J.

JUNE 22, 1901.

Señor FELIPE BUENCAMINO, Manila, P. I.

DEAR SIR: In the journals and periodicals, daily and weekly, illustrated, sent you recently, are a number of articles to which I would call yourself and compatriots' attention.

The article concerning commerce of Japan in Collier's June 8, by the Japanese representative to the United States; also opinion of Senator BACON, Georgia, United States Supreme Court decisions. The departure of Mr. Paul B. du Chaillu, explorer, writer, and student, for Russia, as set forth on page 2, New York Tribune June 21; address by Wu Ting-Fang, the Chinese minister, to the New York State Bankers' Association at session held in Buffalo, N. Y., June 21, published in full in New York Tribune June 22; and the article on Japan, "A movement to change writing and printing," on page 459, Saturday review of books and art, supplement to the New York Times, June 22, by Mr. Stanhope Sams.

The two items to which I would call your particular attention, is the mission of Mr. Chaillu to Russia and the paper by Mr. Stanhope Sams.

Peering into the future, Señor, in an endeavor to lift the veil of the influence these two events are destined to exert not only on these two nations but indirectly on China, the mind quails in the contemplation. It has been about a year since I wrote to M. de Wollant, the accomplished secretary of the Russian embassy at Washington, advocating and urging upon the officials of his country the very object and purpose of the mission Mr. Chaillu is now en route to Russia to accomplish. The sinister traducing of the so-called "Russian barbarian" is about at an end, and yet it is grievous to learn a citizen, and of royal descent, should be banished to Siberia for presuming to offer a petition for the introduction of constitutional government as the dispatches report June 22, from St. Petersburg, was visited upon Prince Bobrynski.

Constitutional government will come eventually, as it did in Japan, by the sheer force of the logic of events. It is impossible to stifle the aspirations of a nation forever, as the Russian nobles and ruling classes will learn. The American friends of Russia will without doubt hope the petition of his wife to the Czar for mitigation of sentence will be successful.

Of the tremendous departure, in the possible introduction of English as the language of Japan, it would seem too much to hope such a radical change can be brought about, except by very gradual processes that will cover quite a long period of time before it can be said to be universal.

As I wrote you June 17th, Russia and Japan, these two are the coming nations of the future, and side by side with the United States it is a very wise prophet who can foretell the events and possibilities of the future. It is to me one of the inscrutable ways of Providence—the way they are destined and are working together.

In the direct influence the psychology of these events will have on the Philippines the first that will be manifest will be the material.

With the introduction of the American school system your advancement will be rapid, and will require but a few years to see a development so far in advance of three centuries of Spanish misrule you will understand the significance of the remark by the British prime minister, Lord Salisbury, during Spanish war, concerning "dying nations," to which the rulers of Spain took umbrage.

The second result is spiritual. Your advancement will not only be rapid, as stated, but in the uplifting and enlightening of the spiritual forces of your people, it will keep pace with your material development. The ploughshare and the Bible have ever moved together under a free government.

In five years instead of these nations "having no relations with the Philippines," as you feared might be possible, you will be amazed why and how the Spaniards in all those years maintained such a small horizon for the Filipinos regarding the relations, intellectual and material, of the other peoples of the earth. The answer is ready to hand—mediæval oppression and cruelty.

When Dato Rajah Mujdi Mandi Mindoro recently issued his proclamation abolishing slavery, who in this country ever credited so enlightened and quick result of American methods?

It simply proves the universality of the instinct of justice, without which no people or nation can ever hope to spiritual enlightenment or material advancement.

Another result of the course of events in your islands will be the practical reform of the Roman Church. In the moral welfare of your people it must be considered.

The nefarious practices carried on in your islands in its name will be impossible in the future under American government. And yet, though an Episcopalian of the fifth generation in this country, I believe the Church of Rome is to be honored for the part it has taken in the advancement of the human race. Prof. Francis Lieber, an eminent scholar and author of civil law, in a volume written by him published in 1834, credits the Church of Rome with instituting "the theory of the sovereignty of the people," in 1852.

I hope Cardinal Gibbons when in Rome was able to effect an arrangement whereby the Philippines were transferred to the American See, that some of the American clergy may be sent to your islands. Many of them are noble fellows, and a very different code of honor concerning church relations would be very quickly made apparent to your people from that practiced by the Spanish Jesuits. The pace of civilization in the course of human events is now so rapid—the germs of the morrow so quickly turn to the ashes of yesterday—under American spiritual guidance the atrocities formerly prevalent in your islands will soon be relegated to past history.

In the dawn of the twentieth century, Señor, notwithstanding the strife between the various sects, is not the God of Isaac and of Abraham, of the Greek Church of Russia, of the Church of Rome, and of the various Protestant faiths the same God? If standing under a mineret at sunrise or vespers we hear the muezzin's call to the faithful, "Allah il Allah," may we not join in, "There is no God but God," without doing violence to our consciences? Aye, even the God of Buddha or of Brahma is the same God, though the symbols by which they worship Him are not our symbols. In Christ's Sermon on the Mount you will find the philosophy is consistent with the teaching of Confucius and Mencius, though men may differ as to plane and ideals.

Since writing the foregoing notice in the press dispatches from St. Petersburg (June 26), the Czar has decreed a free press. This is a very significant illustration of an advancing Russia, notwithstanding the Sir Claude MacDonalds (British ex-minister to China) and other pessimists of Russian civilization. The dispatch from St. Petersburg to the Lokal Anzeiger, Berlin, "that M. de Giers, the Russian minister to China, will shortly be recalled from China" because of "inaptitude," and the appointment as his successor "of Mr. Paul Lassar, who is an anglophile," if true, is enough to make the "Russian Bear" laugh in his sleeve. The "Russian Bear" is more than a match for "Johnny Bull;" the London Standard recently shrieking, "The Russians have won everything" in China! The disclosures by the British Navy League concerning conditions of the British fleet and the failure of the British army in Africa, reminds me of the wonderful insight and clear-headed wisdom and knowledge Prince Bismarck displayed when he stated, "Salisbury was a lath painted to look like iron."

In the proclamation recently issued by the Secretary of War, Mr. Root, unlike Porto Rico, you are to be honored with a double-headed "carpetbag" government. In the irony of things this is quite consistent with the characteristics of a double-faced Administration, one toward the "trusts" and the other toward the people. Should you notice these distinctions, Judge Taft is expected by his "tact" and "diplomacy" to smooth it over with your people, laying it to the embarrassment created by the Supreme Court decisions, in Administration not being able to carry out its promises. Whereas the truth is the Administration found it necessary to invent the subtle course of action it is pursuing to avert the necessity for an extra session of Congress.

The political campaign for this fall has just been opened in the President's State, Ohio.

This year is known as the "off year" in politics and must not in any wise be considered as indicative of opinion on national issues by your people.

It is the year when both parties "reform" their municipal politics. In Ohio the most prominent issue is "saloon and antisaloon," though Senators HANNA and FORAKER want the issue understood to be "support of the Administration." The significance of the adroitness of this move is understood, in the fact as the President's majority in last election was 49,398 over Bryan, the Administration will claim a victory even if the majority for Mr. Nash, Republican candidate for governor, is cut in half, notwithstanding Ohio is usually counted among the sure "Republican" States. A "Democratic" United States Senator is very rarely elected to represent the State of Ohio. Do not be deceived when the Administration sets up a great shout over elections in the fall, "the Administration has been sustained in Ohio," which will be expressly for Filipino consumption.

The real test of the opinion of the people in this country on national issues will not take place until the autumn of next year, when members of the House of Representatives are elected. That is the true gauge of the opinion and wishes of the American people in national legislation approved or desired. Therefore, I repeat, do not let Administration fool you, but hasten work on petition and memorial, that they be in this country in good time at assembly of Congress.

I congratulate your party on the success you have achieved in the surrender of those in arms against American authority, especially of General Cailles. I hope and pray strife and blood shedding will soon be proclaimed to be at an end. I beg to remain,

Sincerely, yours,

—— ——.

MERCHANTVILLE, N. J.

MANILA, P. I., June 20, 1901.

To Mr. —— ——.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your favor of the 26th of April last.

In reply I beg to make up a résumé of the facts before giving forth my own considerations.

PACIFICATION.

The Federal party, faithfully and actively cooperating in the work of pacification, has succeeded in bringing about the presentation and submission to the sovereignty of the United States Gens. Mariano Trias and Emliano Riego de Dios, who were operating in Cavite; Tomas Mascardo, who was operating in the provinces of Zambales y Bataan; Torres, Alejandrino, Lacuna, Tecson, Tinio, Aglipay (the latter is a Philippine clergyman, who became revolutionary led by his hate to the friars, but not against the Americans), Salvador y Villamor, who were operating in the provinces of Bulacan, Nueva Ecija, Ampanga, Pangasinan, Union, Ilocos Sur, Abra, and Ilocos Norte, with about 4,000 muskets and a large quantity of ammunition.

In the island of Leyte the party has secured the submission of General Mojica, and in the very important island of Panay the submission of Gens. Martin Delgado, Vicente Tullon, Quintin Banderas, and several other chiefs, with about 1,000 guns, and also a large quantity of ammunition.

Without them, without exaggeration, nearly 30,000 persons who lived hidden on the mountains and in the woods have come into a lawful life.

We expect the surrender to-morrow of the famous General Cailles, in the province of Laguna. [Surrendered June 24.]

There only remain, therefore, as irreconcilable General Malvar, in the province of Batangas, with about 1,000 guns (muskets or rifles); General Velarmino, in the province of Albay, with about 300 guns; General Lucban, in the island of Samar, with about 500 guns, and General Maxilum, in the island of Cebu, with few guns, as the American Army has succeeded in capturing General Diocno, in the province of Capiz, and the chief of the revolution, Don Emilio Aguinaldo, in Palan, province of Baler.

The revolution is therefore morally and materially dead, as besides being disarmed it now lacks the organic principle which was represented by Don Emilio Aguinaldo.

THE CIVIL COMMISSION PRESIDED OVER BY MR. TAFT.

This Commission has so far organized about 500 municipalities and about 28 provincial governments, there being little more wanted to have all the towns and provinces of the archipelago enjoying self-government, this being the form of local and provincial government adopted by the Commission in the provincial and municipal codes it has created.

The Commission is engaged in reorganizing the courts of justice, the public officeholders in the civil service, and the public schools in order that the functions of the general administration may be more efficaciously beneficial.

Mr. Taft and his four associates are men of extraordinary energy, as it may be assured, without exaggerating, that from the 1st of September to date they have not let pass one day, one hour, or one minute without being at work.

The party faithfully and actively assists them, accepting their work of reconstruction as beneficial, but by no means definitive.

THE PHILIPPINE PEOPLE.

The people enjoy at present the free exercise of their individual rights excepting that of carrying forbidden weapons. Agriculture, industry, and commerce are recovering life, and the people show a great application to learning at the thousands of schools which the active Superintendent Atkinson has established in all the pacified towns, and especially the English language.

The Philippine people, collectively considered, have a high conception of what is good and evil, of civilization and savagery; therefore the Filipinos are not the despicable beings depicted by General Young in a speech I have read among the newspapers you have sent me, but a moral man who being ill at ease with the vicious lessons received from the Spanish Government, is endeavoring to mend and improve by means of the wise teaching of the United States Government.

The newspapers published this morning a telegram from President McKinley ordering the implantation of a civil government and appointing Mr. Taft civil governor of the Philippine Islands.

POLITICAL CONSIDERATIONS

The Philippine people receive with joy the change of authorities, because the military power is not consistent with self-government and the free exercise of individual rights.

We hope that the civil governor, Mr. Taft, after having organized the municipalities, provinces, judicial district, supreme court, and everything connected with the judicial power, the public schools, public order, and what refers to revenue and taxation, to have a starting point for the future politics of the country; we hope, we will repeat, that he will give his attention to the organization of the general control of the country, unless he confines himself to waiting for the Congress to resolve what the definitive form of government for the Philippines shall be.

Such is the general anxiety at the present time.

The people are suffering from a great paralysis of their activities. It seems that they exhaust all their strength in making war and afterwards in making peace; they desire a rest.

Now their actual occupation is to work in order to earn money wherewith to recuperate their lost strength. Therefore, agriculture, industry, and commerce are recovering life and animation.

Politics seems to even horrify them, and it appears that, Mussulman-like, they expect from Congress either the kindness or the rigor of destiny as regards their future fate.

Such is the situation of the Philippine people—a very dangerous situation, because its present inertness might be interpreted as a consent to a colonial policy, in which case new insurrections are to be feared, because the people hold in horror the colonial system. I have said this very plainly to the American authorities in order to be irresponsible for the calamities with which such an uncertain future as that of a colony is pregnant.

In this critical situation I turn my eyes to the America of 1787, to the legitimate heirs of those who drew up the famous Declaration of Independence, the source of your present happiness and welfare.

I turn my eyes and address my prayers to the Hon. Senator HOAR and his adherents to continue defending our legitimate desire to enjoy the rights and priviliges of American citizenship, the ideal we have bought with the sacrifice of thousands of lives, with our blood, fighting honorably with a courage and heroism that make us worthy of being your fellow-citizens and not your subjects.

I turn my eyes and address an equal prayer to you, with the assurance that you shall soon have in your country a legal representation of millions of my countrymen, who share with me the noble and high aspiration of being American citizens, and who are entitled to a Territorial and not a colonial form of government.

This aspiration not only has for object the enjoyment of those highly democratic rights, but is a forecast that the attainment of such an ideal suppresses any element of secession, and therefore any motives for new revolutions, which are always the accompaniment of the colonies. It is evident that a population of ten millions of inhabitants peacefully assimilated by the United States with ninety (?) millions of rich, industrious, active, and intelligent inhabitants can not fail to progress morally and materially and to attain in ten to twenty years the necessary qualification to be considered as a State of the Union.

In conclusion, sir, I pray you to convey this letter to Senator HOAR, whom we admire and bless without a personal acquaintance, because he has turned to be a true interpreter of our inmost sentiments or of those who entertain our supreme ideal, which is our annexation to the United States.

I thank and bless you a thousand times for your good and honorable intentions, and pray God to preserve your life and mine for a great many years, in order that at some time not far off we may meet on your sacred land of justice and blessed by liberty.

B. S. M., FELIPE BUENCAMINO.

MANILA, P. I., December 13, 1901.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to send you several copies of the message adopted by the great assembly of the Federal party for the purpose of sending to the Congress of the United States.

To this assembly came representatives from all the provincial committees, which in their turn represented the votes of the local committees. Therefore the message can be considered as coming from the majority of the Federal party, which is also the majority of the Philippines.

The message is divided into two parts: First, a petition for annexation and for a form of Territorial government; second, suggestions and recommendations for various evils which afflict the country, some of them old ones and others which are the immediate consequences of the war.

Mr. Paterno was present at the assembly, but upon being asked whether he accepted the platform as a whole said he did not accept the annexation feature. For this reason he considered he could not very well be a member of the party and also, of course, of the assembly.

By reason of having been president of the last Filipino government, Paterno has certain popularity which he abuses in a great measure, thanks to the same liberty which we enjoy under the American Government.

The assembly was very peaceably conducted, except on the one question of the friars, which raised quite a heated argument between two members of the party, Don Miguel Velasco and Dr. Salvador Vivencio del Rosario, both of whom having been won over by the friars in the short space of eight months of peace which we have had in this city.

The friars, my dear sir, have at their disposal here 36 religious centers, including churches and chapels, where they have 200 confessionals and 36 pulpits, which are constantly visited by deputies, both male and female.

They are also owners of 14 convents which are enormous buildings occupied by some 400 Spanish friars, including Jesuits, Benedictines, Dominicans, Augustines, Franciscans, Recolets, Paulines, and Capuchins, of both sexes, and they support a great number of shoemakers, sculptors, silversmiths, embroiderers, and other tradespeople.

The friars are bankers, shipowners, merchants, and proprietors of three-fourths of the buildings of the city.

The friars administer the funds of the so-called pious works, which amount to some $18,000,000 Mexican, and the funds so called of the miter, which amount to some $6,000,000 Mexican.

The friars manage 8 schools founded by private parties with large endowments, and, lastly, they maintain, for the direction, administration, and representation of so many interests, 10 American lawyers and 20 Spanish lawyers, some of whom have recently brought out from Spain 5 Spanish and 2 English newspapers, from which are excluded the very important questions of the ownership of wealthy haciendas and administration of wealthy parishes, and I repeat they are very important questions, because they affect the public order. A friar can hardly appear at any town or place, in order to take possession of any hacienda or parish, before the inhabitants raise a riot and stone him out of the place, as a result of which the American authorities have had to intervene in the town of Calasiao, province of Pangasinan, and in the town of Irion, in the province of Balanga, as you will see in the adjoined circular of General MacArthur, commandant and military governor of the islands.

Such being the facts it will not appear strange that the friars should have been able to win over to their cause two Filipinos, and thus introduce their black hand into the Federal party, but the energy of the assembly and the discipline of the party have imposed silence upon Messrs Velafsco and Rosario, who resigned their respective charges and were immediately replaced by two better persons, who are Messrs. Arsenio Cruz Herreia and Felipe Calderon, the first a prominent lawyer and at present president of the municipality of the city, and the second also a prominent lawyer and chief examiner of lawyers in the supreme court.

Such is this difficult question of the friars, which must be remedied without delay, as it is an active element of disorder.

I hope that you and Mr. HOAR will not abandon us on this occasion, the most critical for a country which is forming itself and desires strongly and sincerely to enter into the North American community.

The political events in this island can reduce themselves to the following terms: Civil personality we have, municipal personality we have, provincial personality we have, but we do not have political personality (citizenship), and for that reason we ask it of the Congress of the United States, to whom is reserved the power to grant it, according to article 9 of the treaty of Paris.

The Taft Commission has worked miracles in establishing the two codes, provincial and municipal, and the more necessary organisms of a civil government, whose law is solely the will of the President of the United States.

It is true that up to the present this will has manifested itself with justice, liberty, and humanity, but it is also true that the Filipino people are justified in not having confidence in personal powers, owing to the sad experience of the past.

The war which is still going on in Batangas and Samar is explained by the fact that Batangas is the heart of the insurrection against American sovereignty, and the people of Samar follow the leadership of those in Batangas.

When you consider Messrs. Mabini, Agoncillo, Dr. Apacible, Illustre, and Sixto Lopez are all natives of Batangas and are upholders of the policy of no concession, you can easily understand why the province of Batangas can be truly called the heart of the war against America.

In my judgment the insurrectos and irreconcilables of Batangas will only cease their foolish endeavors when the Congress has defined the future of the Philippines—it would be better to say, or rather after all the Democrats have ceased to talk of granting immediate independence to the Philippines.

This is so true when you hear that Mabini constantly states "that he will not suffer from his punishment of having been deported to Guam until he sees alongside of him and also deported Mr. Bryan, the chief of the Democrats."

But in spite of the popularity of Mabini and his irreconcilable companions, the truth is that the best and the greater part of the Filipinos are Federals and desire at present annexation as a Territory and later on as a State.

I say this emphatically in order to show that this resolution is due to careful reflection and after due consideration of the past, present, and future of the Philippines, as much as it is possible for the Filipino intelligence to reach, led on by its love for the fatherland and by the sorrowful lessons of vivid reality.

It is certain that the United States is at peace with all the most powerful powers of the East and the West, but it is also certain that the policy of fraternity, equality, and liberty of the United States to-day in the Philippines is very much opposed to that which said powers practice at present in their respective colonies in this section of the extreme East.

Conflict is already noticeable in mercantile affairs, and it will not be long before it will be noticeable also in political affairs, unless the American sovereignty is consolidated on the basis of territorial annexation, which would take away from the foreigners their hopes of new insurrections, at present occasioned by Article IX of the treaty of Paris.

A careful observer, who is also a Filipino, can see these conditions clearly. Perhaps also among the Americans, Mr. Taft and his noble companions can see it also. I speak thus because the majority of the Americans who reside here are allied with foreigners in industrial or mercantile affairs.

It is therefore urgent that Congress should define the future of the Philippines in order that the future should be clearly perceived, and this clear perception would be the best stimulus for the settlement in these islands of good Americans, thus consolidating and guaranteeing American supremacy.

On the question of the friars, I have the honor of submitting to you and other studious Americans the following antecedents:

The friars or religious orders are not dogmatic institutions of the Catholic Apostolic Roman Church, because they do not form an essential part of the ecclesiastical government of the same, as, for instance, the priests, vicars, prelates, bishops, archbishops, cardinals, and Pope do.

These orders can be reformed, and the history of the Church shows us that they have very often been suppressed when they were contrary to the interests of the Church itself.

It is undeniable that the friars deserve the merit for bringing the Philippines into the bosom of Christianity, and for this reason they obtain as a recompense from the Spanish Government, which is one and the same with the Catholic Church, the great benefits which they possess to-day in the Philippines.

But we must consider the civil character and nature of these associations. In the second chapter of the first book and the second paragraph of the Spanish code is defined the difference between associations for the public good and those for private interest.

Both are considered as judicial persons. They can acquire and possess property of all kinds, as well as contract obligations, and also exercise civil and criminal actions in conformity with the law and its statutes, as per article 38 of the said Spanish code in force to-day.

However, the Spanish law makes a difference in the dissolution of such associations, as is treated in article 36.

Those for private interest shall act according to the conditions of their contract of association, as in fourth book of said Spanish code, article 1665 and the following ones.

Those for public interest will act according to article 39, which is herewith copied:

"ART. 39. If owing to the expiration of the time during which they legally enjoyed their powers, or owing to their having obtained the end for which they were constituted, or if it be no longer possible to apply to this end the powers and the means at the disposal of said corporations, associations, and foundations, their property will be disposed of according to the manner prescribed by the laws states of final clauses. If nothing has been previously established to the contrary, these properties or wealth will be applied to those ends for which they were constituted, and in the same region, province, or municipality from which these extinguished institutions derived their incomes."

I underline the words "extinguished institutions" because they are the key to the solution of this so-called friar question.

The whole question consists in finding out if the friars can be declared "extinguished" in the Philippines, because if once "extinguished" they cease to occupy, possess, and administer all the properties which they now occupy, possess, and administer in conformity to the Spanish law. It being then the right of the Government to apply such property to the ends stated in article 39 of the Spanish code now in force.

It is evident that the spirit of the above-mentioned law is that the friars now existing being once declared "extinguished" will not be able to carry out of the country any of their property, and in this they differ from associations for private purposes, for in these last each member retains after their dissolution whatever portion may have fallen to him upon its termination.

Now, then, can the religious orders be considered as extinguished in the Philippines?

I can answer impartially, yes. Because it is now impossible for them to exercise their religious and social duties in any town in the archipelago with exception of the city of Manila.

The towns refuse to have them as parish priests and ministers of the Catholic religion, and energetically reject them as administrators or owners of the large haciendas.

Here in the city they are not persecuted out of respect for the government, who constantly advises the Filipinos to keep the peace and order, and also because they (friars) can count on thousands of persons who depend on them for their livelihood. The proof of this immense hatred which exists between the friars and the Filipinos is the fact the former have all voluntarily confined themselves in their convents within the walled city, thus putting themselves under the immediate protection of the government. They are justly afraid to go more than 2 miles from the said walled city, where they have also large convents.

Another proof of this hatred is the insulting paragraphs which you will find in the journals of both sides, and which you will see in the copies which I send you.

There is therefore no basis for mutual relation of good faith or tolerance between these religious associations and the Filipino people, for which reasons these associations can no longer fulfill their functions here in the Philippines, it being therefore necessary to consider them as "extinguished," in conformation with article 39 of the Spanish code above quoted.

Some say, on the other side of the question, and amongst them is General MacArthur, that the friars are protected by the Constitution of the United States, and especially by the treaty of Paris.

This argument contradicts itself, because, while the Constitution is quoted, at the same time it is disputed "the Constitution follows the flag."

But even if it were true the Constitution is in force now on these islands, it is clear that such a just document can not uphold an association which is impossible and dead, according to the Spanish laws now in force.

Those laws of ours and not the Constitution are those which should be applied to solve the question of the friars, because to act otherwise would be to favor the friar against the interests of the people of the Philippines.

I conclude, dear sir, asking you again and also Mr. HOAR, to whom I would like this letter be sent, asking you to defend us at this critical time, when the whole future of my beloved Filipino people is at stake.

I extend to you my most profound gratitude, and pray God to enlighten the hearts and minds of Congress, and direct it in the course which we ask.

I remain, your very respectful servant,

FELIPE BUENCAMINO.

[Senate Document No. 166, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

PETITION FAVORING SUSPENSION OF HOSTILITIES IN PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

February 4, 1902, referred to the Committee on the Philippines and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOAR presented the following petition from sundry citizens of the United States, favoring the suspension of hostilities in the Philippine Islands and a discussion of the situation between the Government and the Filipino leaders.

To the Senate of the United States:

The undersigned citizens of the United States, deeply anxious that peace may be restored in the Philippine Islands, and that a contest professedly waged in the interest of humanity may not be degraded into an inhuman war of extermination, would lay before you the following statement and petition:

In his first annual message to Congress the late President McKinley said:

"The cruel policy of concentration was initiated [in Cuba] February 16, 1896. The productive districts controlled by the Spanish armies were depopulated. The agricultural inhabitants were herded in and about the garrison towns, their lands laid waste, and their dwellings destroyed. This policy the late cabinet of Spain justified as a necessary measure of war and as a means of cutting off supplies from the insurgents. It has utterly failed as a war measure. It was not civilized warfare; it was extermination.

"Against this abuse of the right of war I have felt constrained on repeated occasions to enter the firm and earnest protest of this Government."

In his special message preceding the declaration of war against Spain in April, 1898, the President spoke yet more strongly, saying:

"The efforts of Spain were increased both by the dispatch of fresh levies to Cuba and by the addition to the horrors of the strife of a new and inhuman phase happily unprecedented in the modern history of civilized Christian peoples. The policy of devastation and concentration inaugurated by the captain-general's bando of October, 21, 1896, in the province of Pinar del Rio was thence extended to embrace all of the island to which the power of the Spanish arms was able to reach by occupation or by military operations. The peasantry, including all dwelling in the open agricultural interior, were driven into the garrison towns or isolated places held by the troops. * * *

"The agricultural population, to the estimated number of 300,000 or more, was herded within the towns and their immediate vicinage, deprived of the means of support, rendered destitute of shelter, left poorly clad, and exposed to the most unsanitary conditions. * * * Reconcentration, adopted avowedly as a war measure in order to cut off the resources of the insurgents, worked its predestined result. As I said in my message of last December, it was not civilized warfare; it was extermination. The only peace it could beget was that of the wilderness and the grave."

Under conditions not differing from those which confronted Spain, and for the very reasons which in her case we held insufficient, the Government of the United States seems to have adopted the same policy.

In the Manila News, an American paper published in Manila, which cordially supports the course which it chronicles, appeared the following statement on November 4 last:

"The transport Lawton returned yesterday afternoon from a two weeks' cruise, touching at Catbalogan, Cebu, Perang-Perang, and Davao. On her outward passage she took 200 Ilocano scouts for the Samar service.

"On the arrival of the Lawton at Catbalogan Brigadier-General Smith had been in Samar about ten days, and his strong policy was already making itself felt. He had already ordered all natives to present themselves in certain of the coast towns, saying that those who were found outside would be shot and no questions asked. The time limit had expired when the Lawton reached Catbalogan, and General Smith was as good as his word. His policy of reconcentration is said to be the most effective thing of the kind ever seen in these islands under any flag. All suspects, including Spaniards and half-breeds, were rounded up in big stockades and kept under guard. Among these were numerous presidentes of some towns on the western coast of Samar, who assisted in smuggling rill to the insurrectos. A number of these rascals were gathered in and made to give up the proceeds of their traffic, amounting to thousands of dollars, which were confiscated."

Samar, according to the American Encyclopedia, in 1881 had a population of over 250,000 persons and an area of over 5,000 square miles. These figures enable us to understand what General Smith's orders meant.

The Philadelphia Public Ledger, one of the oldest and most respected newspapers in Philadelphia, is in political sympathy with the Administration. In a recent letter to that journal from its correspondent in Manila, who is evidently not a hostile critic, occurs the following passage:

"The present war is no bloodless, fake, opera-bouffe engagement. Our men have been relentless; have killed to exterminate men, women, children, prisoners, and captives, active insurgents and suspected people, from lads of 10 up, an idea prevailing that the Filipino, as such, was little better than a dog, a noisome reptile in some instances, whose best disposition was the rubbish heap. Our soldiers have pumped salt water into men to "make them talk," have taken prisoners people who held up their hands and peacefully surrendered, and an hour later, without an atom of evidence to show that they were even insurrectos, stood them on a bridge and shot them down one by one, to drop into the water below and float down, as examples to those who found their bullet-loaded corpses.

"It is not civilized warfare; but we are not dealing with a civilized people. The only thing they know and fear is force, violence, and brutality, and we give it to them.

"The new military plan of settling the trouble by setting them at each other is one that looks promising. We have now sent a thousand Macabebes to Samar to avenge the treacherous murder of Company C of the Ninth Infantry. They are hereditary enemies of the 'Ladrones,' and go forth to the slaughter gaily."

Statements like this constantly recur in private communications from the islands and in the letters of newspaper correspondents. They find a ghastly confirmation in the official reports of Filipino losses, in which the killed many times exceed the wounded; and they are not contradicted. If any official attempt has been made to prevent these cruelties or punish their authors it has not been made known to us. If these charges are not true the honor of the country requires that their falsity should be proved.

The Filipinos have asked us again and again to hear them; have begged that some of their leaders might be allowed to visit the United States and here in person state their position. This humble petition has been denied. We strike but will not hear. Again the words of President McKinley, in his message of April, 1898, about Cuba, seem pertinent:

"My predecessor made an effort to bring about a peace through the mediation of this Government in any way that might tend to an honorable adjustment of the contest between Spain and her revolted colony on the basis of some effective scheme of self-government for Cuba under the flag and sovereignty of Spain. It failed through the refusal of the Spanish Government then in power to consider any form of mediation or indeed any plan of settlement which did not begin with the actual submission of the insurgents to the mother country, and then only on such terms as Spain herself might see fit to grant."

Does not this state our position to-day? Do we not insist on unconditional submission and propose for the Philippines such form of government as we ourselves "see fit to grant?"

Men differ as to whether this country should pursue the attempt to conquer these islands or should leave their people to govern themselves, and upon this point we say nothing now; but there should be no room for difference among civilized men as to the use of torture and other inhuman methods of waging war.

Every American citizen must be glad to believe that his country's purposes are benevolent and that his fellow-countrymen mean to give the unhappy people of the Philippine Islands civilization and good government, but our present methods seem ill adapted to secure the only foundation on which any good government can rest—the contented acquiescence of the governed. Until we can win the confidence of the Filipinos, can satisfy them that we mean them nothing but good, our professions of benevolence fall upon ears as deaf to our words as ours are to their entreaties.

While human nature remains unchanged cruelty begets cruelty and hate, kindness and sympathy inspire affection. Our policy in the Philippines may exterminate the natives, but every day that it continues it plants fresh seeds of undying hostility, breeds wrath and suspicion on both sides, and makes the task of dealing justly with this weaker people more and more difficult. The more we learn to despise and distrust the Filipinos the more we become unfit to rule them. A teacher or a ruler must believe in his pupils or his subjects in order to teach or rule successfully. Is it not time to change our course? It is not for the United States to imitate the practices, the policy, the stubborn attitude which we condemned as barbarous and inhuman when they were adopted by Spain. It was for these things that we took her colonies from her.

We respectfully petition—

First. That an investigation be made in regard to the practices of our army in the Philippine Islands by a committee of the Senate, and that the exact truth be laid before the people of the United States.

Second. That, if these reports are true, steps be taken at once to stop reconcentration, the killing of prisoners, the shooting without trial of suspected persons, the use of torture, the employment of savage allies, the wanton destruction of private property, and every other barbarous method of waging war which this nation from its infancy has ever condemned.

Third. That appropriate steps to be taken at once, by treating with the representatives of the Filipinos in arms, to secure a suspension of hostilities in order that an opportunity be given for a discussion of the situation between the Government and the Filipino leaders, who should be permitted to visit this country for this purpose.

Fourth. That pending the negotiations strict orders be given to the officers in command of our troops to deal with the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands as with persons whom one day we hope to make our friends.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has morning business closed?

Mr. MORGAN. I have been waiting to have action taken on the resolution which I presented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate adopt the resolution submitted by the senior Senator from Alabama?

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER obtained the floor.

Mr. HOAR. May I be pardoned by the Senator from New Hampshire and by the Senate for a moment to make one observation on what has just happened?

Mr. President, I think twenty times in my life, when Senators were presenting matters which were in opposition to doctrines and measures I held very dear and matters for which I personally had no great respect, I have urged upon the Senate that they should adopt the policy, not only as most convenient, but as right in itself, that whenever any Senator rose and said he had something in his possession which he thought ought to be brought to the attention of his associates, relating to public business, and desired to have it printed as a document, that within any reasonable limit of cost it should be done.

Now, it seems to me, without any reference to this particular matter, that the character of a Senator of the United States is a pretty important character in this world. I am not talking about myself. I have got pretty nearly through. But there are men around me who have not got through, who are to hold these places here for many years to come, and when they speak it is a sovereign State which speaks in them.

When my friend the Senator from Michigan, who made this objection, objected, it was Michigan which objected, and Michigan objected to a request made by another sovereign State. I think it is due to the great character of a Senator that when he, being responsible for the character of the document he asks to have printed, says, "I desire to bring it to the attention of my associates here, but I do not care to take the important time of the Senate by reading it, and I ask that it may be printed, so that they can look at it, if they see fit," the Senate should grant that request, entirely independent of its relation or the Senator's relation or any Senator's relation to the particular subject, and that in the end is the view which has always prevailed. Sometimes in the earnestness of political contest objections like this have been made. They have never, with scarcely an exception, been adhered to. I am very much gratified that this one has not been.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL ROCHAMBEAU.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives returning to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the joint resolution (S. R. 68) authorizing and requesting the President to extend to the Government and people of France and the families of Count de Rochambeau and Marquis de Lafayette an invitation to join the Government and people of the United States in the dedication ceremonies of the monument of Count de Rochambeau to be unveiled in the city of Washington.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the joint resolution which has been returned will be indefinitely postponed.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT SAVANNAH, GA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives returning to the Senate, in accordance with its request, the bill (S. 1545) to establish a marine hospital at Savannah, Ga.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill which has been returned from the House will be indefinitely postponed.

PROMOTION OF COMMERCE.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I was unavoidably absent yesterday when the vote upon the ship-subsidy bill was taken, and while the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] announced my general pair with his colleague [Mr. CLAPP], he did not state how either the junior Senator from Minnesota or myself would have voted if we had been present.

I wish to state now, so that it may go into the RECORD, that I understand the junior Senator from Minnesota would have voted for the bill if he had been present. If I had been present, I should have voted against the bill.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS, ETC.

Mr. GALLINGER. If morning business has been closed, there are a few private pension bills on the Calendar and a few bills to correct the records of soldiers, and I ask unanimous consent that they be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I hope we may have a vote.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts whether he wishes to have a vote on the bill this evening?

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have a vote unless there is some Senator who desires to debate the bill further. It has been pretty well debated.

Mr. PETTUS. I do not myself desire to debate the bill, but I supposed others did. This is the bill to which objection was made particularly on account of the conspiracy clause and publication clause.

Mr. HOAR. No; this is not that bill. This is the bill in regard to the President. It has been debated very considerably in the Senate.

Mr. HALE. It is not the conspiracy bill?

Mr. HOAR. It is not the conspiracy bill.

Mr. PETTUS. What is the bill?

Mr. HOAR. It is the bill for the protection of the President of the United States.

Mr. PETTUS. Yes, sir. The third and fourth sections relate to uttering words and publishing words, and Senators made serious objections to those clauses. I was in hopes that there would be a full Senate at least when the vote was taken. If the Senator insists on having a vote this evening, I shall have to resort to another remedy.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, any course the honorable Senator from Alabama will resort to will be proper, I have no doubt. I take that as a matter of absolute knowledge on my part.

What I have to say is that the bill has been very considerably debated; it has been delayed four or five times in order that there might be a full opportunity for consideration; and the last delay was a delay of about ten days, putting it after the ship-subsidy bill. I suppose the Senator has it in mind, probably, to suggest the absence of a quorum, and certainly that would be very proper, especially under the circumstances.

Mr. PETTUS. That is what I proposed. My suggestion had no reference to an adjournment or anything of that kind. Mr. President, I suggest that there is not a quorum in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Cockrell,	Hanna,	Nelson,
Bacon,	Deboe,	Hansbrough,	Penrose,
Bard,	Dillingham,	Heitfeld,	Perkins,
Bate,	Dryden,	Hoar,	Pettus,
Berry,	Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Proctor,
Beveridge,	Elkins,	Kean,	Scott,
Burnham,	Fairbanks,	Kearns,	Simmons,
Burrows,	Foster, La.,	McCumber,	Spooner,
Burton,	Foster, Wash.	McLaurin, Miss.,	Teller,
Carmack,	Gallinger,	McLaurin, S. C.	Vest,
Clark, Mont.,	Gamble,	McMillan,	Warren,
Clark, Wyo.,	Gibson,	Mallory,	Wellington.
Clay,	Hale,	Mitchell,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss this measure at all. I am heartily in favor of the general features of the bill, but I shall be forced to vote against it, because I do not want to reestablish the old sedition laws. If the vote is to be taken now, I shall ask for a vote by yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is as in Committee of the Whole, the Chair will suggest.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. There are certain amendments pending. I do not want to interfere with the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask if any amendments have been formally offered.

Mr. BACON. I have given notice of certain amendments which have been printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "United States," in the first section, line 6, page 1 of the bill, it is proposed to insert:

Because of his official position, or for the purpose of destroying the Government or impairing the execution of its constitutional powers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I should like to make a suggestion to my friend from Georgia, inasmuch as he spoke to me about this amendment before offering it, and I was favorable toward it. Afterwards the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] made a suggestion which has troubled me very much in regard to the amendment, and it was this: Suppose that a would-be assassin should attempt the life of the President and should be successful and accomplish his death, if the amendment is a part of the criminal law of the United States upon this subject and the assassin should be indicted in the Federal court and acquitted, could he be indicted then and tried for murder in the State court, or could he not plead that having been once put in jeopardy he was entitled to an acquittal? Now, there is a very serious question, because, if the amendment should be adopted, every lawyer would see the great difficulty of proving motive in certain cases. It would at best be circumstantial evidence, and every lawyer knows how that can be attacked and overthrown, no matter how strong.

I make this suggestion to my friend from Georgia. I appreciate his argument in favor of the amendment; I appreciate what he has said upon that subject. A man, in attempting to commit a burglary, might kill the President or one of the Cabinet who might succeed him; and yet, under the bill as it now stands, he could be convicted of a capital crime. I must confess there are all sorts of difficulties about this legislation in my mind. I am sorry that I am not competent to the task of trying to make the bill better; but I can not vote for it as it stands, and I do not see how the trouble which I have suggested about the amendment of the Senator from Georgia could be remedied, unless something in a remedial way should be adopted as a constitutional amendment; but how that is to be done I do not know.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to say, in response to the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], that there are two considerations which should not be ignored in connection therewith. My amendment seeks to draw a distinction between, first, one who assassinates or attempts to assassinate the President of the United States because of his official position, or because of a desire on the part of the assassin to destroy the Government of the United States, or to impair the due exercise of any governmental powers; and second, one who attempts such a crime from personal motives. I think the proposition will be recognized by all lawyers, that no Federal statute which imposes a penalty for the assassination or attempted assassination of the President of the United States can possibly be defended as a constitutional enactment unless the assassination is because of the motive indicated. In other words, that an assassination which has been prompted by the spirit of revenge for a private injury would not fall within the constitutional powers of Congress to punish by an enactment; and that, therefore, if it should prove to be the case that it was an assassination prompted by such motive, a statute could not be constitutionally enacted which would reach that case, that being a matter altogether outside of the constitutional powers of Congress.

When I offered the amendment which I had the honor to submit a few days ago on this subject, I called the attention of the Senate to the provision of the Constitution under which the Congress of the United States could enact criminal laws. There are three or four provisions of the Constitution in which that authority is found. There is the authority specified for the enactment of a criminal law in the case of treason, and there is a limitation upon what shall constitute the crime of treason, and also a limitation upon the penalty which shall be imposed upon one guilty of treason.

There is another statute which specifically confers upon Congress the power to enact criminal law for the punishment of counterfeiting. There is another provision which empowers Congress to enact criminal laws for the punishment of piracy upon the high seas and offenses against the law of nations.

Then, outside of that, there is one other provision found in the Constitution of the United States conferring upon Congress the power to enact criminal laws. That authority is of general character, authorizing the Congress to pass all laws which may be needed for the purpose of carrying into execution the powers conferred in the Constitution generally upon the Government of the United States, or upon any department or any officer thereof. From that general power there is properly, I think, deduced the power to enact a criminal law which shall protect any officer in the discharge of his duties and to punish anyone who attempts to interfere with an officer in the discharge of his duty and to punish anyone who attempts to destroy the functions of the Government as they may be represented or expressed through the action of that officer.

This proposed law finds its authority under that general clause. It can not find it either under the enactment with reference to treason or the enactment with reference to counterfeiting or the enactment with reference to piracy on the high seas, and there is no other line or letter in the Constitution upon which the authority can be based, except the general one which I have indicated, authorizing the Congress to pass all laws which may be needful and necessary in order to carry out the powers conferred upon the General Government by the Constitution, or any department or officer thereof. Therefore, it seems to me to follow as a logical conclusion, which can not possibly be successfully disputed, that when we come to speak of the enactment of a law for the punishment of one who shall assassinate or who shall attempt to assassinate the President of the United States it must be within the purview of that general provision of the Constitution, and it must be within the limitation of that general provision of the Constitution.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. BACON. With great pleasure.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think it needs a solitary word in the Constitution to give the nation the right to save its own life any more than it would for you to shoot a man who attempted to stab you.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, I appreciate the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Connecticut; but, in the first place, the President of the United States is not the nation. In one sense he is a citizen; in another sense he is an official representing only a part of the sovereignty of the nation, and not the part of it which the Constitution recognizes as the highest representative of the sovereignty of the nation.

The legislative department is the highest expression of the sovereignty of the nation. The legislative department is recognized by the Constitution of the United States as that which represents most perfectly and, so far as the affirmative power of the Government is concerned, almost exclusively the sovereignty of the nation. If the Senator will take the trouble to refer to the Constitution of the United States, in which there is an enumeration of the great powers which constitute the sovereignty of the nation, he will find that they are, with one single exception, confided either to Congress alone or to the President in connection with the Senate of the United States, and that there is but one single royal prerogative that the President of the United States can exercise alone, and that is the prerogative of pardon. There is not a prerogative known to sovereignty that the framers of the Constitution did not carefully take away from the President of the United States, with that single exception, and confide either to Congress alone or to the President in connection with the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator is right in contending and asserting that the President of the United States is not the sovereign.

Mr. BACON. I simply stated that in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. SPOONER. I know, and it is a pertinent response, and I think an accurate statement. The President of the United States is not the sovereign. He is a private citizen temporarily in public station.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. And charged with the execution of the laws.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. Then, his assassination would not be treason against the Government, would it?

Mr. BACON. I am on another question now, but I shall be glad to take up that branch of the subject at another time.

Mr. SPOONER. This was so nice a place to put the question to the Senator that I trust he will pardon me for having yielded to the temptation.

Mr. BACON. I will state right here, without stopping to argue it, that I can not be misunderstood upon the proposition that the Constitution of the United States expressly intended that no attempt upon the life of the Chief Executive of the nation should be treason. I think there is no question whatever about that.

Mr. SPOONER. I was simply calling the Senator's attention to the fact that he had just demonstrated that.

Mr. BACON. I am very glad to know that I did so. I tried to do it very much more at length the other day.

But I do not wish to be understood in any manner as depreciating the office of President of the United States. It is a great office—one entitled to the absolute respect of every man, whatever may be his political belief or his personal relations or his personal estimate. It is an office entitled to the absolute, unbounded respect and courtesy of every man who owes allegiance to the United States Government because of its high position.

I do not wish to be misunderstood in anything I say in reference to this matter. I am not depreciating the office, nor do I underestimate the gravity of the question as to what should be done to protect the President of the United States from assassination. I do not differ with Senators in the desire to throw around one who holds that office every possible safeguard; and, as I said the other day, I will go as far as the farthest on that subject in the direction that I think to be proper. No man will go farther than I will in the effort to rid this country of those who bring this trouble upon us and who bring our institutions somewhat into disrepute by the fact that it is alleged that those who are enabled by the peculiar character of our institutions to enjoy them take advantage of them to abuse them and to bring about this reproach on free government.

But, Mr. President, I have been diverted by the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] from the informal and calm statement I was endeavoring to make on the legal proposition, trying to rid the question of everything outside of the legal question as to what shape this bill ought to be in if it is to be passed. I think it ought to be framed with very careful reference to constitutional limitations; and, not only so, but with very careful reference to the preservation of the ideals upon which this Government is based, the most fundamental and important of which, in my opinion, is the ideal of the absolute equality of every man before the law, and that there should not be one law for one man, even though he be President of the United States, and another law for another man, even though he be the lowliest citizen of the United States.

Therefore, Mr. President, in recognition of that, I am trying to draw a distinction in this bill between an assassination or an attempted assassination of the President of the United States, moved against him, as it might be moved against a private individual, for private cause, and an assassination such as is attempted and perpetrated by anarchists, not for personal reasons but because of the fact that the person attacked is President, and solely from that fact, because of a desire to destroy the Government or impair the proper exercise of governmental functions. As I endeavored to present the other day, when I was upon the floor addressing the Senate upon this question, there are two distinct crimes and there can be no distinction in the bill except upon the proposition that there are two distinct crimes, that one is a crime against the individual and it is just as great a crime when perpetrated against one individual as when perpetrated against another. One is a crime falling within the classification, as all lawyers know, of a crime against the person; the other is a crime against the Government, because it is an attack upon the President, not as a person but as an official and because he is an official; it is an attack upon the President not for the purpose of injuring the individual, but for the purpose of injuring the Government.

Therefore, I say there are two distinct crimes; and if there is nothing in the constitutional objection which I urged the other day—and I now leave that out of the question altogether for the purposes of this discussion—assuming that it would be constitutional, I say that an attack upon the President may be one crime or it may be another crime. If it is a crime against the person, if it is for the purposes of private revenge, or any other matter outside of his official character, it is a crime which differs not from the crime committed against any other person, be he an official or a private individual. On the contrary, if it is a crime in which there is no personal feature and in which the assassin is moved solely by the purpose to destroy governmental authority and to strike at one who represents, in part, the sovereignty of the country, and who more directly in his own person represents the department of the Government than any other department is represented by any other one person, if it is of that kind it is a distinct crime; and the purpose of my amendment is to differentiate the two crimes, to make this particular crime the one about which there shall be no mistake, which shall fall within the proper exercise of the powers of Congress—leaving the constitutional question out, as I said—based upon the general authority granted in the clause of the Constitution which I have cited, and in no manner concerned with the other crime, which is confined solely to an attack upon the person, regardless of the fact that he is an official.

Mr. President, in endeavoring to draw the distinction between the two classes of crime, I said before that I presumed no lawyer would contend that an attack upon the President which had no reference to his official character, but which was influenced solely by personal motive and against him as an individual, would be a crime which could be reached by a Federal statute. I do not understand my honored and distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to controvert that proposition; but he, as well as the Senator from Colorado, are disturbed by the suggestion—which is certainly a very serious and pertinent one—that a man might be put upon his trial, and if there were a failure to demonstrate the fact in such a way as the law might require that this was a crime perpetrated because of official position or because of a desire to destroy governmental authority, an acquittal would result, and therefore the man could not be thereafter punished.

I have two suggestions to make in reply to that. In the first place, we have now laws upon our statute books which present exactly the same difficulty in theory, but which have not been found in practice to present that difficulty. I cited them the other day in the remarks which I made to the Senate. The particular sections of the Revised Statutes to which I refer are sections 5508 and 5509, and if I may have the attention of my friend from Missouri, as I am answering particularly his suggestion, section 5508 provides:

> If two or more persons conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States, or because of his having so exercised the same—

That is part of the section. I have not read it clear through, as it is unnecessary. The succeeding section is in these words:

> SEC. 5509. If in the act of violating any provision in either of the two preceding sections any other felony or misdemeanor be committed, the offender shall be punished for the same with such punishment as is attached to such felony or misdemeanor by the laws of the State in which the offense is committed.

Under those sections it is frequently the case—and I have had one very noted case in my own practice at the bar—where there has been a murder committed in a State, and the charge was that that murder had been committed in pursuance of a conspiracy which had been entered into by the parties for the purpose of avenging the perpetrator for an injury which he thought he had received from the effort of a party to establish his rights in a case in court. The Senate will see that that was a case where a man was indicted for conspiracy and really tried for murder. Now, it will be noted that in the trial of such a case, when all the evidence is in, if it should appear that while it was true that a murder had been committed, it was also equally true that it had not been committed in pursuance of a conspiracy, of course under the law the man would have to be acquitted, so far as relates to the charge of murder; but yet that does not deter the lawmaker from making a law which presents that difficulty. That difficulty is found to be one in theory only, and not one in practice.

The Senate will see that, if it be true that a murder was not committed in pursuance of that conspiracy, the man ought not to be convicted of that murder in the Federal court, because outside of the particular fact charged of conspiracy it would be a murder over which the Federal authorities would possibly have no jurisdiction. In the same way here, if it be true that the assassination of the President is not committed on account of the fact that he holds that office, and not on account of any desire on the part of the perpetrator to interfere with the functions of government in any way, but that he has been inspired solely by a personal motive, then it would not be within the jurisdiction of any act which could be passed by Congress.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. If a man means to do the thing, means to kill the President of the United States, would the reason he had in his own mind for doing it make any difference in any court in the world in deciding upon his guilt?

Mr. BACON. I think so, Mr. President. I may be in error, but I may cite one or two illustrations, which possibly may suggest that I am not. The President of the United States is human, and he is in a position where he may do wrong. I mean, of course, in his humanity he may do wrong. He may offend in a way that any other citizens might offend, and the act of the man who attacked him might have been purely on account of that fact. The President of the United States might, before he ever became President, have done a great wrong to a man, and that man might, after that person became President, have sought to avenge himself of it. But if it were solely a personal matter, if the Senator goes to the point of saying that in case an official is killed the fact that he was an official gives the Congress of the United States the constitutional power to enact a criminal law punishing it, then, of course, the conclusion which the Senator reaches is a justifiable one according to his premises.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, my question was based exactly on that belief, that if a man willfully and of malice aforethought do an act, he knows what he is doing and means to do it, it is an offense against the law, no matter what was the reason in his own mind.

Now, if any man means to kill James A. Garfield, he, for instance, being President of the United States, his death having the result to interrupt for the time being the action of the Government, so that, until his successor is qualified, there is no pardoning power, there is no power to sign laws, there is no power to give advice, no power to see that the laws be faithfully executed, no power to do any of those things until his successor has qualified——

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator is mistaken in those propositions.

Mr. HOAR. The Vice-President may be in California and have to come to Washington. Now, if we have a right to protect the Government against the doing of that thing by design and of purpose, does it make any difference whether the motive of the man who commits that crime is to hurt the Government or to avenge himself of a private wrong? That is my question. Now,

I understand that that question is directly answered by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. BACON. I rose not for the purpose——

Mr. HOAR. May I read this one sentence?

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator let me make a statement before he does it?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I rose for the purpose not of entering on a discussion at length of this subject, for I have been heard pretty fully, but to answer a suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri, and I was very much in hopes that the Senator from Massachusetts would discuss this question at some length. I have no objection to his reading from the decision, but I do not wish to be drawn into a general discussion which must necessarily cover very largely what I have already said and which would be an injustice to other Senators who desire to speak.

Mr. HOAR. I will confine myself then to this quotation, if the Senator please. This was a case where the defendant obstructed an officer of the United States Government by unlawful acts. He did not intend to obstruct the officer, but he intended to do the unlawful acts, and they resulted in obstructing the officer just as much as this man intends to revenge himself by an unlawful act, but does not intend to strike down the head of government, but does it.

When the acts which create the obstruction—

Says the Supreme Court of the United States, Justice Field delivering the opinion—are in themselves unlawful, the intention to obstruct will be imputed to their author, although the attainment of other ends may have been his primary object.

Mr. BACON. Very well. Then it says that it would be imputed; in other words, it would be the presumption of the law.

Now, Mr. President, to follow the suggestion of the learned and distinguished Senator from Massachusetts to its legitimate conclusion, I make this suggestion, and I will return then more directly to the reply which I desire to make to the suggestion made by the honorable Senator from Missouri. There is nothing in the law or nothing in the office which limits that principle to the President of the United States. There is nothing in the nature of the office and nothing in any constitutional provision which limits to an attack on the President of the United States the principle that an attack on an official is a crime against the Government. If it is true of an attack on the President of the United States it is true of an attack on every other official of the United States, it being a question of degree only. In other words, if it is true that the President of the United States when in office is in the exercise of certain official functions, and that an attack upon the President of the United States and his assassination or attempted assassination to that extent impairs the exercise of the functions of government which are reposed in him, it is true of every other official in varying degree from the lowest up to the President.

There can be no possible escape, it seems to me, from that proposition, and we are entering upon legislation which will extend and expand, and the danger which I suggested the other day will become more obvious when there has been established in this country the principle that those who hold office under the Federal Government are a distinct class, and that there must be distinct laws passed as to them, and that an offense which is a misdemeanor perpetrated against a private citizen is to be punished with death when perpetrated against an official. I say it is absolutely inconsistent with the theory and the institutions of our Government, and I repeat what I said on a former occasion, that the foundation stone upon which rests our entire political fabric is absolute equality before the law.

Mr. President, to return to what the Senator from Missouri suggested, I had called the attention of the Senate to the fact that we now have upon the statute books laws which might cause the exact trouble in theory that this law would. In other words, that where a man has been indicted for conspiracy and murder under these sections of the law, however it may be proven that the murder was committed, yet under this law, if it shall be developed that it was not a murder committed in pursuance of the conspiracy which is prescribed in this law, he could not be convicted of murder. And yet, as I say, I have known of no case where that has been the result. I have known of other cases. I am informed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] that there have been decisions of the Supreme Court to the effect that under such circumstances the trial of a man would not bar a trial in another jurisdiction for the specific offense. I have not myself had the opportunity to examine those cases.

I will not continue on this line, because, as I say, I have already been heard in full. I think this is a material amendment, or should be, to the pending bill. There are other features in the bill, though, which are of more materiality, in my opinion, than this. One is that which I discussed on a former occasion, which includes not only the President and the Vice-President, but every head of a Department, except the Department of Agriculture, and puts them upon a different plane from all other people and all other officials of the United States, and makes that which would be a misdemeanor when perpetrated against the Chief Justice of the United States, or against the Speaker of the House of Representatives, or against any Senator or any Representative, or any judge or any other official in the land, or any private citizen out of the 80,000,000 people, a capital offense, an offense punished by death, if perpetrated against one of the heads of Departments of this Government, the Secretary of Agriculture alone excepted.

If the Secretary of the Navy in his own State is assaulted and it can be charged that the purpose was to commit murder upon him—something, of course, which can not be demonstrated, but which rests within the bosom of the court and the jury—the man who assaults him is tried and is hanged. On the same day another man, under exactly the same circumstances, assaults the governor of Massachusetts, and under the laws of Massachusetts he can only be sent to the penitentiary. That is what this bill is, and not to elaborate that, I say it is an impossibility that I could ever give my consent to a bill which shows such discrimination, not only as to the governor of Massachusetts, but as to any citizen of Massachusetts. In the one case the man who assaults the Secretary of the Navy in Massachusetts is tried in a Federal court and hanged, and in the other case the man who assaults the governor of Massachusetts, or the Senator from Massachusetts, or any citizen of Massachusetts is tried in a State court and if found guilty is sent to the penitentiary, although the circumstances may be exactly the same in each case.

Mr. President, in this particular the pending bill goes farther than any law which ever existed in Great Britain on the subject of treason. The statute of Edward III, which is the great law of Great Britain on that subject, has never been repealed and, with some amendments, is the law to-day, although passed more than four hundred years ago. I am not speaking about whether it is treason or not, but I am analogizing it to a law of treason. When it comes to the passage of a law which shall punish the offense of assassination of the King or the attempted assassination of the King or those who are to succeed him, the statute of Edward III limits it to his oldest son, and if he had a dozen sons the law would not apply to any other one of them, but merely to the King and his oldest son.

Here we are not content with the passage of a law which shall be for the protection of the President of the United States and the Vice-President of the United States and provide for the punishment of one who shall assassinate either one of them or attempt to assassinate either one of them, but we extend this law to every head of a department. We call them Cabinet officers. There is no such officer known to our law, and he is a very different officer from the cabinet officer known to English law; and in so saying I do not depreciate any one of them. We extend it to every one of them. There has been no such law known to England, even. In attempting to protect the chief executive of the nation, it has never gone further than the King and his oldest son, and here we propose that it shall go not only to the President and Vice-President, but that it shall also extend to every member of the Cabinet, except the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. President, I do not wish to be misunderstood, and I repeat what I said on a former occasion, that I do not depreciate the dignity of these officers, although they are statutory officers and not constitutional officers. They are officers designed by the Constitution of the United States to be and to remain statutory officers. I have not here Elliott's Debates on the Constitution, but one who will examine it will see that it is not a matter of inadvertence that they were not made constitutional officers. Within a few pages of the particular part of Elliott's Debates which I read here the other day there is set out the proposition to make the heads of departments constitutional officers, and they are enumerated there, and the Constitutional Convention distinctly, with the matter called to their attention and the proposition made, refused to make them constitutional officers, and purposely and intentionally left them to remain statutory officers.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the Senator deny the power of Congress to provide by law for any proper guard of protection for the President of the United States?

Mr. BACON. I do not, indeed; but I think if the Senator is going to ask me a question he ought to ask it on the particular point I am discussing.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thought I did.

Mr. BACON. Possibly I may have misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator is discussing the point that in order to make a valid law in reference to the killing of the President it must he shaped in such a way as will authorize the judicial tribunal passing upon the question to enter into the question as to the motive of the man who did the killing.

Mr. BACON. With the permission of the learned Senator, he is entirely mistaken as to what I was discussing. I had been discussing that, but had passed from it.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator had passed from it?

Mr. BACON. I was discussing the propriety of extending this law so as to embrace the heads of departments. That is what I was discussing when interrupted by the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator will pardon me for going back to a matter he has discussed, I am very curious to know why it is, if the Senator from Georgia, distinguished lawyer as he is, admits the power of Congress to pass a law providing for a guard of protection to the President of the United States, he denies the power to affix the crime of murder to the act of a man who kills the President of the United States?

Mr. BACON. I will endeavor, as the Senator insists upon it, to answer his question, but I decline to do so while I am discussing another branch of the matter. I am now discussing the question of the propriety of extending this proposed law to the heads of departments. That is certainly not the question upon which the Senator interrupted me.

Mr. MITCHELL. All right.

Mr. BACON. I was about to say that I do not wish to be misunderstood about the heads of departments, either. I am not depreciating them. As I said before, the heads of departments are generally represented by men of the greatest ability and the greatest prominence and the greatest eminence in the country, and they are entitled to all our respects and all our courtesy.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I hope the Senator from Georgia does not intend to include the Secretary of the Interior in that description.

Mr. BACON. I am not speaking of any present incumbents, but I am speaking generally of the offices and of those generally who fill them.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to ask the Senator a question, if he will pardon me, bearing upon the point he is arguing now.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator admitted a moment ago the power of Congress to provide a law furnishing a guard for the President of the United States. Now, I take it, that is upon the ground that he is a Federal official.

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir. I should doubt very much the policy of it.

Mr. MITCHELL. A Cabinet officer is a Federal official.

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the Senator admit that Congress can provide a guard for a Cabinet officer?

Mr. BACON. Certainly, or for the Senator from Oregon, either.

Mr. MITCHELL. I deny that.

Mr. BACON. Most certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I deny the right of Congress to provide a guard for me or for any other private citizen.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Oregon is not a private citizen. He lacks a good deal of it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Where does the Senator draw the distinction, I am curious to know, between the power of Congress to provide a guard for a man because he is a Federal official and the power of Congress to attach the crime of murder to the act of a man who kills the Federal official?

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Oregon has not done me the honor to pay close attention to what I have been saying.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have tried. It may be due to my obtuseness.

Mr. BACON. I am sure the Senator has not done so, as I have stated during the present hour as plainly as I could that waiving the question of constitutionality, if there was power in Congress to pass a law as to the President of the United States, it was an authority which would extend to every official in the United States down to the lowest. Did the Senator hear me when I said that?

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand that.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator heard me when I said that, he could not possibly have justification for the question, for I had stated that if there was power to pass a law with reference to the President of the United States, there would be power also with reference to the head of a department, and I had distinctly stated that outside of the constitutional question which I had waived for the purpose of this argument, it applied to every official of the United States, varying only in degree.

Mr. MITCHELL. That still makes me more curious to know why it is that Congress can not pass a law making it murder to kill the Federal official. What is the difference?

Mr. BACON. The Senator insists upon going back to the other question. I am on this point now, and I am going to stand by it for the present.

I was trying to say that while I did not approve of the law which is applied to the head of a department I was not moved in my disapproval of it by a want of appreciation of the dignity of the office or of the character of the men who usually have filled those offices, and I was about to say that I did not forget the fact, that while it is true that the constitutional convention had not made heads of departments constitutional officers, when the Government came to be organized these positions were held to be of such high importance and great dignity that two men, who probably of all others then were entitled to be considered most eminent among Americans, were called to the Cabinet—Thomas Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator permit me with reference to the question asked by the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if he does not hold that it is perfectly competent for Congress to make an assassination of the President for the purpose of interferring with the functions of Government murder?

Mr. BACON. I do, undoubtedly.

Mr. MALLORY. I inferred from the fact that the Senator did not respond to that part of the question of the Senator from Oregon that he thought differently.

Mr. BACON. I do, outside of the constitutional question as to whether or not an attack upon the President as the Chief Executive can be made a crime which shall be in any respect different from the crime of treason. I am not going into that question, because it is not one which it is necessary for me to determine in reaching a conclusion as to what my position is with reference to the bill. If it is constitutional, the terms and provisions of the bill are such as seem to me to make it improper that it should be enacted into law.

Now, with reference to the interrogatory of my very learned and distinguished friend the Senator from Oregon, for whom I certainly entertain the highest esteem, both personally and officially, I will say that the question which he asked me I endeavored to answer in a speech I made in the Senate some ten days ago, which it took me several hours to deliver.

Mr. MITCHELL. I had not the pleasure of hearing it.

Mr. BACON. I certainly would not impose upon the Senate by repeating what I then said, although it is directly in response to the inquiry now made of me by the learned Senator, and I trust he will not consider me discourteous at all——

Mr. MITCHELL. Not at all.

Mr. BACON. If I refer him to what I then said, rather than undertake to consume the time of the Senate in a repetition of it.

Mr. President, I rose without any expectation of being heard today in response simply to the suggestion of my learned friend the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and I will say to him that I do not regard as the most material amendment that to which he has referred. I think it is an important amendment. It may be immaterial in this consideration that possibly in ninety-nine out of a hundred cases an attack upon the President would fall within the limitations sought to be set up by this amendment. In other words, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred an attack upon the President would be because he is President and because of a desire by the assassin to destroy governmental authority and interfere with the exercise of governmental powers and functions. While I think the distinction ought to be drawn, in practical effect it may not in our future experience amount to one which would practically do injustice in case the amendment was not there.

But there are others which go further, from the fact that they will be of practical, ever-present importance. The one I speak of with reference to the extension of the provisions of this bill to the heads of Departments seems to me to be of vital importance, and it is the beginning of the establishment of an official class in this country which shall be put upon a plane different from the unofficial class, and we shall have laws in this country which do not exist in England or anywhere else, although they have classes in England. They have no law in England by which the great nobility of England stand differently before the criminal law of the country from a private citizen of Great Britain, whether it be as to a crime committed by a peer of England or as to a crime committed against him, except so far as they have the distinction as to the mode of trial that a peer may demand that he be not tried by a jury, but by his peers in the House of Lords, just as one was tried a little while ago on a charge of the commission of bigamy.

It does not do to say that we are going to stop where we are. It does not do to say that the purpose is not to enact criminal laws which shall be different as to simply the heads of Departments and shall not be extended to other officials, because in our own history and experience we have had similar criminal laws in this country which did extend not only to the President and heads of Departments, but included offenses against Congress or either House of Congress—the old alien and sedition laws.

When we once embark upon this new road, when we once establish the proposition that it is a recognized policy of this country that a man who assaults a Secretary of the Navy or a Secretary of the Interior commits a greater crime before the law and is to be punished with a greater penalty than if the same man under the same circumstances assaults a private citizen, then there is no reason why it should not be extended to other officials; and with the constant evolution and change, which a man has to be blind if he does not see, coming over this country, it will be but another step to include another class of officials, and still another, until in this country, where, as I have said, equality before the law is the foundation upon which must rest and has rested our political fabric, we shall have the most dangerous of all inequalities—inequality in the matter of criminal law.

I will not stop to discuss it. The Senators have the bill before them. Let them read the sections which make it a crime to advise the killing of the head of a department or to instigate it, and then consider what may be proven under the general term "advise and instigate," and compare it with the terms in the alien and sedition law, and then try to form a conclusion as to what crimes were sought to be deduced as having been perpetrated under the general term of "advising and instigating." Draw a parallel between that and the prosecutions which were had under the alien and sedition law, where under the general terms the law was made an engine of oppression against those who differed politically from those who were in power, and was not limited to the purposes for which it was professed originally to have been enacted.

I shall not stop to enlarge upon that, because I had the kind consideration of the Senate and discussed it at length on a former occasion. For myself, I repeat that while the first amendment, the one referred to by the Senator from Missouri, important, in my opinion, may not be vital in its operation, there are other features of this bill which are practical, and if it is enacted in the terms in which it is now expressed the time will certainly come when we will eat the bitter fruit of repentance on account of it.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I am exceedingly surprised that there should be this apparent necessity for discussing so plain and simple a proposition. The bill presented for the consideration of the Senate is but the formation in shape of public opinion, which has thrice been aroused in this country by the assassination of our President. It is a well-considered and carefully prepared bill by the leading committee of this body, and the proposed amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, it seems to me, with all due respect to the Senator himself, is uncalled for. He certainly is familiar with the common rule of criminal jurisprudence. He certainly is familiar with the fact that motive may be judged by the action itself.

While the bill prepared by the learned Senator from Massachusetts provides for the death penalty for taking or attempting to take the life of the President, the Senator from Georgia seeks to inject into it by his amendment the chimerical, far-fetched, away-off theory that the President, or some other one who is eligible to become President in case of the death of the President, may be guilty of something as a man, as a private individual—who, as the Senator expressed it, as a human being—that would justify another, or if not justify him, at least reduce the crime. If any man who is elected President of the United States has offended him and should answer with his life, let him demand that life before the people of the United States have called upon him to hold temporarily this great office of power, of honor, and of trust. If during the incumbency of the President of the United States he should so far forget his great office as to give offense by trenching upon the sacred precincts of home, then let that man with the real or imaginary offense be at least patriotic enough to wait until he is divested of the power, until he is divested of the honor, until he is divested of the responsibility as the President of seventy millions of people.

Do not talk to us about the rules that are applied to kings and the first son. If you go to-day into the House of Commons, I do not care who accompanies you, you are searched and examined carefully to see that not only none of the royal blood but no member of either the House of Lords or the House of Commons is going to be subjected to danger by some man who may carry a bomb in there for explosion. The royal family is surrounded night and day. They have at their beck and call not only one but a thousand servants and guards. This Government is different in theory. The President only holds his term of office for four years, and not exceeding eight years.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. MASON. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I simply wish to say, with the permission of the Senator, that I have had the pleasure of visiting the House of Commons at certain times, and I was never subjected to such an ordeal.

Mr. MASON. I had the pleasure of visiting the House of Commons once, and I had to be introduced and to be carefully examined as to my reasons for being there. But it may be that it was on account of my appearance and not because I looked like the Senator from Georgia. [Laughter.]

Mr. BACON. It shows that they did not recognize this doctrine of equality before the law.

Mr. MASON. I will agree that the Senator's mild-mannered appearance would generally admit him almost anywhere. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. President, we hear talk about raising an official class. How unfair is the Senator from Georgia when he says that this law is to protect certain members of the Cabinet and that it excludes the Secretary of Agriculture. Is it not to be the law that it protects those who are President or who may become President in the legitimate line of succession? Is it fair for the Senator to give it here and go to the country that we are passing a law to protect certain members of the Cabinet and to exclude certain other members of the Cabinet? Is it not more fair to say to the people we are simply protecting every man who holds the office of President of the United States, and that we propose to protect him and to prevent what was attempted at the time of the assassination of Mr. Lincoln. We propose to say that not only the President, but the Vice-President and every man who might succeed to that great office in the legitimate line of promotion in case of the death of the President, shall be protected from assassination.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. MASON. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I am sure the Senator does not wish to misrepresent me.

Mr. MASON. No.

Mr. BACON. I had not only no purpose to produce any such impression, but if the Senator will read my remarks in the RECORD to-morrow morning he will see that when I excluded the Secretary of Agriculture I said I believed that under the bill creating the succession, which had been drawn by the Senator from Massachusetts, the Secretary of Agriculture was not included. I did not add what I will now say, that the reason of it was because there was then no such officer.

Mr. MASON. The bill which fixed the line of succession was at a time, as I remember it—and I am only stating it from memory—when the distinguished Senator now in the chair in the case of the assassination of a Democratic President would have become President of the United States, changing not only the Presidency, but changing the whole policy of the Government. If President Cleveland had been assassinated, our President of the Senate, who is now in the chair, would have become President of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. And the Senate could put him out in two minutes and put in another.

Mr. MASON. Yes; and the Senate at that time under the law could have put him out, as the Senator from Massachusetts says. The Republican party, true to its principles of fair play, passed a law of succession which put it beyond the pale of possibility, if the assassination of President Cleveland should occur, to turn his party out of power until it was reached in due course of events before the people of the United States.

Mr. President, this bill provides what has been in the hearts of the people for a long time, namely, that it shall apply not because of the man who holds the office but because of the dignity of the office, and because of the relation he bears to every one of the people of the United States regardless of conditions, and because there is a certain line of cranks who seek notoriety by destroying the life of the leading man in the nation. It is the fact that three great Presidents have been stricken down in this country within my recollection.

It comes from the teaching. The Senator from Georgia complains of advising anarchy. The man or the woman, I do not care who it is, who has the power to advise anarchy and advise murder nine times out of ten are too cowardly to perform the deed themselves, but seek in some weak vessel to find some muddled brain who will carry out the suggestion made by the wickedness of their own hearts.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned I am ready to vote now, as I have been since I came here, and particularly since the assassination of our last President. I am ready to vote now. We tried that case in Illinois. The men who advised the assassination were the men who were punished. They were punished for the advice they gave to those poor and weak and misguided people. The time has come in this country and the people are ripe for this legislation. Justice demands this legislation. It demands that the coward and the sneak who in a dark hall advises a course of conduct that leads to assassination has that assassination in his heart, and he ought to pay the penalty of death when he is guilty of that advice. There is no other protection for us.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. MASON. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not wish to be misunderstood on that point. I have already said, and I will say now very briefly, that my objection to this phraseology is not that it will reach those who have, in fact, advised it, but that it opens a door by which innocent men who have not advised it may be punished, and that the effect of it will be that there will be no newspaper in this country but that its editors or those who control it will be in danger of prosecution for political offenses under the guise of having advised something which they did not have in their minds at the time. It is not because it makes the conviction of the anarchist easy, but it is because it makes the conviction of those who are innocent of any crime easy. That is my objection to it.

Mr. MASON. This bill, Mr. President, seeks only to punish murder or the advice and recommendation of the commission of murder. Section 1 provides that if he "willfully kill or cause the death of the President or Vice-President of the United States or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the President may devolve under the Constitution and laws," then he "shall be punished with death." The second section provides that the attempt to commit this murder "shall be punished with death." Yet the Senator seeks by this amendment to bring in a remote possibility, so that when a man aims his gun at the President of the United States, or the Vice-President, or some man who may succeed him under the legitimate succession as provided by our law, the assassin may go into court and say or seek as a theory of defense, "I did not shoot him to hurt my Government; when I pulled the trigger I remembered a personal grievance, and I sent the bullet crashing through the brain of the President of the United States because as a private citizen he had offended me." The Senator would make a different defense for a man who would destroy the President under a pretense like that. I say that the man who makes that defense is worse, if it is possible, than the brave assassin who goes and strikes the blow at the Government and says, "I killed him because he is President, and not because of the individual."

Ah, Mr. President, the time has not come in this country, and it is a bad time, to fix special pleadings for men who destroy the President of the United States. It is a bad time in his own heart and in his own conscience, if he would stop to think, to arrange for special pleadings and special defense for men who, angry at the Government, seek anarchy instead of law, who seek to destroy all power, who would close the public schools, who would open the jails and mix your children and mine with the outlaws and the thieves of the country, for that is anarchy. Standing under the shadow of the great crime that robbed us of President McKinley. it is a bad time in this bill to fix special pleading for that class of gentlemen who may come upon the criminal docket for trial before the people of the United States, for to kill him or any other President is worse than murder; it is different from murder.

The bill fixes a different rule of punishment, you say. Very well; I am glad of it, and so will the people be. If the Senator from Georgia was stricken down, his family and his friends as well would be injured. But let him call to mind what occurred but a few weeks since when the President of the United States was stricken down. Who was struck? Seventy millions of people, regardless of political differences, regardless of religious creeds. You saw strong men and women standing in the streets with tears in their faces at 2 o'clock in the morning, waiting for news.

I am announcing a different rule. I want to say to the Senator from Georgia, with all respect, that when you assassinate a private citizen you have done all that you could do against your laws and against that citizen and his family and his friends. But when you assassinate the President of the United States—as it was done within the past few weeks—everyone was wounded; it was worse than murder. No man ever had it in his heart to commit a crime like that. It was the ignorance and criminality and weakness of the man who shot the gun and the damnable crime in the heart of the people who taught him to do it.

Mr. President, if the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], in charge of this bill, has found some rule of law that can punish a crime worse than murder, more unspeakable than any crime that has ever been committed against the people, let us accept his bill and pass it, and 70,000,000 of people will say "Thank God, there is another protection against the doctrine of anarchy and the teaching schools of murder." [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must remind the occupants of the galleries that under the rules of the Senate no evidences of approval or disapproval are permitted.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to sum up in a very few sentences the purposes of this bill, which my friend from Georgia does not seem to have comprehended in the same fashion that I do. I suppose that under the Constitution the protection of the United States Government is within the jurisdiction of the United States Legislature and the United States courts.

This is a bill to prevent an interruption of the functions of the Government of the United States by the destruction of its Chief Magistrate and the persons who, under the Constitution and laws, are in the immediate line of succession if there be a vacancy.

There is no doubt that that is a serious injury to the Government. It interrupts or may interrupt for long spaces of time the actual function. If the Vice-President, or whoever is to succeed, be in California, there can be no man pardoned; there can be no law passed; there can be no appointment of an inferior officer whose appointment is vested in the President; there can be no exercise of Executive power to suppress riot; there can be no protection, like that extended in China, to our officers abroad until he can come across the continent and take the oath of office and possess himself of the subject.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HOAR. I do.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Is there any provision in the Constitution or the law that requires the President of the United States to take the oath of office at the capital? May he not take it in California as well as anywhere else?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly; but his functions must, from the necessity of the case, almost wholly be performed at the capital; he must be where the archives are, where the subordinate officers are, and so on.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HOAR. I am going to be very brief, and when I get through I will answer any question the Senator will put, unless he very much prefers to break in now. I am merely stating and not arguing.

Mr. President, not only that, but the effect of such a crime is to interrupt and often defeat great policies which have been agreed on by the people. As has been well said by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], if in President Cleveland's time he had been slain by an assassin, Mr. Sherman, opposed to him in almost every single policy upon which the people had just declared, if they elected Mr. Cleveland at all, would have taken the Executive power. If the first President Harrison had been slain, instead of dying a natural death, Mr. Tyler, who differed with him in regard to Texas, in regard to the National Bank, and various other things, would have come in. So in the case of President Taylor. President Taylor had one plan of dealing with the prevailing discontent between the sections and Mr. Fillmore, as is well known, a totally different one. In every case, with the exception of the last, the old Cabinet has gone out when a new President came in.

Certainly, if anything be within the constitutional power of this Government it is to defend itself against such a blow as that, and it is expedient that the Government should exercise that authority.

The crime of murder may be punished in the States, but in that particular, the gravest single matter of penal legislation which can be conceived under our laws, to leave the punishment, and the mode of trial, and the time of trial with 45 State laws, and to leave the question of the punishment to the discretion in many cases to the State juries and the pardoning power of the State executive, in cases where there is great political strife would be, I submit, very objectionable.

The Senator from Georgia brings up an argument, which we hear all the time when we are speaking of official character, that we are trying to create a class, or that what we do will have the effect to create a class in this country. He holds the old doctrine that one man is as good as another. So he is in the eye of the law. But this is not for the protection of William McKinley or Theodore Roosevelt. It is for the protection of the American people that a function which is to be discharged for their benefit may be uninterrupted and go on in safety and in peace.

Is not one piece of cloth just as good as another? Is not a piece of silk better than a bit of bunting? But when that piece of cloth becomes the American flag it is the one most sacred thing in this world with us. Is it any the less an object of respect when the American people are represented, not by a little bit of bunting, but by the chosen man whom they have selected to represent them for the time?

The Senator says, "But you must find that the motive was to hurt the Government." The answer to that is the answer made a thousand times in every form of legislation whatever and in all criminal law, that when the man means to do the wicked act, means to violate law, then, being sane, he is to be punished for the act, without any regard whatever to his motive. If I mean to slay the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] and my bullet strikes the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], by his side, I am to be punished for slaying the Senator from Utah. In this case the assassin means to strike his blow at the people. The wicked motive with which he may mean to do it may be private revenge, but he means to kill the President of the United States, and he is held responsible for what he means to do, and not for the reason why he means to do it.

That matter is settled in a case which I read to the honorable Senator, whose arguments one after another perish, perish, perish, when the decisions of the Supreme Court are read. The great Democratic jurist, Judge Field, says:

> When the acts which create the obstruction are in themselves unlawful, the intention to obstruct will be imputed to their author, although the attainment of other ends may have been his primary object.

Then the Senator said the other day—though that also disappears when Chief Justice Marshall's decision is cited—that we could not make anything a crime which the law of England formerly made treason because of the constitutional restriction of treason, that it shall be only levying war or giving aid and comfort to the enemies of the country, a charge which could only be maintained on the evidence of two witnesses to the same overt act. Yet the learned Chief Justice said here that these crimes (in 4 Cranch)— > are not to escape punishment because they have not ripened into treason. The wisdom of the legislature is competent to provide for the case.

And so on. Then the Senator from Georgia says that he objects to so much of this bill as would reach the guilty principal who had incited the offense by counseling it, who had instigated or inspired the party, because in that case the bill permits him to be convicted on the testimony of one man as to his language.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me, I never said anything to justify any such construction.

Mr. HOAR. I think the Senator did.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me. I have distinctly stated that my objection was not to the fact that it might reach the guilty, but that it might reach the innocent.

Mr. HOAR. I understand.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment——

Mr. HOAR. I understand. The Senator says that I did not state him correctly, and I think I did.

Mr. BACON. The Senator's words have been taken down, and I think upon examination it will be found that practically I have stated them correctly, and that he said that I objected to the instigator being found guilty because it might be upon the testimony of one man.

Mr. HOAR. Exactly.

Mr. BACON. If he instigates it, I would not care whether he is found guilty on the testimony of one witness or a dozen witnesses.

Mr. HOAR. I understand.

Mr. BACON. The danger is that a man who is innocent may be proven to be guilty on the testimony of one man.

Mr. HOAR. Exactly.

Mr. BACON. That is a very different case.

Mr. HOAR. There is no difference, in my judgment, between the Senator's statement and mine, but I will take the Senator's own statement, as I ought in all propriety, of what he meant. He is not willing to have a law passed which shall make the instigator punishable, as this bill would punish him, because of the danger that innocent persons may be convicted upon the testimony of a single witness as to their language.

The answer to that proposition, Mr. President, is that that is the rule of law and of evidence in this country in regard to every offense whatever, except the single offense of perjury, where, of course, if there is but one witness for the Government, it is simply one oath against another—the oath of the man charged on one side and the oath of the witness on the other—and the special constitutional offense of treason. Incest, murder, burglary, parricide, or matricide may be charged against a man everywhere, and he may be convicted on the testimony of one man of the crime if the jury believes the witness. It is the universal rule of law. Now, why is it that, never having lifted a finger during his long public service to moderate or qualify this rule of evidence in regard to all the other offenses, the Senator suddenly discovers that, in regard to this offense against the whole American people, not usually committed in the corner, he wants a special rule, not of law, but a special rule of escape, devised for the particular criminal who has struck at the very heart of this country.

Before I pass from this point I will say that over every man accused of crime, of this, as of every other, are spread the great defenses of trial by jury, the right to meet his witnesses face to face, the defense by counsel, and the presentation of the grand jury, so that 35 men have to consider the case, and a majority of 23, being 12, and 12 others, being unanimous, must believe him guilty beyond reasonable doubt.

Mr. President, in general, that mechanism gets at the truth everywhere, especially in great State trials. Does any man believe that there is any serious danger to the great newspapers of this country, or any one of them, with the whole editorial fraternity—who have more of esprit de corps than any other profession in the country—coming to the rescue of the man wrongly and oppressively charged, being convicted by a jury misinterpreting honest and innocent language, or of taking the editor, not in his capacity as editor, and reporting his language by a single witness? Why, Mr. President, practically those things are seen through. You do not get 12 men, taken by lot from the jury box, to agree to punish men capitally or otherwise severely in such cases.

But, I repeat, why is it that for the one offense of murdering the choice of the American people, or inciting men by the coward who incites them in a cellar, but does not come out into the daylight with courage to do the deed, the Senator from Georgia is so eager that he spends two or three hours in trying to get us to devise for such a man a method of escape that is not open to the man who kills his mother, who murders his child, or who poisons the well of his benefactor?

Mr. BACON. Do I understand the Senator to suggest that I have been trying to devise a way by which one who instigates such a crime can escape?

Mr. HOAR. The Senator objects to a law for the punishment of the instigation of that crime, that it will allow a man to be convicted on the testimony of one witness.

Mr. BACON. If he is innocent.

Mr. HOAR. That it will allow him to be convicted.

Mr. BACON. The Senator must not misrepresent me to the extent that he has done. I supposed that so absolutely unjustifiable and inexcusable a suggestion would be limited to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. I did not suppose that the Senator from Massachusetts would participate in it.

Mr. HOAR. I submit to the Senate, who heard the remark and who heard both of us—I am not dealing with the Senator——

Mr. BACON. The Senator seems to be.

Mr. HOAR. As an individual. I am dealing with an argument. I agree with the Senator from Illinois when he said that the appearance of the excellent and bland Senator from Georgia would let him into the House of Commons when nobody else could get in, and when the Senator from Illinois could not get in. That countenance, that face—

> Would let him through St. Peter's gate,
> When sad-eyed martyrs had to stand and wait.

[Laughter.]

But I am not saying anything personal to the Senator. I am dealing with an argument, and I say again that the argument that this particular provision punishing the man who is charged with and who is guilty of the offense of inciting or instigating the murder of the President ought not to pass, because a man may be convicted on the testimony of one witness——

Mr. BACON. Because an innocent man may be convicted.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; an innocent man, then.

I say that that argument applies to every crime in the calendar, save constitutional treason only and perjury, which stands on its own ground. The matricide, the paricide, the man who poisons the well, the man who murders a child, the man who publishes a foul libel, who stabs the reputation of his neighbor, may be convicted on the testimony of one witness. Innocent men are absolutely safe, because under our system of jury trial innocent men can not get convicted. An innocent man is not convicted once in a thousand times; an innocent man is not convicted once in a hundred thousand times. So, if we were to amend this law as the Senator would have it, and make it what my honorable friend from Georgia says it ought to be, by making two or more witnesses necessary to conviction, we would only be providing a method by which a hundred guilty men would escape by a mere suggestion that some innocent man may be otherwise in danger, when no innocent man will be in any possible danger from an American jury. In the cases which are to be left to the States, if the Senator has his way, there will be but one witness required to convict. That is what I say.

Mr. President, I do not want to detain the Senate with this subject. The American people think we ought to have a law which will more effectually protect the President of the United States. According to statistics, which I have here and which have been prepared by an eminent judge of the circuit court of the United States, there have been within a generation or two 55 attacks on the crowned heads of Europe. Only 5 of them succeeded. Within the same period there have been 4 attacks on Presidents of the United States, and 3 of them have succeeded—75 per cent in one case and about 9 per cent in the other. Now, is there not something wrong with our law?

I think a great deal of the proposition of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], which forms the latter sections of this bill, that there shall be some responsible person to provide in proper cases for the protection of the President. There is not anybody now to do it. The secret service is not competent, in my judgment, to that duty.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HOAR. I do.

Mr. CARMACK. I will ask the Senator a question. The Senator spoke of the fact that three Presidents have been assassinated, and suggests that that is an indication of the fact that there is some fault in our law. Does the Senator think that if the law he now proposes had been on the statute books from the foundation of the Government it would have saved the life of a single President?

Mr. HOAR. I do. I think it would have saved every one.

Mr. CARMACK. I would like to know the Senator's reason for that belief.

Mr. HOAR. This proposition is not to surround the President with a guard in uniform and armed, with the beat of drum and the blare of trumpets. It puts upon a high official of the Government who has under him men in the habit of commanding men, among whom are officers and soldiers trained to quick action in time of great danger and grave responsibility, the duty of seeing that there is about the President, whenever he is in danger, men who may not be at all known to the public who are to protect him, and whose failure to protect him will be to the disgrace and dishonor of the official chargeable.

Would Booth ever have gone into the box where Abraham Lincoln was gazing at the play in a theater, have locked the door after him, drawn a pistol, destroyed that beloved life, and stopped the beating of that heart which was full at the moment of kindly feeling toward those of his countrymen to whom he had been opposed in war, or sent a bullet into that brain which was busy with nothing except plans for their welfare and benefit? If there had been such an arrangement as this bill proposes, would a man have come up to Andrew Jackson on a steamboat and attempted his life? The attempt was unsuccessful, but it was because Jackson was a great soldier, accustomed to exactly such things, and he defended himself against that assassin. Does anybody believe——

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, right in that connection may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. HOAR. I think I had better finish this sentence, or I may lose the thread of it.

Mr. BATE. I was going to suggest to the Senator, with his permission, simply this: When General Jackson was assaulted and he pursued his assailant and caned him, suppose the man should have turned around and killed Jackson while he was striking him, that would not have been murder in the first degree; but under this bill, had it then been the law, he would have had to die for it.

Mr. HOAR. Is not that altogether foreign to the particular sentence I was uttering? It has nothing to do with what I was saying, but applies to some other part of the argument.

Mr. President, I say again that that man would never have got close to Andrew Jackson if there had been detailed by the Secretary of War men, in citizen's dress and unknown, prepared for his defense. Would anybody have ever come up behind James A. Garfield, as he was starting on that errand with the cares of State laid down, and presented a deadly weapon close to his back in the crowd at the depot if this bill had been in force? Would anybody have got up to McKinley without being seen, pistol in hand, and, if one story be true, with hand swathed with a handkerchief, which concealed his weapon—though about that I am not sure?

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. At any rate, three of these four attempts would have been absolutely impossible if this bill had been in force.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I suppose the Senator has been referring to section 7 of the bill. I should have no particular objection to that section, especially if it were in a separate measure, and for that matter, I think the President of the United States should have ample power——

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to yield to any question which relates to the point; but when a Senator gets up and asks me to stop in the midst of a somewhat brief and impassioned sentence and interrupts me to say that he has no objection to something in a separate bill, I do not think it is quite within our rule.

Mr. CARMACK. I will not interrupt the Senator any more.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator desires to say anything further in regard to that point, or wishes to call my attention to anything that I have omitted about this particular matter, I will yield with great pleasure.

Mr. CARMACK. I thought the Senator had completed that particular part of his statement, or I should not have interrupted him. I shall not interrupt him any more.

Mr. HOAR. I will yield to the Senator. I have forgotten what I was going to say now.

Mr. President, I like our method in the Senate of colloquy on important points. It brings out more light than set speeches, and I certainly do not wish to decline to be interrupted for any purpose; but when I am dealing with one point, and especially when I am half through a sentence, it throws me off my line of thought to be interrupted.

Mr. CARMACK. Well, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. HOAR. I will; certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to beg his pardon, but I will say to the Senator that I was not guilty of interrupting him in the middle of a sentence. He had completed his sentence, and I had every reason to believe that he had completed his statement in that particular branch of his argument before I addressed the Chair and received permission of the Senator from Massachusetts to interrupt him. I did not interrupt him in the middle of his argument, nor do I think I interrupted him in the middle of his statement.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator interrupted me by saying that he was in favor of a particular section, especially if it was in a separate bill. That was the purport of his remark. Now, how that relates to anything I was saying or how it is connected with anything I was saying or had just said, I can not see.

Mr. CARMACK. If the Senator will permit me, it related to it in this way: I had asked the Senator whether, if this bill had been a law, it would have saved the life of any President of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. I think so.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator made a reply which, I think, referred entirely to section 7 of the bill. I asked him if that was what he had reference to in stating the provision which he thought would have saved the lives of the three Presidents who were assassinated. I asked him if that section 7 of the bill was what he had reference to; and I said I had no particular objection to that section as a separate measure. The rest of the bill, I thought, would be entirely ineffective, and would have been if it had been the law of the land from the foundation of the Government.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think without these last sections the rest of the bill would probably have protected either of the Presidents who have been assassinated; but I do think that, as a measure of proper legislation for the future, it will be a great additional protection and security. I think in a time of political excitement, like that which existed when John Wilkes Booth assassinated Lincoln, if the fact had been that the President happened to be away from the seat of government and he was in a State where the intense political excitement prevailing would have seriously affected the prisoner's chance of escape, that chance of escape would have been a great encouragement.

Mr. CARMACK rose.

Mr. HOAR. I will yield as soon as I have said one other sentence. It is perfectly notorious that there were many persons in this country, in the North, who sympathized with Booth. I am not saying a word about any State that had taken the Southern side in the civil war; I leave that all out. In the North, in Massachusetts, in my own immediate neighborhood, there were persons whose names might have got into a State jury box who felt a very considerable sympathy with that crime. There were not many, but there were some. One case comes to my recollection which you remember undoubtedly, Mr. President, where it turned out that a person appointed to be recording clerk in the House of Representatives was proved to have named his son, shortly after the assassination of President Lincoln, John Wilkes Booth. So those things exist, and wherever human nature remains unchanged they will continue to exist, and I believe it will be a great additional safeguard in the future to have the punishment, the pardoning, the trial, and everything connected with such an an offense, so far as the guilty is to be brought to punishment, in the hands of the Government of the United States.

Now I will yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CARMACK. If I understand the latter part of the Senator's argument, it is based upon distrust of the power and willingness of the States to protect the life and person of the President when he happens to be within their borders.

Mr. HOAR. Not at all. When the Senator says "the States" he uses a very general and broad term. It is based on a distrust of the public sentiment in some special locality in the country in time of high political excitement such as generates these crimes. I should not put it exactly in that way. I think the Government, with whose interests in lawmaking we are charged, would do better to have this matter in its own hands than to leave it to others.

Mr. CARMACK. With the permission of the Senator, I should like to ask him if it would not be just as likely——

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], to whom I am indebted so often when constitutional questions are up here, calls my attention to what the Supreme Court of the United States has declared:

> If the General Government is powerless to interfere at once for their protection—if their protection must be left to the action of the State courts—the operations of the General Government may at any time be arrested at the will of one of its members.

That is the decision in the Nagle case.

Mr. CARMACK. I should like to ask what was the point in that case?

Mr. HOAR. It was the Nagle case. The Senator knows all about that.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. HOAR. The Nagle case is the case of the officer who interposed when a murderous attack was made on the venerable Justice Field.

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly; I remember it.

Mr. HOAR. Justice Field had been struck on the head by a man, a giant in size, and as the next blow, which probably would have been fatal, was about descending, a person charged with his protection shot the ruffian and saved the life of the venerable magistrate. I suppose many persons believe that the law which protected that official in that act and saved the inexpressible and unutterable outrage upon our highest judicial tribunal would itself very likely not have been declared justifiable by a local tribunal if the trial had been there. However that may be, I do not know. I suppose the courts of California are courts of very high authority. But it was a very doubtful question indeed, about which even the Supreme Court was divided.

Now, Mr. President, I did not mean to talk to this extent, but I do think, and I believe the American people, North and South, East and West, think, I believe the large majority of the Senate think that the matter of protecting the United States Government is a constitutional duty resting upon us, upon whom, as we all admit, rests the constitutional power, and without disrespect to the Senator from Georgia, I do not find, in the argument he has stated, good reason why we should not exert it. This bill is the best that the Committee on the Judiciary has found itself able to prepare. I dislike very much to have a great measure of this kind passed by a mere party vote, and I would cheerfully accept any reasonable amendment, like inserting the word "murder" where we now say "killing," or any provision in accordance with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado, or I think possibly of the Senator from Tennessee, providing that a man may be convicted of manslaughter or of assault with intent to kill; I have it from a Senator in his own handwriting on my desk. I will cheerfully, with the consent of the Senate, accept such an amendment, but I appeal to the Senate not to let this occasion go by without doing what we can to add further security against this great public danger, and not to let this question be determined by a party vote.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from Maine will let me say a word in response to some things somewhat personal to myself.

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator, though I desire to make that motion very early.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I would not trespass upon the Senate at this time but for certain things which were said by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] which were certainly very personal to myself. The debate upon this bill is certainly entitled to the very serious and very calm consideration of the Senate. It is a bill in which the injection of personalities has no excuse, especially in the absence of any provocation.

Mr. President, my position in regard to this matter could not possibly be misunderstood. When I had the honor to address the Senate upon the subject on a previous day I began what I then had to say by stating the fact that in the presence of the great crime which had been committed in the assassination of President McKinley, and in the presence of the great indignation of the American people on account of that crime, it required something of resolution to oppose any bill the purpose of which was avowed to be to prevent the recurrence of such a crime.

I went on to say not only that, but to speak of the feeling that had been aroused by reason of the personality of Mr. McKinley, who had been so foully murdered. I went on further to speak of my personal attachment to him. I said in my place in the Senate that while belonging to a different political party from him I had ever received from him the utmost kindness and the most unvarying consideration. I went on to say that I regarded him as the most amiable and the most courteous and the most agreeable man I had ever met in high station. I went on to deplore the fact of his loss, and I said I regarded it as a national calamity.

Not only so, but so far as there was ability in me I expressed my utter abhorrence and my detestation not only of the crime and not only of the criminal, but of those who instigated the crime, and I said then as I have said to-day that I would go as far as the farthest in the effort, by all legitimate means, not only to prevent the crime, but to destroy and drive from our midst those who made that crime possible. I said, if I can recollect the words, that I would wish to destroy them as I would wish to exterminate a den of rattlesnakes. There could have been no doubt in the mind of any man as to the position I occupy on that subject.

What does the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] say to-day, Mr. President? The Senator from Illinois, possibly forgetting the high arena in which we stand, in the face of such declarations from me, went on to speak of it in the most earnest manner as if I were a defender of anarchists, and in terms spoke of me as trying to devise special pleading for the defense of anarchists, and that in order that they might escape.

I want to ask is there a Senator on the other side of the Chamber who knows me and who heard what I said who believes that to be true? I will go further. Is there a Senator who believes that the Senator from Illinois believed it to be true when he said it?

Mr. MASON. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. If no Senator believes it, and if no Senator believes that the Senator from Illinois believes it, I am willing to leave it with him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. I was unfortunately absent and I do not know what the Senator refers to. It was something I said.

Mr. BACON. I said this, Mr. President. I supposed, of course, the Senator knew what I had said in the Senate. If he did not, he certainly was inexcusable for making any charge against me without first knowing it. I said that the Senator had practically spoken of me as defending those who had murdered the President, and that he in terms said I was endeavoring to invent special pleas for the protection of people who would murder the President; and as the Senator says he was not present, I will say that I then asked if there was a Senator on that side of the Chamber who believed that of me—not on this, but on that side—and I added the inquiry, was there a Senator there who believed that the Senator believed it to be true when he said it?

Mr. President, I know I have grave defects; I possibly lack a great many things which it would be greatly to my advantage to have; but I think I may say in the presence of those who have been associated with me here that I am honest in the expression of my convictions. Furthermore, Mr. President, I think I may claim this virtue, if virtue it be, that I am prepared to say what I believe, even though it may not be good policy to say it, and even though it may sometimes be in the face of public opinion.

Mr. President, things which I say I believe are things in the maintenance of which I remain firm and unchanged, and I do not cower before power anywhere, nor do I change my opinion or abandon my position because it may be to my advantage to do so.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I was not here during the whole of the argument of the Senator from Georgia, but as I came into the Chamber his question was exceedingly personal to myself. He raised the question as to whether I believed to be true what I had said. I certainly not only believe it to be true, but I state again the proposition. The Senator from Georgia very well knows that I could not reflect upon his integrity; he knows me too well, and he knows the personal feelings that exist between us. What I did say—and I do not allow him or any other gentleman to question my good faith in it—was that the amendment offered by him, whatever his intentions may be, is a basis of special pleading for men who shall be caught in the act of attempting to take the life of the President or one who may succeed to that office. Let me read his amendment as it is written here in substance.

The bill presented provides the death penalty for the man who takes the life of the President of the United States, and we will see whether this amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia is not the opening of a door for special pleading. Here is the amendment in substance:

> If he kill or cause the death of the President or Vice-President of the United States because of his official position, or for the purpose of destroying the Government or impairing the execution of its constitutional power.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. MASON. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I would never question the right of any Senator to criticise any amendment offered or any language used by me so far as to speak of what the effect of it is. That is the right of every Senator. But the Senator, if he will examine his language in the RECORD, went far beyond that. I do not object to the criticism of the Senator as to the legitimate effect of anything I may say; I could not possibly assume to object to his right to do that; but if the Senator will examine the RECORD, he will find that he applied it to me personally and said that I was endeavoring to accomplish that purpose. That is a very different thing.

Mr. MASON. I do not say that the Senator is endeavoring from any motive that is not as praiseworthy as any motive that ever actuated any gentleman, but I say he is so endeavoring by this amendment. Can I in that manner reflect in any way, directly or remotely, upon the intention or the honor of the Senator? What I said was that the Senator's amendment—and certainly the Senator and I will not split hairs and we will not stand upon formalities in this body—if adopted, is the open door for special pleading, and that a man, to use a common, everyday expression, when he aims a gun at the President, would say: "I did not wish to kill him as President. I was shooting at him as an individual." It is a distinction and a difference absurd in law and worse than nonsense when it comes to be weighed by men of affairs. I characterized the amendment and not the Senator.

I say again this is not the time to delay this legislation. This bill ought to have been passed the day after the death of Abraham Lincoln. Another argument came when Garfield was assassinated; and if we needed another thing to stir the American people so that even this body can be moved to express the will of the people, it was when McKinley was assassinated, and the time is not now—I speak of the amendment and not of the Senator—to open the door for special pleading and special defenses for the man who attempts the life of the President, attempts the life of the Government. It is merely dodging the issue; it is rather pettifogging than trying the case upon the broad questions of law. I say the bill is good as it is, and the American people to-day, if they could express themselves, would be thankful indeed if the Senate would pass this bill through the efforts of the Senator from Massachusetts to give us a chance to vote upon this legislation.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, earlier in the day I sought to obtain recognition for the purpose of making some reply to the constitutional arguments submitted the other day by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] against this bill. At the suggestion of the Senator in charge of the bill, that he is likely to secure a vote upon it, I refrained; and if the Senator thinks he can obtain a vote this afternoon, I do not desire to delay it a moment, but if the bill is to go over I should like to submit a few observations.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire whether there is any other Senator on the other side of the Chamber who desires to speak upon the bill?

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], who to-day is in Baltimore necessarily on account of his eyes, has something to say. I am so informed by his colleague.

Mr. HOAR. Then perhaps the Senator from Wisconsin will take the floor now and yield for a motion for an executive session.

Mr. SPOONER. If that is agreeable, I will do it. I desire to speak briefly upon the question.

Mr. HALE. Whichever the Senator from Wisconsin desires—to go on to-night or to-morrow?

Mr. ELKINS. Can we not have an executive session?

Mr. HALE. Several Senators ask for an executive session. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 19, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate March 18, 1902.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 18, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the correction of the RECORD of January 30. It is a small matter.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state wherein he desires a correction?

Mr. DINSMORE. On January 30 I introduced in the House a petition from certain citizens of Carroll County, in the district which I represent in Congress, asking for the relief of Capt. George E. Gaddy and Capt. Gillum Hopper and the officers and enlisted men of their companies of the Arkansas State Militia in the civil war. In the filing of this petition the Clerk committed an error, and noted it as follows:

By Mr. DINSMORE: Papers to accompany House bill for the relief of Capt. George Gady's company and Capt. Gillum Hopper's company, militia of the State of Arkansas—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. Speaker, I offered this petition as in duty bound, for I hold that no member has a right to refuse to his constituents the right of petition given to them by the Constitution; but I did not accompany the petition with a bill. I had not introduced any bill prior to that time, have not since, and have no purpose of doing so; and, as disclosed by the RECORD, no bill of that kind has been introduced in the House. I desire that the RECORD be amended to conform with the facts.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction of the RECORD will be made in accordance with the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas.

ELECTION AND QUALIFICATION OF DOORKEEPER.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Frank B. Lyon, of the State of New York, be, and he is hereby, chosen Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the late Hon. W. J. Glenn.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. If the Doorkeeper-elect is present, he will step forward and take the oath of office.

Mr. Frank B. Lyon appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate concurrent resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HEATWOLE], chairman of the Committee on Printing, asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will now report to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 18.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 19,000 copies of the general summary entitled "Review of the World's Commerce for the year 1901," of which 3,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 10,000 for the use of the Department of State; and 11,000 copies of Commercial Relations of the United States for the year 1901, including the General Summary, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 for the use of the Department of State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if there is a report accompanying this resolution?

Mr. HEATWOLE. There is.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. A written report?

Mr. HEATWOLE. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I should like to have the report show the cost of this printing.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have it read, or incorporated in the RECORD?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If there is a written report, I simply wish that it be printed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

Your Committee on Printing, having had under consideration Senate concurrent resolution No. 18, authorizing the printing of the general summary entitled the "Review of the World's Commerce for the year 1901," and also Commercial Relations of the United States for the year 1901, including the general summary, recommend that the same be agreed to.

The Public Printer estimates the cost of these publications at $1,995 and $12,100, respectively.

The resolution was concurred in.

INTEROCEANIC CANALS.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I am further directed by the Committee on Printing to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a Senate concurrent resolution, with amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 copies of Senate Report No. 1, from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, 2,000 for the use of the Senate and 3,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

The report was read, as follows:

Your Committee on Printing, having had under consideration Senate concurrent resolution No. 7, to print 5,000 copies of Senate Report No. 1, from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, recommend that the same do pass with the following amendments:

In the second line (engrossed copy) strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

In the fourth line strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "one."

In the fifth line strike out the word "three" and insert the word "two;" so that the same shall read as follows:

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 copies of Senate Report No. 1, from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, 1,000 for the use of the Senate and 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives."

The Public Printer estimates the cost of this publication at $845.

The SPEAKER. This is a privileged report, and the question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HEATWOLE, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the two resolutions were agreed to was laid on the table.

JACOB L. HANGER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3690) for the relief of Jacob L. Hanger, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment, and ask a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following managers on the part of the House: Mr. PARKER, Mr. MONDELL, and Mr. JETT.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12346.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12346, being the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12346.

Mr. HEBBURN. I rise, Mr. Chairman, now to make my annual contribution to the literature upon the river and harbor bill. I confess that I have a miscellaneous assortment of emotions. First. I am satisfied that my colleagues would not be content if I should omit to discuss this bill, and I will not deviate from a habit that dates back twenty years. I recognize the utter futility of anybody saying anything in opposition to a river and harbor bill. I used to think years ago that all efforts in that direction were futile at a time when the pork in the barrel was limited to $8,000,000. How utterly impossible opposition is when the pork has grown to $60,000,000. Again, I find now in this bill something to commend, a rare thing in my experience. I think that that grows out of the fact that we have at the head of this great committee, for the purposes in view, an almost ideal chairman; one whom I believe is striving to secure public interests rather than private; one who is looking to the welfare of a great nation and to the promotion of its commerce rather than to the election of A, B, or C to seats upon this floor. [Applause.]

Again, I find that there are retrogressions in this bill that are highly commendatory—that in some respects I feel the committee is now on the back track. I notice that in reference to one of the chief wasteful expenditures that the committee has announced itself in no uncertain terms. For eighteen years this bill has apparently looked forward to the improvement of the navigation of the Missouri River; and right here I want to call attention to the delights that come to men who can at last say "I told you so." For eighteen years I have been engaged in that exercise, and now comes the fruition. I have taken the liberty of saying heretofore that the ideas of improvement of the Missouri River for purposes of navigation are absolutely chimerical; that it was forbidden by nature; that it was forbidden by the whole trend of modern commerce and commercial growth, and yet we have gone on until $8,000,000 have been expended under the direction largely of a Commission; and to-day the committee come in and, as I understand by a unanimous report, dissolve the Commission and abandon the hope of bettering the navigable character of the river. Hope! Ah, no!

For hope means desire and expectation, and I think there never has been a member upon that committee so incapacitated from holding a seat in this House as to expect that the Missouri River can be improved for navigable purposes. They have determined—and I want to call attention to this matter only in the hope of inspiring the thought in some men's minds that perhaps the reform in the committee has not been complete, and that in other directions they may be still pursuing a will-o'-the-wisp—I want to call attention to the fact that they have discovered that the whole commerce on a stretch of that great river, a stretch of more than 500 miles, is now 263,000 tons, 218,000 of it being sand and other building materials, carried upon an average a distance of less than 2 miles, and leaving 44,000 tons a year to be carried on that great stretch of river.

I have made a rapid calculation, and I find that the Government of the United States has paid, supposing that traffic of 44,000 tons has been continuous during the seventeen years of appropriation, $8 a ton for every ton that has been carried upon that part of the river; and that the Government could, by rail, have carried it all the whole distance of 500 miles and saved to the Treasury $4,000,000. In commendation of the committee, I want to say, after seventeen years of effort, they have gotten their eyes open at last, and have concluded that that kind of wasteful expenditure no longer shall continue, and have abrogated the Commission.

I am sorry that the committee have not extended their inquiries with the same minuteness to the Mississippi River and its improvement. They do not tell us just what has been been expended upon this great stream, and yet I remember a few years ago, when I last investigated, we had already spent $95,000,000 upon improvement of the navigation (so called) of the Mississippi River. I think it largely exceeds up to this date $100,000,000, and except that the jetties—a wise improvement, markedly beneficial—except for them no man can show that there has been one iota of improvement in the channel that is to be navigated of that great stream.

I remember that a few years ago the President of the United States congratulated this Congress in a message upon the achievements of the Mississippi River Commission. As I now recollect, he stated that the Commission in the improvement of the channel at that time expended $19,000,000, and at Plumb Point, perhaps it was, they had secured an increased depth of 1½ inches, and, on another reach, something slightly in excess of 2 inches. I am glad to know that, with reference to this body, the committee has taken the back track, and they now insist that all the expenditures of this Commission shall first be revised by the Secretary of War and by the Chief of Engineers, a step in the right direction, and a step I hope to be followed by others until the progression shall annihilate this useless adornment to our Blue Book, as they have the Missouri Commission.

I tell you, gentlemen, that while we have been making this expenditure, all the time the commerce on these streams has been diminishing, and is now next to nothing. That kind of navigation is at war with this age. In times past it was desirable, but there is no comparison now with its desirability at the time it was begun, for now there are 200,000 miles of railway in the United States. Did you ever stop to consider the wonderful capacity of a double-track railway of the most improved character? There is a railway now, across the State of Illinois, recently improved until its grades are but 20 feet to the mile and its curves but 1 degree. An engine will carry from the city of Burlington to the city of Chicago 1,800 tons of live freight in ten hours' time, at a total cost for power of merely moving the freight of 3 cents a ton for the whole distance.

The cheapness with which an improved railway under the most favorable conditions can now carry freight in inconceivable. In my judgment, if the same expenditures had been made in the improvement of the railways of the United States as have been wasted in the river and harbor bill, results infinitely more desirable could have been secured. Freight rates on rivers, notwithstanding our expenditures, are going up instead of going down, while railway rates are constantly on the decline. When we began this system thirty-five or thirty-seven years ago, railway freights were three times higher in the United States than they are to-day. River freight is going up and the railway freight is going down. I remember in one of the discussions here a gentleman from Missouri insisted that the improvement of the Missouri River was a corrective and a restraint upon the railway charges. We did not have before us then the details which the chairman of the committee has now given us. What corrective influence was there in this movement by river of 218,000 tons of sand a distance of 2 miles upon railway freights in the United States?

Here we have an illustration of the New York Central road by the side of the canal. The freightage upon the canal, relatively and comparatively, is constantly decreasing, while the traffic of its great rival has constantly increased.

But aside from that there are some observations that I think are timely, even with regard to this bill, improved, as I confess it to be, and giving promise of still further improvement. I believe that this committee, wise as it is, is laboring under a mistake in regard to the improvements of great harbors. You are starting upon a plan of improvement that, in my judgment, will never end. You are adopting the size of the steamer or the ship as your standard of capacity of your harbors rather than compelling the naval architect to conform his ship to your harbors. Let me illustrate: Here in New York we had a depth of water admitting the passage of ships drawing 30 feet. A vessel was put upon the stocks that could draw 34 feet. No one had ever reached New York of that draft, but at once the delegation from New York insisted that the harbor should be deepened to 40 feet, and the compliant committee agreed. And I think that we are now deepening a channel to 40 feet—2,000 feet wide and in length 8 or 10 miles.

Mr. REEVES. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. REEVES. I would like to correct one statement of the gentleman. The committee which he has seen fit to call a "compliant" one did not make any provision for a 40-foot channel at New York, but did provide for a 35-foot channel.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then I am corrected to the extent of 5 feet.

Mr. REEVES. And another body over which we have not control, insisted on the depth being 40 feet.

Mr. HEPBURN. And you complied?

Mr. REEVES. In the course of "give and take," as the gentleman has so often done, we complied.

Mr. HEPBURN. Ah! That is, they took all and you gave all. So then the channel is to be 40 feet deep, and the committee did comply. At all events that work is authorized; the excavation of the soil or rock 30 feet under water to a depth of 10 feet for a width of 2,000 feet, and perhaps 10 miles long. I can not compute its cost; possibly the gentleman can.

Mr. REEVES. Yes, sir; if you desire me to do so. It is estimated to cost $4,000,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, yes.

Mr. REEVES. The work is under contract at that figure.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does the gentleman believe that that will be its cost?

Mr. REEVES. I believe it will be done for that, or less than that, as the work so far as it has progressed indicates.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then you have more faith than I; that is all.

But that would not be a very serious thing—$4,000,000 or $40,000,000 (the latter being the figure which I estimate) is not an impossible thing in a Government like this. And if we had but one great commercial port it would not be so bad. But here came Boston at once. It would never do to allow Boston, the city of learning, the home of literature, the pride of all the Americas, to be eclipsed by a lot of traders down in New York, and it must have its 40 feet. But the committee was not so compliant in that case. I use the word "compliant" with the utmost respect, and am sorry that the gentleman from Illinois used it a moment ago with an emphasis that indicated displeasure at its use by me. I did not intend any reflection upon the committee. I was simply certifying to the amiabllity of those gentlemen, chiefly of the handsome member from Illinois. [Laughter.]

Mr. REEVES. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. REEVES. I congratulate the gentleman at this last moment upon his accurate judgment. [Laughter.] But I would like to suggest to him the question, What would he do with the 20,000,000 tons of freight at Boston? Would he provide for its transportation in the most economic way at the necessary expense, even though large, or would he cripple that commerce and at once increase the cost of transportation to consumer and producer alike by not doing it?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, it is not for me to answer that question, but for a student like my friend.

Boston, however, had got along tolerably well for a great many years—constantly asserting, when not absolutely modest, her supremacy in trade as well as in everything else. But I am troubled about this: Philadelphia will want her 40 feet. Why, you are not going to discriminate against her in favor of New York and Boston? And then Baltimore will want her 40 feet. No vessel has ever reached Baltimore that drew more than 30 feet, perhaps. Then will come Charleston and Savannah and Mobile and New Orleans and Galveston and, finally, Podunk. [Laughter.] All will want their 40 feet. And how strong will be the argument when a gentleman insists in the presence of my amiable friend, "What! Are you going to make these harsh and harmful and destructive discriminations between these cities? Are you going to say that we are not in it and not fit to be in it?"

Mr. Chairman, there is no end to this; our friends have started out upon a course that will never, in my judgment, have its end, for, perhaps, some ambitious fellow will strive after a while to build a ship that will draw 44 feet, and then we will reach the 50-foot limit. A limit for a time—a limit until there is a 54-foot vessel built.

I insist, Mr. Chairman, that the harbors when they have reached a reasonable depth, when they have reached the depth of 30 feet, should be content, and the committees of Congress and Congress itself by its legislation should so far control the naval architecture of the world.

"What," says some gentleman, "not allow progress in shipbuilding!" Certainly; but why not give our vessels a little more beam and not quite so much depth? Why not compel them to meet present exigencies rather than force the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars to meet the vagaries of naval architects.

Mr. Chairman, I have never, during the time I have been a member of this House, opposed what I believed to be proper and fair appropriations for the improvements of harbors that should be improved, that have commerce, and the improvement of rivers that were susceptible of improvement in the direction of commerce; but we often say, in speaking of some of the rivers, that God Almighty has seemed to oppose the modern navigation of, that you must improve them, and (notably the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who has the guardianship over the Monongahela and Allegheny rivers) insist that in order that the poor fellow 'way down at New Orleans, suffering from the snows and storms and cyclones of winter, should have his coal at reasonable rates. I will admit that it is desirable that he should, but I submit that the final cost of the coal to that individual is not lessened. When you add to the sum that he pays the sum that the Government pays for him, the coal is not any cheaper than it used to be.

There is no navigation upon any of those rivers to speak of, excepting coal, and if you were to add the portion that the Government pays in improvements to the sum that the coal brings it could be transported in other ways cheaper. We have an illustration of one of these expenditures in the gentleman's own State. I refer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REEVES]. I do not think it is in his district. That is the Hennepin Canal. I am told that we are going to have the Hennepin Canal in a completed form after a while. I do not know whether it is to be in this century or some other. We can console ourselves, however, gentlemen, by the reflection that if we never are permitted to travel upon it possibly our great-great-grandchildren will, and that it may be in God's providence worked out in some manner to be beneficial to them.

Yet right alongside of that canal is a double-track railway today that has a greater capacity for tonnage—mark what I say—than the canal, with its multitude of locks, and that can carry more freights every day in the year than can the canal when completed and worked to its uttermost capacity. There is a limit to them as well as to the other methods of transportation, and I want to make a confession here. I voted for the Hennepin Canal. It was a long time ago, and I have done a great deal of mental penance since, and I hope those who keep the books and look over the whole record will remember the clamor that there was just at that time for water transportation, and consider my infancy and ignorance, that it may not go so hard with me as it ought to go against a hard-headed old sinner like my friend from Illinois, if he again and at this time should indulge in such freaks of legislation. [Laughter.]

Mr. REEVES. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HEPBURN. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. REEVES. I merely want to suggest that at the time the gentleman voted for the Hennepin Canal I had not been honored with a seat in this body; that it was a fixed fact before I came here, done primarily in the interests of the farmers of Iowa that they might get their freights to the lakes for cheap transportation.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is true; but I want to announce now the melancholy fact that nearly all of the farmers of that day are dead [laughter]; but it is my understanding that the canal is still incomplete and is drawing annual appropriations from the Treasury of the United States. [Laughter.] I have no doubt but that is to be an enduring monument to the River and Harbor Committee or the committee that makes the appropriations; enduring, however, in the sense that appropriations are to be continued indefinitely.

Mr. Chairman, there is one other matter that I want to scold about a little, while I am in the mood, and that is the kindliness of the committee with regard to the new appropriations that from time to time they make. As I have said, I think that but few of us would cavil at the improvement of great harbors, those that already have commerce or where there is a prospective need of improvement, not for the accommodation of a single man or of a single institution, but in those localities where multitudes have gathered and where the trade of many is carried on. I have in mind an instance—I can not vouch for all of its truth—where a gentleman went to the city of the honored chairman of the committee [Mr. BURTON], seeking a site for some iron works. Dissatisfied with the prices that he must pay for real estate, he went farther along the lake to a little village accommodated by a railway and established himself there, and then blandly came to Congress with the request that a harbor might be constructed in order to carry on the commerce of the Great Lakes.

I think that there are a great many instances of that kind. I think the policy that ought to be adopted should be to make and build up marts, great commercial centers, where the people can be easily accommodated by the converging railways that center there. Improve those, consolidate rather than distribute in the expensive way that this discursive method must entail upon the country.

Mr. BURTON. If the gentleman from Iowa will yield to a suggestion right there, I would state (I am sure he does not wish to be misunderstood or to make any statement that is not so) that it was due to the overflow of traffic in those cases which required more than 1 port, more than 2 ports, more than 3 ports, more than 4 ports to handle the greatly increasing shipments of iron ore on the lakes that led to the development of those other ports, all of which had been in use for half a century.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am glad to know that there are cities upon the lakes that are completed. It never occurred to me that the good people of Cleveland would, for a moment, admit that that wonderful young city was finished and that the time had come when overflow was a peremptory essential. I have been in that beautiful city, and have a recollection now that there is contiguous to it somewhere—it may be some little distance from the center—some land not now occupied either by commerce or manufactures, and that possibly it might have occurred that the individual I have in my mind could have located himself within 5 miles, we will say, of an established port rather than go 40 miles and demand that the Government should establish another one for him. But probably Cleveland is completed——

Mr. BURTON. I want the gentleman to understand that it is not completed; but we do not have room for the whole of northern Ohio to come in there, and the whole of that iron ore development and manufacturing. That is the situation.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, I am inclined to think that if the matter had been submitted to the common council of—I was going to name a better town, Clarinda, but I will not—of Cleveland, rather than to the committee, they would have said, "Gentlemen, here is breadth enough. Here is possibility for expansion, here is opportunity to make Cleveland still greater, and it is not necessary to divert expenditure from the port of Cleveland to build up a rival 40 miles away."

Mr. Chairman, I want now, before I take my seat, to compliment the chairman of this committee. I believe he is doing the best work he can. How rapacious the gentlemen associated with him are it is not for me to say, but I do have the opinion that there are gentlemen on that committee who have particular interests to represent that are so important to them that the public weal is not always thought of when it is necessary to logroll with another in order that the favored scheme may have a proper place in their esteem on the appropriations. Therefore I want to indulge in this suggestion as to what the true policy should be: Some time we may have a Speaker of such wonderful courage—and I make no reflections upon my honored colleague—as to see to it that the River and Harbor Committee is composed of men coming from districts having no especial interests to be conserved in that bill.

When that time comes, and a dispassionate view can be taken of improvements—mark you, improvements rather than personal interests—this bill, under the leadership of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], instead of being something to excite alarm, will be in the interest of the whole country, of its commerce, and of its Treasury. There is not a gentleman who it conversant with this legislation who is not willing to say that a very large percentage, possibly half, of all the millions that have been carried out of the Treasury through the instrumentality of this bill have been utterly wasted. And when you add together the total of the appropriation bills for the last twenty-five years it is a colossal sum. I remember that I received a sneer from a member of the House committee once when I said I expected to live to see the river and harbor bill carry a hundred million dollars. I have lived to see it carry sixty, and I think once seventy, million dollars, and if the methods go on, if there is no relief from the pressure upon the chairman, I fear my prophecy will have its fulfillment earlier than many of us now expect.

The whole plan is a bad one, of appointing men upon that committee who represent these great interests. They feel that if their power as individuals is multiplied, as it is by their status upon this committee, that their constituents, some of whom have selfish interests, will demand success. Failure means retirement. The future of the man in politics is dependent upon his success, and the man that would scorn a bribe, that would not tolerate the insulter in his presence, under the subtle influence of this great necessity uses those means that enable success. It may be that another vote and another vote and another vote must be added to his, and in order to secure it and secure that which is meritorious he must consent to that which he knows is harmful in its results. And so I believe that if we are to reform this method of legislation, if we are to make the expenditures that should be made, and to cut off those that are pernicious and never should be tolerated, we must adopt the method of placing this great interest in the hands of those who stand as do the majority of men with regard to other great interests, unsolicited to go to the right or left by private considerations, by local interests, by those things that will influence even the best of men when presented in the insidious form in which they come.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman has outlined the fact that he thinks a river and harbor committee ought to be composed of men from those districts not specially interested in river and harbor improvements.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Would the gentleman be willing to form a Ways and Means Committee for the construction of a tariff tax from members coming from those sections of the country having no special interests to be protected by a tariff?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know that there is any portion of this country that the gentleman can find so far removed, so distant from us as not to be interested in the tariff. [Laughter.] And therefore I can not conceive that that question is pertinent to this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Suppose that the gentleman is mistaken, and that it were possible to find 15 or 17 gentlemen, representing districts whose populations are more interested against import duties than in favor of them, would he be willing to see those 15 or 17 men composing a Ways and Means Committee for the consideration of the tariff?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know what my idea of moonlight would be if the moon were obliterated from the heavens. [Laughter.] I can not conceive the case that the gentleman states. I live in a district, if I may divert for a moment, where there is not a protected manufactory, not one, without it is a little cigar shop, or something of that kind. There are 202,000 farmers, people who draw their sustenance from the farm, and that is a district in favor of the protective system; and they see in the necessities of those working in protected employments, of people thousands of miles away from them, in the prosperity that comes to them, in the prosperity that is widespread, they see and feel and realize and reap their returns from the protective system. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. One further question: I do not desire to debate the tariff question just now. I have debated it before and am ready to do so again, but that is not my immediate purpose. I am merely attempting to elucidate the analogy between these two questions, if I can. Now, does not the gentleman think that if 15 or 17 districts could be found—I am supposing a case, and he is something of a supposer himself, because he is from Yankeedom that "guesses" and "supposes" things—suppose that these 15 or 17 districts I have indicated could be found, would the gentleman be willing to intrust the tariff interests of the country—he being, as I am not, in favor of the tariff and a tariff supporter—to them as a committee to deal with this question? And if the gentleman answers No, because that committee would have an interest against the tariff, then will he answer this question: If he could find a committee of members without any river and harbor interests, could it not be urged that they were as much interested as those who have rivers and harbors in their districts, except that they would have an interest against the rivers and harbors and improvement of navigation?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will admit, although the gentleman makes the suggestion with something like a sneer in his voice, my Yankee origin.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think you reflect credit on your origin.

Mr. HEPBURN. And although I have a vigorous imagination, and sometimes its flights, even to me, are wonderful [laughter] of the inconceivable things, even to me, and it sometimes fills me with wonder; but I can not conceive of the first proposition of the gentleman. It is impossible for me to imagine that there are within the length and breadth of this country 17 districts, or 17 counties, or 17 families, or 17 men that are not interested in the great American system of protection. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. One more question—assuming the correctness of your statement, for the sake of argument. Then can the gentleman imagine that there are 17 districts, 17 counties, 17 families, or 17 individuals that are not interested in the improvement of the commerce and navigation of the American Republic?

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir; I can not conceive of that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well.

Mr. HEPBURN. But I can conceive of 17 or 170 or more, too, that have often special interests; of the man that is located upon a little stream that is to be improved and whose constituents alone—alone—are to have the benefits of the appropriation.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then, if the gentleman will permit me—of course I do not desire to make a speech myself in his time; but it seems that this is worth following up. If the gentleman can conceive, then, of 17 districts in the United States which have no interests in the status of the tariff, except what he calls a general interest in the "public welfare," and if he can conceive of that many districts without any interests in import duties except a general interest, would he be willing to leave a tariff bill as well as a river and harbor bill to the representatives of those districts?

Mr. HEPBURN. I have an idea that the interest the great mass of the people of the United States have in the tariff and in its results and in its blessings is a common one. It comes to all of us alike. It comes to the man that is on the farm as well as to the man that is in the factory. It is universal. It is one of the diffused blessings that come, only to be likened to the sunshine and the shower. Therefore I am not able to answer the gentleman's question, because to my mind it is utterly inconceivable.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit me one more remark, and I am through——

Mr. HEPBURN. Does the gentleman pledge himself to that?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi (continuing). To the effect that I confess my absolute inability to bring the gentleman to the point of answering the question. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Because that which is so widespread, that which is so even in its blessings everywhere, might not be called a point. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I have anything further to say, except it be—possibly from habit, but I think largely from conviction—that I can not vote for the river and harbor bill, although if the improvements in the committee continue and I should continue—two improbable things—there might be a time when I could follow the gentleman from Ohio in his recommendations. [Applause.]

Mr. LAWRENCE. At the last session of Congress a carefully prepared river and harbor bill, a bill drawn not in the interest of any section, but of the whole country, met an untimely death in the United States Senate. Could that bill have been enacted into law it would have greatly benefited the growing commerce of the United States. This is a fact now generally understood and appreciated. Commercial organizations throughout the country, realizing the menace to our prosperity which would be involved in the defeat of another similar measure, have been displaying great interest and enthusiasm in an effort to arouse public opinion in favor of liberal appropriations for our rivers and harbors. So great was the interest in the subject that a national rivers and harbors congress was held in the city of Baltimore on October 8 and 9, 1901. The gathering was without politics and without sectionalism. There were present delegates from over twenty States. They represented the industrial and commercial interests of the nation.

No particular project was urged. Actuated by broad and patriotic motives, the delegates there assembled pushed aside prejudice and selfish motives in an effort to promote a great cause in the interest of a great and united country. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas it is desirable to arouse the sentiment of the people to a fuller appreciation of the value and importance of improving and developing the waterways and harbors of our country, in order to meet the demands of a rapidly increasing internal and foreign commerce, for the advantage and benefit of the whole people and for the purpose of imparting reliable and complete information upon this important subject, this congress, representing all sections of our country, has been convened: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That this congress asserts that the best development of our national resources demands the adequate improvement of our waterways, and therefore indorses and urges upon the Congress of the United States a liberal policy in their improvement through systematic and liberal appropriations therefor. In equally unequivocal terms the congress deplores and condemns any action which leads to the failure of river and harbor legislation.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this congress that the improvement of rivers and harbors is of equal importance with the work carried on by any department of the Government, and for this reason we urge that appropriations therefor be placed on such a footing as will insure at all times ample funds for a vigorous prosecution of the work, and to this end we indorse the system of continuing contracts.

I have read these resolutions because they are the views of the business men of the United States—the men who, by their courage and honesty and industry and patriotism, have made our country commercially supreme. We are here as the representatives of the people. We differ upon questions of public policy, but we are all actuated by an honest purpose to aid "our rapidly increasing internal and foreign commerce for the advantage and benefit of the whole people." [Applause.] Surely we can not consider with too much earnestness and care the views embodied in the resolutions which I have read. Your Committee on Rivers and Harbors in framing the measure which is now before you for consideration has been governed by a desire to legislate upon broad lines and for the benefit of all. In the committee room there has been no playing of politics, no appeal to sectionalism. Representatives of one section have given as fair and impartial consideration to the projects urged in another part of the country as they have to those in their own.

It is not claimed that this bill is perfect. There were before the committee projects recommended by the Engineer Office of the War Department which called for appropriations of between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000. The present bill authorizes an expenditure of a little over $60,000,000, but $24,000,000 of which, however, is to be expended during the current year, the balance being placed under the continuing contract plan. It is therefore evident that the task of the committee has not been an easy one. Many projects have been rejected, the consideration of others has been postponed. The committee did not feel that it was authorized to appropriate a sum in excess of the amount carried in this bill, although as a matter of fact if all the projects of merit had been included the amount would have been far in excess of $60,000,000.

We have endeavored to authorize the improvements which are the most important and most urgent and where the expenditure is unquestionably justified. A very great proportion of the expenditures authorized by the provisions of the pending bill is for projects that are national in scope. The improvement of our great harbors at New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Savannah, Galveston, and on the Great Lakes and Pacific coast is not in the interest of certain localities. It is for the interest of the whole country that its important harbors should be placed in a condition to enable us to compete successfully with other countries in our race for commercial supremacy. Such appropriations are directly in the interest of the producing classes of the land.

There has been appropriated for the Navy during the past four years nearly $250,000,000. I voted cheerfully for such appropriations, for I believe it to be our duty to construct and maintain a large and powerful navy. Such appropriations are not for war, but are the surest guaranty of peace. And yet, if Congress is justified in appropriating such large sums for a navy, it ought not to hesitate to pass a bill of this size, which authorizes an expenditure during the current year of only $24,000,000 for the benefit of commerce.

Countries not as large as ours, with a smaller commerce and a less population, have appropriated much larger sums than has the United States for river and harbor improvement. France has expended $800,000,000. Hamburg has become the second port in Europe, and an expenditure of $75,000,000 has seemed justifiable. The Manchester Ship Canal cost $25,000,000, and over $70,000,000, I believe, has been expended on the Clyde. The total amount appropriated to date for such purposes in the United is $414,765,772.

A recognized authority has said:

It would not be an overstatement to assert that for every dollar that has been expended upon the improvement of our national waterways, the country at large has received a direct return of more than a thousandfold in financial values.

Our present prosperity is due in very great measure to the growth of our foreign commerce. We are not exporting to-day simply agricultural products, but manufactured goods in large amounts, and the value of goods manufactured in the United States is greater than that of those manufactured in England, France, and Germany combined. We hear much in these days of America's commercial invasion of Europe. Mr. F. R. Vanderlip, formerly Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in a recently published article, comments picturesquely upon that invasion. He says:

American locomotives running on American rails now whistle past the pyramids and across the long Siberian steppes. American bridges span rivers on every continent. American cranes are swinging over many foreign moles. Wherever there are extensive harvests, there may be found American machinery to gather the grain.

In every great market of the world tools can have no better recommendation than the mark, "Made in America." American cottons are finding their way into the markets of every country. Bread is baked in Palestine from flour milled in Minneapolis. In many European cities American dynamos light streets and operate railways, and the American shoe has captured the favor of all Europe.

[Applause.]

One might go on without end telling in detail the story of American industrial growth and commercial expansion. We have been successfully meeting competition everywhere. America has sent coals to Newcastle, cotton to Manchester, cutlery to Sheffield, potatoes to Ireland, champagne to France, watches to Switzerland, and Rhine wines to Germany.

Surely the present is no time for mistaken economy to check the growth of this wonderful commerce. Our aim is to compete successfully for the markets of the world. If we are to succeed in doing this we must be able to put our products into those markets at the lowest possible price. Cost of transportation is a problem of vital importance. If we are to cut down the cost of transportation we are not only able to reach more distant markets, but we aid the producer by increasing the value of that which he produces. No one disputes the proposition that if we have a surplus of any product it is the price we get for that surplus which fixes the price for the whole product.

During the past twenty-five years rates for carrying freight from this country to Europe have been greatly reduced and are to-day but one-quarter of the rate which existed in 1875. The producer gets the benefit of this decrease in the transportation. So large a decrease in the freight rate has been made possible by the great increase in the size of our ocean-going steamers. Twenty-five years ago such steamers were of 2,500 tons weight, from 300 to 400 feet long, and drew from 18 to 20 feet of water; to-day they are of 10,000 tons weight and over, are over 600 feet long, and draw 32 feet. As the size of the steamer has increased the cost of transportation has been proportionately diminished.

It needs but little argument, then, to show that if we are to place our products in foreign markets and successfully compete with other countries we must equip our great harbors with channels which are sufficient to accommodate modern steamships. The demand for wider and deeper channels is urgent and imperative. If this work is longer delayed, we can not maintain our present position in the commercial world. If we would reduce the cost of transportation to such a point as will enable us to compete with rival countries we must make liberal appropriations for such development of our harbors and waterways as will meet the demand of the commerce of to-day. A policy which interferes with giving the people of the United States facilities for cheap and efficient transportation will mean an absolute check to their industrial progress. [Applause.]

BOSTON HARBOR.

And now I wish to say a word about some of the larger projects in my own State, for which appropriations are made in the pending bill. The bill authorizes an expenditure of $3,600,000 for the improvement of Boston Harbor. The present depth of channel in that harbor is but 27 feet. A deeper channel is absolutely necessary if modern steamships are to enter and leave that port with safety. The project which has been adopted by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors calls for a channel 35 feet in depth, with a width of 1,200 in the inner harbor and 1,500 feet in the outer harbor. The completion of the project will require an expenditure of $8,000,000. The expenditure is necessarily large, for underlying ledges occur irregularly all over the harbor and a great amount of rock excavation will have to be made. It can not be said that in the past excessive appropriations have been made.

Since 1825 about $4,000,000 have been appropriated by the Federal Government, while the State of Massachusetts has expended nearly as much in supplementing that work. If I call attention to the fact that more than $8,000,000 have been appropriated for Galveston, nearly $7,000,000 for Philadelphia, $5,000,000 for Savannah, and $40,000,000 for the Great Lakes, I do not do so because I believe that such appropriations were too large. I am glad they were made. No one can realize more clearly than myself that it is impossible to overestimate the benefit received by the whole country therefrom. The people of Massachusetts have shared in that benefit. The $8,000,000 expended at Galveston have produced remarkable results. The exports from that port for the year ending June 30, 1901, amounted to $101,831,747. The terrible storm of September, 1900, did such damage that an addiditional appropriation is necessary, and for no appropriation in this bill did I vote with greater pleasure.

The calamity which visited the city of Galveston was so dreadful that it aroused the sympathy not only of our own country, but of the whole world. Thousands of lives were lost, and over $17,000,000 worth of property was destroyed. A less determined and heroic people would have abandoned the city. But without an instant's hesitation and with invincible courage they pushed on in their work of development. Surely they deserve well of our Government. I have called attention to the appropriations made for this and other ports not because they were unwise, but to show that in making the present large appropriation for Boston Harbor no partiality is being shown toward the State of Massachusetts.

The port of Boston has the unique distinction of being the only one of the principal Atlantic ports to show an increase in its aggregate export and import trade for the year 1901. For ten years the growth of its commerce has been steady and gratifying, as the following table will show:

Year.	Imports.	Exports.	Total.
1892	$75,593,566	$88,505,203	$164,398,769
1893	69,118,709	83,539,939	152,658,638
1894	53,398,848	84,656,636	138,055,484
1895	79,947,777	89,019,873	168,967,650
1896	65,990,896	101,466,412	167,457,308
1897	86,688,149	104,191,690	189,879,839
1898	48,814,921	124,864,787	173,679,708
1899	63,428,076	127,162,483	190,590,559
1900	68,630,557	123,858,161	192,488,720
1901	65,337,328	131,667,890	197,005,218

These figures do not include the very large in transit and transshipment trade passing through this port to and from foreign countries. This trade last year amounted to $14,625,000, as compared with $10,200,000 in 1900, an increase of 45 per cent.

The following table shows the arrivals and clearances in the foreign trade for the past ten years:

Year.	Foreign entrances.		Foreign clearances.		Total foreign tonnage.
	Number.	Tonnage.	Number.	Tonnage.
1892	2,396	1,705,492	2,291	1,443,381	3,148,873
1893	2,218	1,650,561	2,085	1,323,703	2,974,264
1894	2,079	1,939,640	1,948	1,467,084	3,206,724
1895	2,216	1,723,009	2,147	1,423,227	3,146,236
1896	2,088	1,843,134	2,214	1,614,629	3,457,763
1897	2,068	1,980,708	1,936	1,956,789	3,637,497
1898	1,797	1,948,596	1,747	1,715,295	3,663,831
1899	1,968	2,373,446	1,854	2,057,573	4,431,019

It will be noticed that during this period the total foreign tonnage has increased from 3,148,773 tons to 4,676,122 tons. During the same time the coastwise arrivals have increased from 8,616 in 1892 to 10,415 in 1901. The total tonnage of the coastwise trade in 1901 amounted to 17,448,236 tons. This great tonnage is due in part to the enormous coal trade carried on in barges with this port, the tonnage of the barges comprising about 30 per cent of the gross tonnage. This does not take into account the fleet of fishing vessels, which last year numbered about 3,400 vessels.

There has also been a most striking increase in the trans-Atlantic passenger traffic. This increase has amounted in four years to nearly 100 per cent. I submit the following figures in support of this statement:

Year.	Cabin passengers.			Steerage passengers.			Grand total.
	Arrived.	Sailed.	Total.	Arrived.	Sailed.	Total.
1898	5,837	4,365	10,202	11,954	7,181	19,135	29,337
1899	7,375	6,559	13,934	18,693	7,245	25,938	39,872

According to the summary tables of commerce for the year ending June 30, 1901, prepared by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department, the great ports of the country are entitled to the following rank as shown by the value of their aggregate export and import trade:

Port.	Imports.	Exports.	Total.
Boston	61,452,370	143,708,232	205,160,602

Boston Harbor is the second port of the United States. Its commerce is steadily growing. It should be provided with the channel facilities of a harbor of the first class, which will enable it to hold its position as one of the great seaports of the world. It is in the interest of the whole country that the proposed improvement should be made. The improvement is national in scope and the benefit conferred is national.

SANDY BAY HARBOR OF REFUGE.

There is also an appropriation of $200,000 for the Harbor of Refuge at Sandy Bay, situated at the extremity of Cape Ann. Seventy thousand vessels have passed that point by actual count in a single year. Commercial, maritime, and shipowning interests are petitioning for a speedy completion of the harbor, as it would be accessible to ships which carry yearly more than a million passengers and cargoes of very great value. The harbor has been located at a very dangerous section of the coast, and its construction has been indorsed by pilots, captains, shipowners, shipbuilders, and by marine societies and commercial bodies. The magnitude of the harbor can be shown by comparing it with some of the most important harbors of Europe.

Area with 24 feet depth at mean low water.

	Acres.
Sandy Bay Harbor	1,377
Portland Harbor, England	906
Plymouth Harbor, England	1,182
Cherbourg Harbor, France	1,720

In the opinion of nautical men the steamship Portland could have been saved had the harbor been completed. You remember that she went down in the great gale of November, 1898. Of the 200 people on board not one was saved. The completion of this national harbor of refuge will be a very great benefit to the whole country.

GLOUCESTER AND FALL RIVER.

At Gloucester the present condition of the breakwater is a menace to life and property, a considerable portion of it being nearly submerged at high water. Two vessels have been entirely wrecked and more than 25 others have suffered greater or less damage. An expenditure of $600,000 would have been necessary to complete this breakwater. The committee has authorized the completion of a modified project at a cost of $302,000.

The city of Fall River is the largest cotton manufacturing city in the United States. It is the second port in importance in New England. Its commerce is increasing yearly. In 1900 the commerce of the port amounted to about 3,500,000 tons. At present the maximum draft in the harbor for vessels is 20 feet, and advantage must be taken of the tide to enable them to reach the city front. The pending bill authorizes the construction of a channel with a width of 300 feet and a depth of 25 feet at mean low water. The amount appropriated will complete the improvement, and is earnestly urged by the Engineer Department.

THE CONNECTICUT RIVER.

I will at this time refer to but one other Massachusetts item—the authorization of a survey by a board of engineers of the Connecticut River from Hartford to Holyoke. The section of country which would be benefited by this improvement is estimated to contain about 350,000 inhabitants. This portion of the Connecticut River is 34 miles in length. Located directly upon its banks are the cities of Springfield, Holyoke, and Chicopee, and the towns of West Springfield, Thompsonville, and Windsor Locks. The populations of these cities and towns, according to the recent census, is 141,663, and the total assessed valuation of property amounts to $134,017,817.

At Holyoke and Springfield $43,905,978 are invested in manufacturing establishments and 23,578 wage-earners are employed. The value of the manufactured products amounted in 1900 to $47,493,352. The commercial importance of this region is also shown in statistics with reference to the freight tonnage. In 1897 the inward tonnage of Holyoke, Springfield, Chicopee, and West Springfield was 1,305,104 tons, and there were forwarded from these places 516,330 tons, a total of 1,829,434 tons of in and out freight. Major Leach, who made the preliminary survey, estimates that at least 500,000 tons of this freight would be transported by water were the Connecticut navigable.

That estimate is very conservative. Business men who have carefully studied the matter estimate that it would amount to very much more. In 1901 over 500,000 tons of coal alone were received, and 70 per cent of this could better come by water than by rail. With an open river freight rates would fall, and it has been estimated that the saving on coal alone would amount to $200,000 a year, and the total saving in freights of all kinds would be very large. All this is true if there were to be no increase of population or manufacturing. But the opening of the river, thereby bringing cheap and convenient means of transportation, would inevitably increase the population and add to the volume of business transacted.

Some time ago a survey was made, and a project providing a channel 9 feet in depth and not less than 150 feet in width was recommended. It is, however, claimed that such an improvement would flood a new park at Hartford and injure manufacturing establishments located upon the banks of the river. We have, therefore, provided for a most thorough investigation by a board of engineers. The result is not at all feared by the enthusiastic advocates of this improvement. If the report of the board of engineers is favorable, there should be no further delay. The completion of the project will aid materially the business development of western Massachusetts.

I will not longer trespass upon the time of the House. As I have already said, our prosperity depends in large measure upon the growth of our foreign commerce. In the last fiscal year the excess of exports over imports was $664,592,826. In the last four years it was $2,354,442,213. As our Secretary of State, in the address delivered in this Hall on February 27, so eloquently said:

> The "debtor nation" has become the chief creditor nation. The financial center of the world, which required thousands of years to journey from the Euphrates to the Thames and the Seine, seems passing to the Hudson between daybreak and dark.

It is clearly our duty to aid so far as we can our country's economic development. We believe the legislation now proposed will prove a most helpful factor in that development, and we submit this bill to the House with a confident expectation that it will receive the approval of our countrymen. [Loud applause.]

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I can not entirely agree with the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] that we may at any time expect railroad transportation to take the place of water transportation. I do not think that the progress of events in this and in the Old World will bear out the proposition that we may ever expect that railroad carrying of freight will supplant the necessity of waterway transportation for the movement of the great products of the country. We know very well that for many articles and for passenger travel railway transportation is the better mode; but when we come to the great bulk of the necessities of commerce—the coal, the iron, and all the heavy freights of the country—we are bound to have water transportation.

It was remarkable, and in some respects a thing that can not be well explained, to hear the experienced gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] take the position that he is opposed to further projects of this sort, and yet he says he is in favor of the great system of protection. I should like to inquire, Mr. Chairman, if we are to have $300,000,000 or more raised by internal revenue and perhaps one-third more than that raised by a protective tariff, if we are not to expend some of that money on projects of internal improvement, on improving our waterways, our canals, our harbors, and matters of that kind, what will be done with this money? I should like to hear the gentleman at length upon that subject. In what mode would he spend it, outside of the mere ordinary payment of the officers for the administration of government? So far as I am concerned, I know of no better way to expend the surplus raised by taxation of the people of this country, whether by internal revenue or by tariff taxation, than to improve our internal system of commerce and our commercial ports.

The gentleman seemed, however, to object especially to the improvement not only of small streams but of the larger streams, and said that the Missouri and Mississippi River improvements have shown conclusively that we have gone to the extent authorized by this system. I am not sure that I am correct as to the gentleman's location in Iowa. It is a town called Clarinda, which, I believe, is about 50 miles from the Missouri River and perhaps 250 or 300 from the Mississippi River, and my information, Mr. Chairman, is that there is not a creek in that immediate section large enough for an ordinary canoe to float upon. If that is not the reason to account for the gentleman's opposition to any internal improvement, he fails to state it here to my satisfaction. However, I understand that a scientist in his town is considering the use of cyclones as a means of transportation for the products of that section.

The general sentiment expressed by the chairman of the committee, who introduced this bill, that there should be no favoritism or partiality shown to particular sections of the country in the public improvements intended to be promoted, and that the object of its passage should have regard alone to the public welfare, is one which, in my opinion, should be approved by every member of this committee. In looking over the numerous points to be improved, the large amounts to be expended in the aggregate, and the general public interest to be subserved, of course it will be a difficult matter to do equal justice to all sections alike and to equally place the expenditures in such way that the rivers and harbors in some sections of the country will not get a larger share in proportion to the public benefits to be derived than others.

There are certain rules, which have also been referred to by the chairman of the committee, which guided their deliberations, that also should receive the indorsement of every member here in considering this bill. These were, as laid down, that where public improvements comprehended by this measure have been commenced they should be pushed forward to completion as rapidly as possible. It is certainly an unwise policy to commence the construction of a public waterway for commerce and then neglect to carry forward the work to completion.

That is a sentiment that seems to be authorized, and a proposition based upon all business methods, that where the Government once takes hold of an improvement of public utility, it should not cease to push forward the work to completion, so that the objects of the improvements may be realized.

Taking these observations as indicating in a general way some principles which should guide us in expenditures for public improvements of this nature, I will ask the committee to take into consideration an amendment to the bill, to further aid and continue the improvement of the Big Sandy River, of Kentucky and West Virginia. This work has been commenced, and one lock and dam completed, with the view manifestly that additional improvement should be made in this way in order to reach the vast coal fields lying upon its waters and give an outlet to market for the mineral resources of that section.

This river has been under improvement by the United States since 1878, the general plan being to give slack-water navigation from the Ohio River up to Pikeville, Ky., and to the mouth of Pond Creek on the Tug Fork, near Williamson, W. Va. Detailed reports of the resources of this section and surveys have been made under direction of the Secretary of War. These reports and surveys show there are 4,500 square miles of territory drained by the Big Sandy River; that it contains iron ore, clays of various kinds, building stone, salt, oil, gas, valuable timber, and vast quantities of bituminous coal, which underlie almost the whole of this mountainous country and await means of transportation to market. Examination by the engineers of the various deposits of coal showed vast resources and possibilities which were summarized as follows:

	Tons.
Lawrence County, Ky	150,000,000
Johnson County, Ky	600,000,000
Martin County, Ky	300,000,000
Floyd County, Ky	350,000,000
Pike County, Ky	1,000,000,000
Knott County, Ky	100,000,000
Letcher County, Ky	100,000,000
Wayne County, W. Va	50,000,000
Mingo County, W. Va	350,000,000
Total	3,000,000,000

In order to enable us to form some idea as to the significance of the above figures some statistical information is given as to our products and water shipments of the coal of the United States.

The report which presented these figures, made by the Chief of Engineers December, 1900, goes on to give a comparative estimate of the coal resources of this section with that of the entire production carried by water shipment in the United States, and then adds:

The Appalachian coal field furnishes about two-thirds of all the bituminous output of the United States, and is about 900 miles long and contains about 63,000 square miles. Of this area, West Virginia has 17,000 and Kentucky 9,000 square miles. Nearly one-half the latter lies tributary to the rivers under consideration—Big Sandy, Levisa, and Tug.

After giving the coal-producing area and the total bituminous coal production of the United States at from 130,000,000 to 140,000,000 tons per annum, the report continues:

It will be seen from the above figures that the quantity of coal estimated in the Big Sandy field is equivalent to the entire output of the United States for nearly twenty years, would supply the production of the Pennsylvania field for over fifty years, would furnish that transported from Pittsburg by river for one thousand years, and would equal the entire lake traffic for four hundred and fifty years.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I know it is often understood that when a member offers an amendment for his section or for any particular stream that his section may be interested in it is done for mere political talk, for a political purpose, and it is looked upon to be guarded against. I want to declare in all candor here that while a portion of this river, which I think should be improved, lies immediately in my section of the country and in the district I have the honor to represent, in my judgment, considering the distance to be improved from the Ohio River and the resources of this river, the deposits of coal and timber and of minerals on its borders, there is not a stream tributary to the Ohio River of anything near the size of the Big Sandy River that will furnish the amount for transportation that it will. I live upon the Kentucky River, which also reaches the coal fields of eastern Kentucky, and I want to declare now, in my judgment, the Big Sandy River has far greater resources and far greater amounts of coal and far greater products of every kind to be transported to market than the Kentucky River or any other river in Kentucky, considering the length of the river to be improved in order to reach the products.

In order to fully develop the wealth of this section and open it to market, not a great distance will be embraced in the improvement. The distance of the Big Sandy River from its mouth at Catlettsburg to Pikeville is only 110 miles, and to the mouth of Pond Creek, at Williamson, from the mouth of Tug Fork is only 66 miles. So that we have presented by the engineer's report the facts that in a comparatively short distance from the Ohio River a vast section of undeveloped wealth is found on one of the tributary streams, which may easily be made available for the transportation of all this wealth. By the completion of this improvement these sources of coal supply are brought nearer to the large cities on the Ohio, from the mouth of Big Sandy down, than the supply at Pittsburg by more than 350 miles.

It will be admitted in all fair discussion that extravagance in the public expenditures should be avoided; and I think no Member of Congress should urge an appropriation which he does not believe is justified in view of the general advancement and public welfare of the country. This improvement has been begun; it must be completed at some time in the future, and I do not think we should now neglect to give that aid necessary to keep the work in progress. It may take ten years or more to complete the system, but certainly the work should go on and not be neglected. Piecemeal work from time to time is not advisable. There is no economy in building one dam and then waiting a half dozen years to build another.

Economy would dictate the carrying of the work forward steadily to completion. Succeeding Congresses should give due regard to the judgment and work of preceding sessions.

The river and harbor bill as amended by the Senate in the Fifty-sixth Congress, which, however, was not passed, contained provisions for continuing the improvement of this river and provided for an expenditure of an aggregate of $666,667, exclusive of the amount of $50,000 appropriated by that bill and the amounts before provided for the work. It can not be well contended, I think, that this proposed appropriation was unauthorized under all the circumstances or that the matter had not been well weighed and considered. Every reason would seem to point to the conclusion that the proposed aid in this work heretofore extended was wisely considered and fully authorized.

There is another consideration which I wish to urge upon the attention of the committee, and that is that Kentucky, in asking this development and means of transportation for the public benefit, is the fourth State in the Union in paying the largest amounts of internal revenue, only being exceeded in this respect by Illinois, New York, and Pennsylvania. Kentucky, in round numbers, pays $25,000,000 annually into the Treasury, Illinois $55,000,000, New York $49,000,000, and Pennsylvania $26,000,000; and these States pay in over half of the entire internal revenue for the support of the Government, and Kentucky pays one-twelfth of the entire total. I present the following table of receipts of internal revenue, by States and Territories, for the last fiscal year:

Aggregate collections of internal revenue, by States and Territories, during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1901.

The bill proposing expenditures for the rivers and harbors only gives to Kentucky $183,000, $3,000 of which is given for maintenance of the work already done on the Big Sandy River, and $180,000 for continuing the work on Green River.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BALL of Texas. How about the appropriation for the falls of the Ohio River?

Mr. WHITE. We do not consider that appropriation as especially a Kentucky appropriation. The Ohio River is a great waterway, giving its benefits as well to Indiana, Ohio, and other States that it borders as to Kentucky. It is not given in the name of Kentucky. I am talking entirely about matters that relate to an internal development of the different States.

Mr. BALL of Texas. I will ask the gentleman is Kentucky not interested in the Mississippi River?

Mr. WHITE. Why, we are interested in the Ohio River, and we are interested in the whole system of waterways when we come down to the connections with water transportation and the advancement of water transportation for the shipment of our products; and I am as much interested in the Mississippi River and in the Ohio River, I hope, as any gentleman in this committee. But what I am talking about now is about a stream which has been overlooked here, that will contribute to the trade of the Mississippi and the Ohio rivers both and all the cities along those streams. That is the point I am trying to get before the committee. I am not attempting to decry any appropriation in this bill; I am only contending that we are entitled in Kentucky to an additional appropriation because we pay largely for the support of the Government, and because we have the necessity for a public improvement there that will contribute to the advancement of the General Government and the internal commerce of the country.

I hope the gentleman does not think for a moment that I am making this discussion against the Mississippi or Ohio rivers. Why, this stream I am talking about empties directly into the Ohio River, and all the products will go to the great cities along down the Ohio River, to Ironton, Portsmouth, Cincinnati, Louisville, and all down that stream to the Mississippi River.

A comparison of the amounts appropriated to Kentucky in this bill with those appropriated to other States and sections shows some remarkable results. States and sections which pay into the Treasury a pittance compared with Kentucky show amounts so disproportionate to that given Kentucky as to make the inequality of a most striking character.

For instance, Florida, whose revenue is about one-thirtieth of that of Kentucky, gets three times as much appropriated; New Jersey, paying a little over one-third of what Kentucky pays in revenue, gets nearly four times as much in this bill, and the single city of Cleveland, Ohio, for its harbor, while the entire great State of Ohio pays less revenue by two millions and a half, gets nearly four times the amount appropriated to Kentucky, besides $2,300,000 for continuing improvements. South Carolina, which pays into the Treasury $310,590, gets $206,000 appropriated, or two-thirds of the amount paid in as revenue. Indeed, some of the States and Territories get more than they pay into the Treasury.

Mr. BALL of Texas. I want the gentleman from Kentucky to understand that I do not object to his criticism.

Mr. WHITE. I am not criticising. I am trying to compare what has been appropriated to other States, and in that way to show that Kentucky has public interests in this bill and that we are not treating Kentucky perhaps quite right.

It is a singular thing to me, in listening to all this discussion here, Mr. Chairman, that some of our great cities on the lakes and on the coasts have not been built where there were natural harbors. You would infer, from listening to this discussion carefully, that we were making artificial harbors for all of them, and think that our ancestors in laying out those cities ought to have had enough foresight to try to locate them somewhere where they could be reached by water.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHITE. I would ask, Mr. Chairman, a few minutes longer in which to conclude.

Mr. BALL of Texas. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended ten minutes.

Mr. BOREING. I will ask that the gentleman be given more time.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman mentions the amount carried to South Carolina. I would like to ask him this question: What item is there in the bill giving any project in South Carolina that is not a meritorious project?

Mr. WHITE. I have not undertaken any criticism. I presume they are all right; but if you get more than we do, and we have a meritorious project, why not give us a little as we go along with the improvements?

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks the $200,000 is an exorbitant appropriation for the improvement of streams and the betterment of commerce in that State?

Mr. WHITE. Not by any means; but I think the appropriation for Kentucky is very small. That is the thing I am talking about; not that yours is too large, because we, in Kentucky, believe in giving rather than receiving.

Mr. FINLEY. Does not the gentleman think it would be a sound argument and good logic to confine his argument to the projects that are not meritorious?

Mr. WHITE. I presume that the committee took into consideration, as far as they could, all these questions. I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that all the appropriations have merit; some more and some less.

Mr. FINLEY. One further question. The State of Kentucky is bounded on the north by the Ohio River. Is it not a fact that the improvement of the Ohio River is beneficial to the commerce of the State of Kentucky?

Mr. WHITE. Undoubtedly so.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, have there not been spent $13,000,000 or more for improvement of the Ohio River, and has not the State of Kentucky derived benefit by reason of that improvement?

Mr. WHITE. Undoubtedly so. I have not the figures before me, but I have no doubt the gentleman is correct. I am not going back to see how much South Carolina has received for improvements of rivers and harbors. I am not saying that South Carolina is receiving too much now.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I do not understand the gentleman's allusion to the State of South Carolina.

Mr. WHITE. I will repeat it. My allusion is to show that Kentucky, which pays $25,000,000 for the support of this Government by her internal-revenue taxation, receives in this bill $183,000 for improvement of streams that are meritorious, while the State of South Carolina receives, for meritorious projects, I admit, more than the State of Kentucky, while she does not pay one-seventieth of what Kentucky does for support of the Government. She gets nearly twice as much in this bill. It is only by comparison that I am endeavoring to show this.

I am not criticising what you are receiving or putting it down on the proposition that you are not entitled to some consideration as well as these other States. I am not going to move to strike out any provision in the bill, so far as I am advised now, and especially if Kentucky receives justice. Kentucky can go on with her vast resources of coal undeveloped and pay in $25,000,000 annually, and if this committee sees proper to say so, we can improve all your streams and harbors and rivers and never receive anything for our own benefit. I do not think, however, that the gentleman ought to object to this amendment. I would not object to an amendment proposed for New York, because it pays $50,000,000 into the Treasury, even if I thought there might be a doubt of its merit.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Does the gentleman think that the River and Harbor Committee, and in fact every other committee having in charge appropriation bills in this House, should consider the amount of revenue that is paid into the United States by the various States in making provision for improvements in those States? Is that the gentleman's argument?

Mr. WHITE. I do not think there is anything wrong in considering that matter. I think it should be considered to some extent for this reason: If one State pays in $25,000,000 to the Treasury and has equal improvements that ought to be made, has equally meritorious projects in rivers and harbors that ought to be promoted, and another State pays in nothing, I think the State which pays the greater tax should have at least equal consideration. I deny the proposition as a matter of logic that the latter State ought to receive all the benefits of the appropriations for its improvement.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, the gentleman's position, as I understand it, is that the River and Harbor Committee, in making appropriations for improvements, should consider the amount of the revenue paid into the Treasury from those States. Is it not a fact that the greater part of the revenue that is paid into the Treasury of the United States from the State of Kentucky is derived from internal-revenue taxes?

Mr. WHITE. That is what I stated.

Mr. FINLEY. Is it not true that the consumers pay the tax largely, and not the people in the State of Kentucky? Is not the greatest part of the products of the State of Kentucky on which those taxes are paid shipped out of the State?

Mr. WHITE. A great deal of it is. I do not think that men should drink our liquor and smoke our cigars——

Mr. FINLEY. Without paying the tax upon them?

Mr. WHITE. Without giving a generous thought to our State.

Mr. FINLEY. Am I to understand that the gentleman goes further and argues that because of that fact Congress should make appropriations accordingly for the improvement of rivers and harbors in the State of Kentucky?

Mr. WHITE. No, sir; I do not take that position. But experience shows that when our liquor is used a few days its effects are such that a person will give his last dime for more. I am arguing that if we have a river which needs improvement we are entitled to as much consideration as other States, especially so for the reason that we are a large revenue-paying State. I do not think there can be any misconception about that. I am not intending to make any objections to States paying less than we pay; I am only intending to appeal to gentlemen whose States are receiving these benefits—States that in some instances receive more than they pay—to help us a little in our improvements, which I say will bring vast benefit to the country. I hope the gentleman can understand my position.

In this connection I am reminded of an incident which happened in political life in my section of the country. Certain managers and workers met to put up funds for a political campaign. Some put up $10, some $20; others different sums. Finally it came around to the turn of Mr. Jones. He took out a ten-dollar bill and put it into the pot; then he took out $25, and he said that he knew exactly where that amount of money should go; it was needed, he said, in his bailiwick.

Mr. FINLEY. That was in Kentucky.

Mr. WHITE. Yes; that was in Kentucky; but Jones, I think, was from South Carolina.

No objection is intended to be made in this argument to the amounts appropriated to the different States and sections. The only point intended to be urged is that the State of Kentucky, which contributes so largely in support of the general public expense, should have that consideration in the distribution of improvements which the importance of its rivers demands; and surely the States which are provided for so liberally in this bill should not begrudge to Kentucky her just share in these improvements. The river to which I have attempted to call attention contains along its shores and tributaries one of the treasures in the Ohio Valley. It is a matter demanded by every consideration of justice, of public interest, and of the general progress of our country that means should be provided to carry this wealth to market.

I shall therefore move at the proper time the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk, the same inserted in the rivers and harbors bill for the Fifty-sixth Congress, as follows:

Improving Big Sandy River, West Virginia and Kentucky, including Tug and Levisa forks, in accordance with report submitted in House Document No. 235, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, $112,500: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be required to prosecute the project recommended in said report, or said material may be purchased and work done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $666,667, exclusive of the amount herein or heretofore appropriated.

Improving Big Sandy River, West Virginia and Kentucky: Completing improvement of the two locks and dams between Louisa and the mouth of the river, authorized by the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, $50,000, the said sum to be in addition to the amount authorized by said act to be expended on the said locks and dams.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, without disparaging any other committee of this House charged with suggesting the appropriation of the public money, I undertake to say that the Rivers and Harbors Committee is confronted with the discharge of the most difficult, the most delicate, and perhaps the most important duties that devolve upon any committee of this House in recommending the appropriation of money from the Federal Treasury. I say this in the first place, Mr. Chairman, because the other great appropriation committees of this House have the estimates which come from the several departments of Government as the basis and guide for their action; and there is variation therefrom only so far as the state of the public finances demands economy or permits liberality in the treatment of any particular department.

On the other hand, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have no such estimates for their guide. They have before them projects throughout the country calling for the expenditure of more than $300,000,000, which have been duly examined and recommended by the Government engineers for favorable action by Congress. These projects all come to us, those heretofore adopted and those recommended, having behind them the commercial interests throughout the country pressing upon this committee and the Commerce Committee of the Senate their adoption and completion, and the membership of the House of Representatives from different localities urge upon us favorable action.

Now, when it comes to framing the river and harbor bill, instead of being permitted to appropriate that which the Government engineers have recommended, that which the commercial interests throughout the country are pressing, and that which the individual membership of this House urge upon us for recognition, we are compelled, in deference to the other demands upon Congress, to report a bill of not exceeding 20 per cent of the total amount recommended.

Therefore, in eliminating 80 per cent of the sum demanded by approved projects and asked for at our hands by our colleagues, the committee is relegated to the task—the difficult problem—of making selections having in view the various commercial interests involved, the necessities of commerce, engineering problems, geographical location, and the wishes of members of the House of Representatives and the Senate. This House needs but to have that fact called to its attention to understand how great are the difficulties and embarrassments with which the Rivers and Harbors Committee is compelled to contend.

And then, Mr. Chairman, after giving hearings to members of Congress and to the commercial interests throughout the country, and after having spent months of patient toil attempting conscientiously to act for the best interests of the country at large, when we come into the House of Representatives we are confronted with the charge of favoritism and selfishness, and sometimes by gentlemen, who perhaps "live in glass houses," with lack of sincerity and honesty of purpose.

Now, in regard to the charge made in all friendliness by my friend from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY] that this committee had been selfish in its action (and there is nothing in his statement that would impute a more unworthy motive), "in that the members of the committee had provided $47,000,000 in the pending bill for their own States, as against $13,000,000 for projects in other States," while that statement is not accurate, if it were true, bearing in mind the fact that members of this committee come from 17 Commonwealths throughout the country which represent 80 per cent of all the tonnage handled in the United States, that represent 80 per cent of all the shipping owned in the United States, that represent 80 per cent of all the exports which go out from this country to bring in prosperity and happiness to our people and to our land, I may add, the committee has indeed been exceedingly modest, because they have taken unto themselves and to their constituencies and to their States a less percentage of the appropriations than they have of the actual commerce and shipping interests of the country.

But there comes from the State of Iowa a more serious charge upon the membership of this committee. We can not object if any gentleman in the House should feel that the committee has been selfish or that its members have looked after the interests of their own States with more fidelity than they have those of other States, because to be selfish, while it be not admirable, is at least human, and does not involve turpitude or lack of morals or of character; but when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], a gentleman of long service in the House, a gentleman who is forceful in debate and to whom this House and the country always listen with attention, when undertaking to compliment the chairman of this committee (and with his compliments to that gentleman I heartily concur and to them every member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee gladly subscribes), adds thereto the statement "that while he believes the chairman is doing the best work he can, but how rapacious the gentlemen associated with him are it is not for him to say, but that he has the opinion that there are gentlemen on that committee who have particular interests to represent that are so important to them that the public weal is not always thought of when it is necessary to logroll with one another in order that their favorite schemes may have a proper place in the appropriations"—when the gentleman from Iowa said that he imputes to the membership of the committee, to which I have the honor to belong, a lack of both personal and political integrity.

It may be, perhaps, that the gentleman in making the statement did it offhand, without consciousness of what his words imported. It may be that the gentleman has some information as to some members of this committee that warranted him in that statement. If he has not, justice to them and to the country and to their constituents and to this House should have forbade him from making so gracious a statement. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I were to say that the gentleman from Iowa ought not to be permitted to serve upon the committee of which he is the honored chairman, because, perchance, the railroad interests in his immediate locality are powerful and are inimical to the proper development of the waterways and harbors of the country, or at least the smaller ones, no doubt the gentleman would take issue with me.

If I were to say that, while the Rivers and Harbors Committee does not claim to be infallible, and that we, perhaps, doubtless have made mistakes in the framing of this bill, and in every bill that has been framed, at least we have done the best we could and have brought in a bill and subjected it to the criticism of the gentleman from Iowa and of this House—and there comes from the gentleman from Iowa at least one commendation in that he states that it is perhaps the best bill which has ever yet been brought to this House from the Rivers and Harbors Committee—if I were to say that because the great committee of which he is the head, charged with upholding the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission, a Commission created for the purpose of preventing the exactions and rapacity of the great railroad corporations of this country, and stay their hands from unduly levying the hand of tribute upon the commerce of the country; that he has had for six years before him, coming from the Interstate Commerce Commission, a statement that certain decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States had prevented the enforcement of the act which created the Commission as a remedial statute; that that Commission is practically a useless body; that it is without power to prevent the destruction of communities, the confiscation of property, and gross discriminations by these great corporations; and if I were to say that the hands of the railroads or the railroad influence in the community in which the gentleman lives was so powerful that his committee in six years had failed to bring in any bill relating to railroads except the one that the railroads demanded, the antiscalping act, and that his committee has consistently refused to give any relief to the Commission, and that such failure was due to the fact that he has a special interest to serve, the gentleman from Iowa would very properly resent such imputation, and I refrain from such statements.

So that when the gentleman without evidence, except his opinion, makes an assertion such as the one of which I complain, to use a no stronger term, I say that it was at least ungracious and ought not to have been made. I undertake to say, Mr. Chairman, for the 17 members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, that, while we concede to the distinguished chairman of the committee a greater familiarity with the projects and duties of the committee than any other member of the committee possesses, while we concede to him the best-equipped mind for the arduous labors he so well discharges, and a competency never excelled by any chairman of the committee in the past, as to the merits of particular projects and their general relation to the commerce of the country, yet we do not concede that the distinguished chairman of our committee is one inch above any other member of the committee in integrity of purpose and fidelity to an honest desire to discharge fairly and properly the duty of caring for the general welfare and appropriating the public money so as to subserve the commercial interests which are presented for our consideration.

So far as I know and believe, and I undertake to say, there has never been a combination among the members of the committee to secure the carrying of a single appropriation in the river and harbor bill. No member of that committee has ever suggested such a thing to me, and I do not believe that it has ever been suggested by or to a single member of the committee.

Mr. Chairman, when the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] seeks to make it appear that the chairman of our committee [Mr. BURTON] is standing on guard, preventing inroads into the Treasury by members of his committee interested in special projects, I desire to inform him that such statement is unjust to the members of the committee.

I believe and know the chairman of the committee to be actuated by the highest and most honorable motives, and when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] three years ago questioned his sincerity of purpose, I did not agree with the gentleman from Iowa then, nor do I agree with him now. But the gentleman who has the honor to preside over our committee represents greater special interests than any member of the committee, and around the splendid city in which he lives cluster the interests of the great iron industry of this country, and the chairman of this committee has more special interests seeking recognition in this bill than any other single member of the committee; yet the chairman of the committee has never made an appeal to any member of the committee to support any project in which he felt an interest, as a personal matter; but, on the contrary, he has asked that every member of the committee consider those projects upon their particular merits; and so it is with the other members of the committee. We lay no claim to perfection. We do not claim that we have made a perfect bill; but we do claim that every member of the committee, in everything except the power of debate and the capacity to assail the purposes of others, is the peer of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and the peer of every other member of this House in sincerity of purpose and fidelity to duty.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to be diverted from the line of remarks which I purposed making by these matters which have been thrust in. I desire, first, to deal briefly with a few important facts, not with the hope of adding anything to the masterly statement made by the chairman of the committee on Monday, but to discuss the relations of the Rivers and Harbors Committee to the general commerce of the country, and to demonstrate, if possible, that the appropriations carried by the river and harbor bill are more economical in proportion to the interests to be served than those reported by any other great committee in this House, and, furthermore, that nothing has done more to add to the development of the commerce of this country and the creating of an enormous balance of trade in our favor than has the expenditure made under the direction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House and of the Commerce Committee of the Senate.

The total expenditures for rivers and harbors by the National Government from 1879 to 1902 has been $301,874,130; and this has been for a country whose tremendous territory is bounded upon the north by the Great Lakes, with large numbers of harbors to be improved for the accommodation of the unparalleled commerce which is there conducted; upon the east by a long stretch of Atlantic coast, where commerce requires a very large number of improvements; upon the south by the Gulf of Mexico, where numerous ports are fast forging to the front, and upon the west by the Pacific coast, whose harbors afford a gateway to the Orient. Within these confines great rivers and less important streams, necessary for the proper development of the country, have asked and are asking recognition at the hands of the Government, in order that they may play their proper part in bringing this country to the highest state of possible agricultural and commercial development. Why, Mr. Chairman, the little island of Great Britain, with a territory incomparably less than the State from which I come, has had spent for the improvement of the facilities of the harbor of Liverpool and the Manchester Canal more than $150,000,000, a sum equal or more than equal to one-half of the amount spent by this Government upon its rivers and harbors from 1879 to 1901. In order that some idea may be given of the growth of our several interests and the percentage of their relative increase, I submit the following table:

Comparison of exports, 1860, 1880, 1890, and 1901.

It will be seen therefrom that for each decade a healthy increase has been made along every line. Agriculture yet stands out with prominence as our principal reliance for national prosperity, but it will be seen that as late as 1880 agricultural products constituted 83.25 per cent of our total exports, while at that date domestic manufactures were only 12.48 per cent thereof. In 1901 agricultural exports are shown to constitute but 64.62 per cent of the total, while the export of domestic manufactures reached 28.22 per cent, a proportion of the total exports more than double that of twenty years ago. While our exports have increased to so great an extent, the appropriations for the support of the Federal Government have also largely increased in every Department, as will be shown from the following table:

	1887.	1901.	Increase.
			Per cent.
Exports	$703,022,923	$1,460,462,806	100.7
APPROPRIATIONS.
Post-Office	54,365,863	113,658,238	109.6
Navy	16,489,907	65,140,916	295.7
Army	23,753,057	114,220,095	380.8
Agriculture	654,715	4,023,500	514.5
Rivers and harbors	14,473,900	16,285,605	11.3

Mr. Chairman, it appears from this table that as compared with appropriations for other purposes of government, and as compared with our export business, that the appropriations for rivers and harbors has not kept pace with either our exports or appropriations. In 1877 the total exports from the United States from all the ports amounted to $703,022,923; in 1901 these exports had grown to $1,460,462,806, an increase in the seven-year period of 100.7 per cent in the total exports. In the same period in appropriations, in 1877 the appropriations for the Post-Office, as our chairman said on yesterday, most nearly in touch with the business interests of the country, were $54,365,863; in 1901, $113,658,238, an increase in the expenses of the appropriations for the Post-Office Department of 109.6 per cent.

For the Navy, giving round numbers, in 1887, $16,000,000; in 1901, $65,000,000, an increase of 295.7 per cent. For the Army, $23,000,000 in 1887; $114,000,000 for 1901, an increase of 380.8 per cent. For agriculture, $654,000 in 1887; $4,000,000 in 1901, an increase of 514 per cent. For rivers and harbors in 1887, $14,473,900; in 1901, $16,285,605, an increase of only 11.3 per cent. So that, Mr. Chairman, it will be seen that this committee, charged with the only appropriation bill which goes exclusively to build up the great commercial interests of this country, has shown an increase in expenditure far less than that of any of the other committees. Gentlemen may say that the Army and the Navy are necessary, and I concede that it is proper to have a sufficient Army and Navy.

But, Mr. Chairman, there ought not to be in this country of ours the sentiment which says that we will sacrifice the interests of commerce in order that we may be a warlike nation. Why, the expenses—and I do not intend to go into a discussion of subjects that are foreign to this—but the expenses already incurred by this Government in carrying on a war to subject the Philippine Islanders there has been expended a greater sum of money than would be necessary to carry to completion every river and harbor project that has been examined in the United Ststes and approved by the Government engineers.

Now, no one believes that this war is being carried on in a mere spirit of humanity and Christianity. The people of this country know why we keep our Army in the Philippine Islands is because there is a commercial instinct in this country that wants to keep all that we can get and lay our hands on, and the question of cost is the only thing considered by that element.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if we are to take our place among the nations of the earth, to use that deceptive phrase, let us hope it will not be alone as a warlike nation. If we expect to command the peace and ultimately shape the civilization of the world, it must be by building up the agricultural, industrial, and commercial interests of the country, and not by seeing what big guns we can make, how many soldiers we can enlist, or how great a navy we can build to carry our flag upon the seas. If gentlemen insist that such a policy it necessary, they will at least not deny that a liberal policy in regard to rivers and harbors must be carried on at the same time in order that this tremendous expense may be met without putting too severe a tax upon the resources of the country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall insert in my remarks a table showing the exports from the principal North Atlantic, South Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coast ports for the years 1887 and 1901, respectively, showing the increase at these several ports, at all of which extensive improvments have been made by the Federal Government. This increase has been largely due to the appropriations made by Congress for our rivers and harbors. When our agricultural, manufacturing, and other interests go out into the great field of universal activity they meet the sharpest competition from the nations of the earth, and the doctrine of "the survival of the fittest" must prevail. It is absolutely essential, if our farmers are to prosper, if our manufacturers are to maintain the present standard of wages and compete with the products and wares of other nations, that every facility for transportation, which is one of the controlling elements in competition, should be afforded. [Applause.]

Notice the following table:

Domestic exports.

	1887.	1901.

It appears therefrom that the harbor of Boston, which carries one of the largest items in the pending bill, has increased its exports from $57,000,000 in round numbers in 1887 to $142,000,000 in 1901, having largely more than doubled its export business. While the import business is not shown by the table, a still greater increase has been made. In the extreme northeastern portion of our territory, the port of Portland, Me., has grown from less than $2,000,000 in 1887 to more than $12,000,000 for 1901. Philadalphia has more than doubled its business during that period. The South Atlantic ports show about the same proportionate increase, the harbor at Brunswick, Ga., showing the greatest. From less than one and one-half millions of dollars in 1887 it has grown to about eight millions in 1901. The increase of Newport News, Va., has been phenomenal. It has increased from about seven and one-half millions in 1887 to thirty-two and one-half millions in 1901. The Gulf ports show the largest proportionate increase, New Orleans having about doubled its immense business, while Mobile and Pensacola have shown a tremendous increase.

Let me say in passing, as to the appropriation carried in this bill for Mobile, which was criticised by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY], not in a spirit of hostility, but by way comparison with the appropriation provided for his own port of Wilmington, N. C. From the gentleman's own statement it appears that Wilmington has now and has had a greater depth of water on its bar than that of Mobile. Perhaps it may occur to him upon reflection that it was the purpose of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in making a larger appropriation for Mobile to give to that port a depth of water which the harbor at Wilmington has already had provided for it by the National Government. Further, while the harbor of Wilmington has for its principal export cotton alone, Mobile, by reason of its location, is building up a great trade in various products with Cuba, Porto Rico, and other places south of that port. Without disparaging Wilmington, which has a splendid commerce and is well worthy the recognition of Congress, it appears from the foregoing table that Wilmington has just doubled its export business during the period shown thereby, while the business of Mobile, hampered by lack of depth of water, has increased more than fourfold.

Mr. Chairman, the most remarkable showing made by any of the ports, upon either coast, has been made by the port of Galveston, in my own State. From less than $19,000,000 in 1887, the business through that port has grown to $102,000,000 in 1901, and it can be truthfully said that the money expended by the Government at that port has not only resulted in a greater increase than that of the business of any port promoted by Government aid, but the effect of that improvement upon railway transportation, by bringing the Gulf-bound railways into active competition with the Atlantic seaboard routes, has produced the greatest reduction in railway charges for transportation of any other single improvement. While that city was visited by a storm whose effects "staggered humanity" and caused the loss of perhaps 8,000 precious lives and great destruction to property, it will be observed that the courageous people of the city of Galveston have not lost heart, the country has not lost confidence in the port, and an increased volume of commerce is seeking an outlet there. I regret that the committee could not see its way clear to do more for that port than the appropriation carried by the pending bill. It is a fact worthy of more than passing comment that 35 per cent of our export trade now goes out from Gulf and South Atlantic ports.

The business of the Pacific coast ports has shown a healthy increase. While the harbor of San Francisco shows a comparatively small increase in its exports, it must be borne in mind that its imports are of about equal value, and in this it differs from other Pacific ports and the Gulf ports, at each of which exports largely exceed imports. I can not discuss at length the business of the several ports. Suffice it to say that each and every one of them shows a healthy increase in the value of its exports as well as its general commerce.

The great harbor of New York remains, as it always has been and always will be, easily first. And while the appropriations for New York in this bill have been liberal to the State generally, there are some projects about New York Harbor which the committee did not feel authorized to take on at this time, largely due to the fact that the Government is now carrying on projects in New York Harbor involving some eight or nine million dollars which are yet to be completed. The exports and imports and commerce of that port amount to more than $1,000,000,000. I shall not tax the time and patience of the committee to go into these figures further. It will be readily seen that the increase of the business of the country, both as to the harbors and rivers, has far more than kept pace with the appropriations made for their support, maintenance, and extension.

I agree with the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] that it was perhaps unwise at this time to have entered upon a policy of giving a depth of 40 feet to the port of New York. The Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House did not adopt that project, but the Senate, in its wisdom, saw fit to include it in an amendment to a former bill, and it subsequently became a law. As a matter of course, the adoption of the project giving New York 40 feet depth of water has forced the committee to take up, earlier than it otherwise would, the demands of Philadelphia and Boston and other places for deeper water, in order that equality with the port of New York might be preserved. It is not expected to give 40 feet at any other ports, because it has uniformly been the policy of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and the Commerce Committee for many years past to admit the supremacy of the port of New York by carrying on improvements there contemplating at least 5 feet greater depth of water than elsewhere in the country, so that vessels of great depth may find at least one great port in this country which they can safely enter.

Again, in Boston they have some 2 or 3 feet more tide, and it is not necessary on that account to give them quite so great depth of water.

THE GREAT LAKES.

Let me now turn for a while and discuss the commerce of the Great Lakes, whose ports and channels have provisions therefor; the cost of which make up a large part of the pending bill. In the great battle for industrial supremacy in this country the commerce upon the Great Lakes has played a conspicuous part. The improvements undertaken by the National Government upon those great bodies of fresh water and the results therefrom have been of inconceivable advantage to the country. Upon them Congress has expended an enormous amount of money from first to last. The St. Mary's Falls Canal (commonly called the "Soo") has been improved at great expense, and the harbors of the lakes generally made of sufficient depth to accommodate the great vessels which now navigate the lakes, carrying six, seven, and eight thousand tons of freight and making 22 trips during the season, as against 16 trips formerly made by smaller vessels.

These facilities afforded by the Government, coupled with the necessities of commerce and the enterprise of those interested in lake navigation, have caused great improvements to be made in dock facilities, in loading and unloading, and otherwise reducing the cost of transportation and the handling of commodities to a minimum figure. Hours are now required where days were formerly taken to unload and reload, and it is not an unusual thing to have a boat enter one of the lake ports, unload a cargo of 6,000 tons, take on a cargo of 6,000 tons, and clear within twenty-four hours. This in turn has compelled the railways to greatly improve their tracks, rails, roadbed, and terminal facilities in order to keep pace with the progress of the commerce carried upon the lakes.

Again, without these improvements the unequaled iron-ore beds of the Lake Superior region could not have been developed, as the railway rates thereto would have been practically prohibitory. Thus, by the lake development, this ore can be brought down at a minimum cost, and being especially adapted to the manufacture of steel rails, whose economical manufacture is so essential to railway development, the lakes have thereby not only been able to control railway rates in a great degree, but they have been able to help the railroads also in better equipping themselves for the transportation of freight at lower rates. I here insert a table showing the tonnage of vessels owned and used in the coastwise and lakes trade:

Tonnage of vessels owned and used, coastwise and lakes trade.

	1885.	1901.
Atlantic and Gulf coast	2,809,323	2,854,639
Pacific coast	360,608	713,831
Great Lakes	749,949	1,706,294
Western rivers	346,054	249,454

It will be seen therefrom that while the tonnage in 1901 of vessels upon the Atlantic and Gulf coasts is practically the same, that the tonnage of vessels upon the Great Lakes has largely more than doubled. Upon the Pacific coast the tonnage has just about doubled, while a decrease is shown upon the Western rivers. This decrease, however, upon the Western rivers is accounted for by the fact that barge transportation for the heavier products has been demonstrated to be by far the most economical, and barges are not included in this showing. To this fact is largely due the erroneous impression of the gentleman from Iowa and others that commerce upon the rivers has actually decreased.

Through the Detroit River, a narrow stream, which is, however, a pretty fair indication of the business of those lakes, there passes annually a total of 42,000,000 tons of freight. Through the St. Marys Falls Canal there passes a tonnage of 25,643,073 tons, with a value of $267,041,959. In the Cuyahoga district, in which are situated the cities of Cleveland, Fairport, Ashtabula, Conneaut, and Lorain, there is a total tonnage of nearly 20,000,000 tons. Chicago Harbor and Calumet, including the river, have about 12,000,000 tons.

Mr. REEVES. Fourteen million tons.

Mr. BALL of Texas. My colleague upon the committee corrects my statement; doubtless he is right as to Chicago. Buffalo, which is at the other end of the great grain business of the lakes, has about 11,000,000 tons.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Thirteen million tons.

Mr. BALL of Texas. My figures are for the year 1900. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER] tells me that the last statement shows 13,000,000 tons handled at Buffalo.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to illustrate the growth of the lake commerce. In 1889 the total commerce of all the lake ports was twenty-five million and some odd thousands of tons. In 1896 it was fifty-three million and some odd thousands of tons.

In 1901 an increased tonnage fully in keeping with this progress will be shown, although I have not the figures and was unable to obtain them. The total commerce of all the railroads in 1879 was six hundred and nineteen million and some odd tons. The total commerce in 1896, seven years afterwards, was 773,000,000. Thus we see that in the period of seven years which I have selected for comparison, notwithstanding the improved facilities and the increased carrying capacity of railroads which the gentleman from Iowa so forcibly and eloquently depicts, the increased tonnage on the lakes in the seven years amounted to 112.8 per cent, while the increase on the railroads during the seven years was only 24.9 per cent.

So much for the commerce of the waterways, which have done, perhaps, more to enable our manufacturers to go into the markets of the world and take them than any other single agency; that has done much to enable the farmers of the West to get their grain to the markets of the world in competition with all grain-raisng nations, regardless of the scale of wages paid abroad. Mr. Chairman, there has been some disposition in this country to create a public sentiment in favor of appropriations for the great harbors alone and a neglect of our great rivers and smaller interior waterways. Let us examine for a moment some facts in regard to this class of improvements.

The Hudson River, in New York, which is the necessary link in the Erie Canal and Great Lakes outlet to deep water, and upon which liberal appropriations have been made in the past, and in this bill, carries annually about 15,000,000 tons of commerce. The Ohio River, which is one of the most expensive improvements now under way by the National Government, carries annually nearly 15,000,000 tons of freight, and is a necessary connecting link for the coal output down the Monongahela River, and the other products which go out therefrom upon the Mississippi River to New Orleans and elsewhere. Along its banks great manufacturing establishments are being builded up to operate under the most favorable conditions.

When the contemplated Government improvements are finished so as to give navigation at all seasons when ice does not block the river, the commerce will be vastly added to. The Monongahela River, which has been an expensive improvement, and where the Government no doubt was swindled in the price paid for the locks and dams constructed by a private corporation, is yet of such supreme importance to that hive of industries, Pittsburg, to the commerce along the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, that beyond question the country at large has been benefited far in excess of the amount properly expended as well as the amount out of which the Government was "buncoed."

is a favorite camping ground for gentlemen who get up and fight river and harbor bills. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] did not mean to misrepresent in his statement, because he made it from current reports; but he made a statement that the expenditure of eight or ten millions of dollars at Plum Point Reach and Lake Providence Reach had only resulted in a few inches of water, whereas as a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, instead of 2 inches of water it resulted in obtaining a permanent depth of more than 4 feet, and during last season, which was, as I understand, the season of lowest water for the general navigation of the rivers of the country, there was a permanent depth of 9 feet during the entire season upon those reaches.

There was a great amount of money wantonly expended, but it was at a time when there was no other way of developing that great river, which has in its drainage basin 41 per cent of the people of these United States, which in its search for the Gulf of Mexico flows 2,500 miles and drains the territory tributary thereto of 24 States and 2 Territories. The gentleman from Iowa ridicules its commerce, and yet during the year 1899, from Cairo to its mouth—not the entire Mississippi River system—there was carried upon the bosom of that great river $239,000,000 worth of the products of this country, going out to seek the markets of the world at a rate of freight, considering also the effect of the river upon railway rates, that if the river had not been improved would have cost the agricultural interests of this country more than $10,000,000 additional to transport.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there was a time when I did not subscribe to the theory that the levees were for any other purpose than the protection of private property. While I know that my friend from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is better prepared to discuss this subject than I, as he is better posted upon conditions existing upon the river, because of the fact that the port upon that river (New Orleans) is the chief competitor of the port of Galveston, in the great State from which I hail, I feel in justice to the committee which has made this large appropriation for the Mississippi River that I can speak as one not prejudiced in favor of our action. I desire to say that after hearing the arguments and reasons of the advocates of the levy system upon the Mississippi River, prejudiced against it in advance, I have come to the conclusion that, as was so well stated by the eminent member of that Commission, Judge Taylor, "before you can get permanent and successful navigation of the river at low water, you must control it at flood tide."

The theory is simple; with that great river carrying the most enormous amount of silt of any river upon the earth, coming down at flood tide freighted with this heavy load; if it is permitted to dissipate its force and spread out all over the country necessarily the sediment comes down into the channel and prevents its proper navigation; and the statement has been made and can not be contradicted and is conclusive upon the proposition "that before any improvement of any character was attempted upon the Mississippi River that wherever the banks were high and firm and the channel best confined in every instance navigation was best, and where the banks were low and wide and the channel spread out in every instance navigation was poorest."

In perhaps eight years more we will have completed this extensive improvement, and whether it was wisely begun or not in the first instance, there is no way, even if the Rivers and Harbors Committee desired to do so, to abandon that great work until it has been pushed to a successful completion; and in my judgment the best interests involved, from the standpoint alone of navigation, will justify the completion of the improvement as now projected, and if in carrying out that proper and legitimate purpose and object the Government reclaims hundreds of thousands of acres of fertile land, the most productive on earth, upon which people can build their homes and rear happy families, if that incidental benefit comes, I am only too glad that the money expended by the Government has accomplished the double purpose of aiding the cause of navigation and of benefiting the material interests of a splendid section of this great country of ours. [Applause.]

At the risk of tiring the committee, let me say something upon the subject of the relative charges for transportation by water and by rail, and indulge in some comparisons as to the effect of water competition upon railroad transportation. I insert a table for that purpose:

Comparison of water and railway transportation of wheat, in cents per bushel.

CHICAGO TO NEW YORK.

Year.	Lakes and canal.	Rail.

ST. LOUIS TO LIVERPOOL.

Year.	Via New Orleans.	Via New York.

This table shows that the grain rate either from Chicago to New York or St. Louis to Liverpool is about one-third of the rate twenty years ago. This has been due to four causes—necessity of meeting foreign competition, improvements in railroad ability to handle traffic economically, improvement of the harbors upon the Great Lakes, and improvement upon the Mississippi River and of the harbor of New Orleans, where ships of much greater depth of draft can now come in. In every instance where a reduction of rates has been made the initiative has been taken by the water route. It is estimated that the deepening of our harbors secures a reduction on the rates charged for transporting grain of about 1 cent per bushel for each additional foot of water.

Mr. Chairman, the actual saving upon freight rates that would appear from a computation, taking the volume of business actually handled upon the waterways and estimating the reduction of rates thereon, is but a bagatelle compared with the reductions made by railroads in their tariff schedules as the direct result of water competition. The gentleman from Iowa in setting forth the enormously increased ability of the railroads to handle freight at a greatly reduced rate has spoken truthfully, but he does not appreciate as he should the improvements which have been going on in the transportation upon our inland waterways. The railroads can never hope to compete successfully therewith upon certain commodities.

The railroads can not bring the iron ore from the Lake Superior region at a rate that they could be profitably used. The railroads can not carry coal from Buffalo to Duluth, 1,000 miles, for 25 cents per ton, as it is now being carried. The railroads can not take coal from Pittsburg to New Orleans, 2,000 miles, at 75 cents per ton. Not alone, Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman indicates, to give the people of New Orleans cheap fuel, but to furnish also to the industries between the head of the Monongahela River and New Orleans that essential element for manufacturing purposes—cheap fuel. While he gazes upon the double-track railroads, with great mogul engines, let him look also at the spectacle of 36 barges coming down abreast upon the Mississippi River, carrying 1,000 tons each of coal.

It has been with the aid of the waterways of the country, giving cheap iron ore and cheap coal as the essential element, that the manufacturing industries of this country have been able to change the exports of agricultural products in 1880 from a percentage of 81.13 of the total exports, compared with 12.76 per cent of domestic manufactures, to the proportion in 1901 of agricultural exports 64.62 per cent and domestic manufactures to 28.22 per cent of our total domestic exports. The gentleman from Iowa questions the effectiveness of river competition in regulating railway freight tariffs. As against his opinion I place that of Mr. Stuyvesant Fish, president of the Illinois Central, who wrote of the Lower Mississippi:

We can, however, expect to have the channel of the river so far straightened and deepened as to afford transportation by steamboat and barges at rates which will continue to regulate those of railroads as effectually as the rate charged by the trunk lines from Chicago to the Atlantic seaboard are regulated by the water competition of the Great Lakes and the Erie Canal. Indeed, the almost total absence of any closing of navigation on the Lower Mississippi by ice will then prolong this competition throughout the year.

Now, that is not only true of the great highways of commerce, but it is true of the smaller streams which penetrate into the country. For instance, on the Ouachita River in Arkansas and Louisiana they have navigation a part of the year, and during the rest of the year they have none. The freight on their cotton for 700 miles from Camden, Ark., when the stage of the water permits navigation, is $1.25 a bale; whereas the railroad rate, when the freight can not be taken by water, is $3.10 for a distance of 475 miles. Flour by water, 35 cents per barrel, as against 75 cents by rail.

Then take the incoming freight. From Boston, for instance, where they buy their boots and shoes, to Camden the water rate is 79 cents; the railroad rate, $2.02. For this reason we have made a liberal appropriation in this bill for the Ouachita River.

In Texas, Mr. Chairman, none of our navigable rivers have been improved, because when Texas and the States west of the Mississippi River were urging deep water at Galveston Texas local interests were compelled to make a sacrifice that no other State was ever required to make—to refrain from urging other projects until deep water at Galveston was secured. That project has been pushed to a successful culmination, and has brought a harvest in results to the States from a distance in greatly reduced freight rates. Texas has received no benefits therefrom in the reduction of local railroad rates, our only benefit being the saving upon ocean freights caused by the admission of deeper draft vessels and the cessation of lighterage charges, which has perhaps saved to our people in Texas 50 cents per bale on their cotton, amounting to, say, $1,500,000 per annum.

In Texas our grain rates by rail, average 300 miles, is 9½ cents per bushel, while the rate from the lake ports to New York by water average 1,200 miles, is 4½ cents per bushel, and from St. Louis to New Orleans, by the river route, 1,261 miles, the rate is 4½ cents per bushel. Cotton in Texas per bale, average rail haul 165 miles from Houston, is $3 per bale, while from Memphis to New Orleans, 713 miles by water, the rate is 80 cents per bale, and from New Orleans to Cincinnati, 1,600 miles by water, $1 per bale.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, in this State of magnificent distances, the volume of whose annual products is $306,000,000, and in view of the fact that Texas has none of her rivers under improvement, the Rivers and Harbors Committee has given not so much as I had hoped, but liberal recognition to our two principal rivers, the Trinity and Brazos. We have also made a liberal appropriation for the Houston Ship Channel, which, when completed, is expected to furnish in conjunction with Galveston unrivaled facilities for the commerce of Texas and other States tributary to Texas, but it is expected to save over $1,000,000 per annum upon the cotton crop of Texas alone, to say nothing of the saving to the other products of Texas and the commerce of other States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, permit me to say something for the smaller interior waterways of our country.

I know that it is a fashion to charge that a great deal of the money that is carried by the river and harbor appropriation bill is squandered upon insignificant interior waterways. The chairman of the committee showed yesterday that for all these waterways which carry less than 100,000 tons of freight only $400,000 is included in this bill.

I undertake to say, Mr. Chairman, that the general impression in this country is that $10,000,000 is expended upon the small rivers and creeks of the interior of the country, whereas the statement of the chairman, as compiled and placed in the RECORD yesterday, shows that less than half a million dollars is embraced in the bill for that purpose.

I say, further, Mr. Chairman, that the interior rivers and creeks, if you please, will bear favorable comparison with the smaller harbors, and that the smaller harbors of this country show a less tonnage and less business in proportion to the amount appropriated than do the inland waterways. And, besides this, the smaller harbors are largely a matter of convenience to the localities in which they are situated. They have no specific bearing upon the question of transportation—at least not nearly as much as these streams which penetrate into the interior of the States, very often enabling great development in our material interests—always controlling and regulating freight charges, which bear to the point of confiscation upon the owners of the minerals and the lumber and other industries whose field of production is pierced by these inland waterways. That sentiment is largely due to the fact that the metropolitan press, which so largely controls public opinion in this matter, is chiefly interested in the great harbors of the country. The railroad corporations having their termini at the great harbors of the country, also lend the weight of their influence to the dissemination of this idea. And so it comes to pass that in our river and harbor bills, the waterways of this country, those which give life and vitality to communities, permitting them to survive, to resist, and to overcome the exactions of the transportation companies, have far less consideration in these bills than they ought to have.

Instead of being $400,000 there ought to be $5,000,000 in this bill for such projects, and if this committee had not been limited by the necessities and conditions that surrounded it there would have been. It is not because the Committee on Rivers and Harbors does not believe that the inland waterways, the rivers and creeks, if you please, of this country, where they can make a showing, are entitled to consideration, but simply because the limitations put upon our bill and the necessities of great projects clamoring for recognition has prevented as full recognition of smaller projects as the committee would only be too glad to have given.

Mr. Chairman, a few thoughts more, in conclusion. There are a great number of States which have no recognition, directly, in this bill, and yet I undertake to state that in many instances States are more vitally affected by rivers and harbors improvements which have no rivers and harbors within their borders than are the places where the improvements are made. For instance, our Missouri friend has been looking a little crosswise at us in some respects about this bill, and yet I feel entirely sure that the large appropriation for New Orleans will bring greater results for the city of St. Louis and the State of Missouri in the way of decreased charges upon their products than will inure to the city of New Orleans and the State of Louisiana. The business interests of Missouri and other Western States have insisted upon this improvement with as much vigor as have the business interests of the State of Louisiana.

Take my own State, for instance. We have been criticised for the large sum of money appropriated for the harbor at Galveston, just as the ignorant criticise the expenditure at the great St. Marys Falls Canal, or on the Monongahela River, which bears its enormous tonnage down to Pittsburg and thence to New Orleans, giving cheap fuel to the people who live along the banks and enabling manufacturing industries to exist and thrive; and just as these improvements are sometimes charged up to the State in which they are situated, although the people of many other States are more benefited, so the appropriation at Galveston is charged up to my State and frequently stands like a stone wall in my way when I am urging recognition for other improvements in Texas. That improvement at Galveston has not reduced the local freight rates in Texas one iota. We got deep water at Galveston in 1896, and at that time we sent out from there less than 1,000,000 bushels of grain. Now, the export of grain from Galveston is nearly 20,000,000 bushels.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. KLEBERG. I ask that my colleague be allowed to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Texas be allowed to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BALL of Texas. The local freight rates in Texas are as high to-day as they were in 1896. So that so far as local transportation in Texas is concerned we do not get the benefit of deep water at Galveston, and the only benefit we have received has been in the admission of larger ships to that harbor, which take off our cotton at reduced rates. Perhaps there has also been a reduction of two or three cents a bushel on grain, on account of the deeper-draft vessels. But now how about the State of Kansas, which does not appear in this bill? In 1896, the year that deep water was secured at Galveston, the Gulf-bound roads immediately entered into competition with the Atlantic seaboard routes, and that very year the rate on grain from Kansas was reduced 6 cents per bushel, resulting in a saving to the farmers of Kansas in one year of more than the entire cost of the jetties.

So there are States west of the Mississippi that do not appear in this bill at all which receive the benefit of the competition produced by the opening of Gulf ports, setting the great railroad systems into competition with each other, thus bringing down the cost of transportation. Often these States receive greater benefits than the States where the improvements are actually located.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that instead of losing in popular confidence, the river and harbor interests are more popular than ever before and ought to receive more liberal recognition at the hands of the Congress. Appropriations should be in a greater degree commensurate with the growing business and commerce of this country; and I believe that if the time prophesied by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] should come, when the river and harbor bill shall carry $100,000,000, not to be expended in one year, but in three or four years, the time usually required to carry out the provisions of such bills, that the people of this country and the material interests of this country will reap a reward, a benefit, and a fruition therefrom that will justify even so great an expenditure for rivers and harbors. [Applause.]

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield thirty minutes to my colleague [Mr. THOMPSON].

[Mr. THOMPSON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk to be read an amendment, which, at the proper time, I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read in the gentleman's time for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding as a separate paragraph after line 2, page 52, the following:

"For the completion of Lock and Dam No. 4 in said Coosa River, Georgia and Alabama, the sum of $199,000, and the balance of said sum, if any be left after the completion of said lock and dam, shall be expended in the completion of Horse Leg Shoals, and dredging and improving the channel between Rome, Ga., and Lock No. 4."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors [Mr. BURTON], in speaking of the Coosa River yesterday, used this language:

It is true that $1,200,000 has been expended on it, but for some years past no appropriation has been made to continue the work.

That statement of the chairman of the committee was incorrect in this: He says that for several years past no appropriation has been made for the prosecution of this project. If by that statement he meant to refer to the fact that no bill has passed for the purpose of continuing the work on the project, that is correct. But if he means to convey the idea that no appropriation for the prosecution of the work was in any river and harbor bill for some years past, then he is incorrect. He certainly remembers, or if he does not, I will refer him to page 68 of the bill which his committee reported a year ago, and he will find that that bill contained the very appropriation of $199,000 which is embraced in the amendment I have just had read at the Clerk's desk. In other words, an appropriation of $199,000 was there provided for, to be used by the Secretary of War in the prosecution of this very project for which the chairman of the committee says no appropriation has been made for several years.

Of course the statement of the chairman of the committee was not intended to do injustice to this enterprise, and, as I have said, if he meant merely that no bill was passed making appropriation to this work he was correct; but if he means that no bill was contemplated or even perfected by the committee of which he is the able chairman, then his statement in regard to the matter is incorrect.

Further on in his remarks the chairman of the committee says in response to a question by my colleague from Alabama [Mr. THOMPSON]:

That we have an estimate from a local engineer in charge there that says it will cost not merely $6,000,000, but $10,000,000 and over, to complete that improvement.

I have seen the report of the engineer (Captain Judson) to whom he refers. That is the same engineer of whom my colleague from Alabama [Mr. THOMPSON] has just spoken, and, like my colleague, I can not account for the change which came over the spirit of the dreams of that engineer, and especially within the brief period of three months.

Now, Mr. Chairman, over against that statement of that engineer I desire to read the substance of a conversation that occurred between him and the distinguished chairman of the committee, [Mr. BURTON], in the presence of a gentleman from Gadsden, my home town, while several members of the committee were going down this very river.

The gentleman who wrote the statement from which I read is Captain Lay, the president of the Alabama Commercial Association. He says:

I know that just one year ago last November, when a few members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee were looking over the Coosa River, just after leaving Gadsden on the steamer Leota, we had a conference with Chairman BURTON in the rear end of the cabin. At this conference Captain Judson took a strong stand for the Coosa, and one of his remarks I remember well. He said the Coosa was an unusually favorable stream for improving. He compared it with the Mississippi, Red River, Arkansas, and other streams, but said the Coosa was more favorable for improving than any of them, and went into details to show why it was so.

This was in November, 1900, and yet it seems that upon a statement made by that same engineer, in less than a year from that time the committee sees fit to recommend the discontinuance of that work.

Again, Mr. Chairman, over against that statement of Captain Judson, made the 24th of October, 1901, I put his own report made to the Secretary of War less than three months before he made the statement upon which the chairman bases the remarks I have previously referred to.

I read from the report of Judson in regard to Coosa River, on page 1789, Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers, Part III, as follows:

The following is the estimate of funds required:

Completing Lock No. 4	$192,845
Constructing Lock and Dam No. 5	238,444
Constructing Dam at Horse Leg Shoals	3,000
Channel work between Locks 3 and 4	9,515
Repairs on steam towboat Leota	8,000

This amount can be profitably and advantageously expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

This report was made June 30, 1901, just a little over three months before he made the report recommending the discontinuance of the work.

Judson was on the work only about a year, in all, when he made his adverse recommendation, and I undertake to say that he has never made a survey of the river or been over the obstructed portions in all his life.

In fact, from the information I have, while he had charge of the work he was more familiar with the golf links than with the links of the surveyor's chain.

Again, Mr. Chairman, over against that report of this engineer, who, while professing to be an expert, is shown to have absolutely contradicted himself within three months' time, I put the report of Captain Price, the engineer who made the survey, who did go over the river, and whose opinion, it seems to me, ought to have been deferred to by the committee, if they had taken the trouble of going into an examination of that report, as they ought to have done.

The chairman of the committee said in his statement yesterday:

I do not believe 4 feet of navigation, where a boat must go through 30 locks and have the delays incident to it, will develop traffic worthy of the name.

This idea he also seems to get from the statement of Judson.

Captain Price speaks along these very lines with the knowledge of one who had intelligence enough to show what he based his opinion on. This Judson does not do.

In the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers of 1890, part 2, page 1672, Captain Price says of his survey of the Coosa River.

To improve the 116¼ miles of the river between lock 4 and Wetumpka 27 locks, with a total lift of 300 feet, will be required, which in the tables herewith are numbered consecutively from No. 5 to No. 31, the last of the series at Wetumpka.

The estimates submitted for rock excavations provide for a channel 100 feet wide and 4 feet deep at extreme low water through such reefs and shoals as are not drowned out by the dams.

A depth of 6 feet was not provided for, because extreme low water occurs so seldom and is of so short duration that it was not deemed advisable for the present to recommend the much greater expenditure required to procure it. The depth on the mitersills of the locks at extreme low water having been fixed at 6 feet, should the demands of commerce at any time in the future require a minimum depth of 6 feet in the channels no change will be necessary in the locks.

On the same page he puts the estimated costs, including rock excavations, at $6,074,913.

On page 1673 he says:

An otherwise available route of water transportation from northern Georgia to the Gulf of Mexico, 776 miles in length, is now blocked in its middle portion by a stretch of 116¼ miles of impassable river, which can be made navigable at a cost of $6,074,913.

Taking this view of the improvement, and distributing the cost over the entire distance, the cost per mile becomes $7,841.

On this subject I make the following extracts from the opinions expressed by my predecessors in reports printed in the annual reports of the Chief of Engineers for the years named:

Col. J. H. Simpson, report of 1871, page 564, says:

"It is fair to assume that the opening of the Coosa River to navigation between Wetumpka and Greensport will be the virtual opening of the channel for direct trade between Rome, Ga., and Mobile, Ala., via the Mobile, Alabama, and Coosa rivers, by a water course 700 miles in length available at all seasons of the year.

"The opening and development of the rich and extensive coal and iron mines in the Coosa Valley will render this thoroughfare the great and important feeder of Mobile and the Gulf ports generally.

"The valuable products of the different counties bordering upon the Coosa River which now seek a market over rough and circuitous roads would naturally tend to this great highway, and the benefits of the great carrying trade thus created would be felt throughout the length of the river. Many products which are now neglected because of the difficulty of transportation would find a ready market and become a source of profit to the producer."

Lieutenant-Colonel McFarland, report of 1892, page 507, says:

"The region passed through by this portion of the river is very rich in coal and iron, the production of which could not fail to be greatly encouraged by the prosecution of the improvements herein suggested."

Lieut. Col. William R. King, report of 1877, page 598, says:

"The Coosa River is an exceptionally favorable one for improvement since its mean depth is greater in comparison with its average width than most of the Western rivers, and its banks and channel are generally well defined and permanent. The necessity for its improvement has been repeatedly urged by legislatures, commercial societies, and engineers."

Maj. A. N. Darnell, report of 1881, page 1222, says: "The improvement is believed to be of great local, national, and international importance for the following reasons: It would give an unbroken water communication of about 800 miles from the Gulf of Mexico to the southern border of Tennessee and the northwestern border of Georgia. It would supply a large demand for fuel, iron, and building materials at rates much below the present. It would reduce immensely to the United States the cost of the large supplies of coal and iron which would be required by it on the Gulf of Mexico in time of war, and in time of peace it would result in a saving in a reduction of the cost of these items to the cities of this section generally, and to the steamers, both merchant and war, of all nations navigating the Gulf, which would soon reach the estimated cost of the work."

Without further lengthening this report, I will only state that I concur fully in the views above stated.

On page 1677 Captain Price states further:

The plan of improvement proposed is the establishment of a system of slack-water navigation, giving a depth of 4 feet over the various reefs and shoals obstructing the river, by the construction of a series of locks and dams with short reaches of canal along the river side, where advantage can be taken of islands and reefs for their formation, in such cases avoiding the construction of long high dams across the river that would prevent the passage of boats over them, except during the highest floods, and also effect the least possible change in the overflow of bottom lands during the flood; the locks to have a depth of 6 feet on the miter sills at mean low-water stage, or 2 feet deeper than the normal depths of the pools between them. As these points, however, would be comparatively few, it would be an easy matter to increase the depth on them to the same as on the miter sills without any interference to navigation should such be deemed necessary at any future time.

This report of a man who surveyed the river and speaks from actual knowledge refutes the proposition that a 4-foot channel between locks is insufficient, and if the committee had been seeking for a reason why a 4-foot channel was recommended they would have found it in that very able report of Captain Price.

If there is anything more needed to refute the contention that a 4-foot low-water channel is insufficient, it will be found in the fact that for years, ever since the construction of these locks, steamboats of 400 tons burden and from 2 to 4 feet draft, loaded to the guards, have been passing through the locks and over that stretch of the river between the locks. There has not been a day in years and years that navigation on this stream between Rome, Ga., and Greensport, Ala., has been obstructed. We have perennial navigation there.

In the driest seasons of the year we have from Rome, Ga., where the Coosa is formed by the confluence of the Etowah and the Oostanaula rivers, down to Lock 4, over 200 miles of continuous navigation.

Again, Mr. Chairman, against this statement of Judson I will put testimony of Major Flagler, an engineer of intelligence and experience, delivered before the Rivers and Harbors Committee at a hearing in May, 1900.

Questioned by the chairman and other members of the committee in regard to the improvement of Coosa River, he answered as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. What will be the cost of the project?

Captain FLAGLER. It is estimated to complete it as it now stands $6,074,000.

The CHAIRMAN. How much has been expended?

Captain FLAGLER. About $1,300,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the channel one which can be easily maintained when once it is obtained?

Captain FLAGLER. Yes; it is by far the best I have seen on any river in the country in that respect. It is a very permanent river, and below Rome is very free from snags and logs that we generally have in most of the Southern rivers.

Mr. SPARKMAN. How many locks and dams are there?

Captain FLAGLER. There will be 31 locks and, I think, only 27 dams.

Mr. BERRY. Thirty-one locks in 75 miles?

Captain FLAGLER. A little more than that. There would be 27 in the present 68 miles. Four of the locks are already completed.

Captain Flagler further stated:

I made a few investigations in regard to costs we should have in the transportation of coal down the Coosa River. Congress in 1892 restored the original dimension of the locks on the river to 322 by 52 for all locks to be constructed, and that was done to permit the passage of a steamer with three barges, which was considered to be the most economical method of transporting coal on that river.

The CHAIRMAN. What would it cost to transport a ton of coal from Gadsden to Mobile?

Captain FLAGLER. From the coal fields some distance below Gadsden from where they go it would be about 22 cents, giving every possible margin I can to the boat company, and that would be the actual cost of transportation down there. Then these boats would carry other freight, they would carry passengers and other things, and I think from 22 to 25 cents would be the outside amount charged.

The CHAIRMAN. What would be the tonnage of the barges?

Captain FLAGLER. Four hundred tons, and the boat would probably carry 300, and that would be 1,500 tons of load, making seven hours of lockage, taking six days and fourteen hours a round trip, taking the conditions of the Alabama River and adding the time for lockages. This coal is now obtainable in this region at a dollar and a half a ton, and it can be delivered at the gulf for $1.75 a ton, whereas by the last reported commercial statistics from Gulf ports I see coal has already increased to $5 a ton for foreign export. That is apparently what coal is considered worth when exported. If coal can be brought down from the Coosa Valley and delivered at the Gulf ports at $1.75 per ton, it can certainly be sold at a figure that will increase the national export of coal tremendously.

Mr. BISHOP. What does it cost by rail?

Captain FLAGLER. The least it has ever been has been a dollar and fifty cents per ton freight.

Mr. Chairman, we have the reports of every engineer that has been on the work since it was begun, recommending its completion as begun, and agreeing that it will take about $6,000,000 in addition to that already spent to finish it, but it would require too much time to read them all.

Besides, it will be noticed that the estimate of $6,000,000 is predicated on the use of cut-stone work, whereas much less expensive concrete is now being used instead. An engineer has estimated that this will reduce the original estimate at least $1,000,000.

In Flagler's hearing it will be seen that he also refutes the statement of Judson and of the chairman of the committee that the 4-foot channel between locks would be insufficient for the transportation of coal.

Yet, in the face of all this, the committee, on a report of an engineer shown by his own self-contradictory statements to be unworthy of credit, recommends the abandonment of the work. But even if his statements are true, he also recommends the completion of lock 4 and the building of a close dam some 12 miles below, and there ending the work.

If this is to be done, why is it that the committee did not at least complete lock 4, and not allow it to remain to wash away before another committee can deal more justly with it. Is this the way a prudent man would transact his own business?

I will speak presently of the magnitude of this river, and will show that even if the cost should be more than originally contemplated, it should not be abandoned after the Government has spent a million and a quarter dollars on the project. A year ago, as I have said, the Rivers and Harbors Committee embraced an appropriation of $175,000 to complete lock 4 in its bill. That amount was increased to $199,000 in the Senate, and ran the gauntlet of a conference committee, and only failed of passage by being talked to death by a Senator.

This time they do not do that even, but the Alabama and Georgia members, through whose States the river runs, and the other members of that great committee sat there, and instead of giving appropriation enough to save the partially completed lock and dam, they allow it to go to destruction and be washed away without so much as making an effort to save it.

Alabama and Georgia, it is true, have been liberally dealt with in this bill; but would it not have seemed more like the committee was trying to look after the general welfare of our Government if they had so divided these appropriations as to have saved this unfinished work?

I can not understand what motive prompted the committee to the course it pursued. One who pretends to know, the secretary of one of the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, in an article to an Alabama newspaper of March 10, 1902, says:

> As to the resurvey and original survey of the Coosa, provided for in the rivers and harbors bill, it is here stated upon the highest and most direct authority that for months it has been the positive purpose of Chairman BURTON and, incidentally, of the entire Republican majority of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, to provide for a permanent dam at lock 4 in the Coosa, and entirely abandon the project of further improving the river.

I have conversed with several members of this committee, and this article is in a very different tone to that in which those members talked with me.

The same article says in regard to Mr. BANKHEAD, the Alabama member of the committee:

> Finally, he insisted that a reasonable proportion of the sum total voted to all Alabama be given to the Coosa. The reply to this was, in effect, that the majority would be willing to cut down Alabama's allowance to the extent of what was demanded for the Coosa.

This statement is also at variance with the friendly spirit professed by the members of the committee toward the river, and forces the belief that somebody is not doing the fair thing by the Coosa, and that the whole matter does not appear on the surface.

But, Mr. Chairman, before I conclude, I want to briefly call the attention of Congress to what and where the Coosa River is. Perhaps it will be a revelation to those who hear me when I state that, leaving out the Mississippi, this is the second largest river, both in length and volume of water, in the South. But, nevertheless, this is true. It rises in the mountains of North Georgia and East Tennessee, and flows in a southwesterly and southerly direction until it empties into the Gulf of Mexico. But for an obstruction of about 68 miles in the river it would afford constant navigation the year round for about 865 miles.

I beg to read as part of my remarks a few extracts from a memorial to Congress prepared by Captain Lay, the president of the Alabama Commercial Association, in regard to this splendid stream:

> It (the Coosa River) is formed by a junction of the Oostanaula and Etowah rivers, at Rome, Ga. From the most northerly navigable point the distance along these streams to the Gulf of Mexico is as follows:

	Miles.
Oostanaula River	108
Coosa River	315
Alabama River	390
Mobile River	50
Total	863

There would be a continuous water route of transportation over the bosom of these rivers to the Gulf but for the shoals and rapids on the Coosa River, distributed for a distance of only 142 miles from Greensport to Wetumpka, Ala., and these shoals and rapids are intermingled with long pools of deep water. However, of this distance, there has been opened to navigation by the Government improvement of the river about 35 or 40 miles from Greensport down to Lock 4, Ala.

To give a more correct idea of the magnitude of the river and its possibilities, we quote from the report of Charles Frith, United States assistant engineer, in his report of November 24, 1888, in which he says:

"Velocity observations taken at Lock 4 show a discharge of 3,921 cubic feet with a velocity of 1.33 feet per second at a stage of 1.8 feet above low water. Similar observations at Wetumpka at low water show a discharge of 5,796 cubic feet with a velocity of 0.9 foot per second.

"In the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1879, page 1293, the low-water discharge of the Mississippi at St. Paul is given at 5,800 cubic feet per second; in the report for 1880, page 482, the low-water discharge of the Hudson River between Troy and Albany is given as about 2,000 cubic feet per second, and in the report for 1881, page 1929, the low-water discharge of the Ohio River at Pittsburg is given as 1,666 cubic feet at zero of the gauge, and as 5,810 cubic feet per second at 9 inches of the gauge.

"Comparing these discharges with that of the Coosa at Wetumpka, it appears that the volume of water flowing in the Coosa at low water is about equal to that of the Mississippi at St. Paul, about 2.8 times greater than that in the Hudson at Albany, and about 3.5 times greater than that in the Ohio at Pittsburg."

Steam navigation was begun on the Upper Coosa about fifty years ago, since which time that portion of the river has been continuously and successfully navigated by steam vessels between Rome, Ga., and Greensport, Ala., a distance of about 175 miles, and this distance has recently been increased about 40 miles by the opening of the river to Lock 4.

The meanderings of the river as it flows southwest, crossing the valley from side to side through fertile fields of agriculture, intermingled with rich mineral and timber deposits, make it accessible to almost every portion of the valley, and the fact that this portion of the country is the southwestern extremity of the great Appalachian chain accounts for the presence of so large a number of valuable minerals in the Coosa Valley and is a geological sequence.

The drainage area of the Coosa basin above Wetumpka, including its tributaries, is about 6,850 square miles, which is rich in agriculture, forests, and minerals.

The climate of the valley is salubrious, mild, and temperate; the springs are early and wonderfully balmy; the summers are long and even in temperature; the autumns are late and dry, and the winters are so slow of approach and so mild that some portions of the crops are frequently left out in the fields until after Christmas.

That part of the Coosa Valley lying in Georgia is bounded on the northwest by Lookout Mountain, on the southeast by the line of hills or mountains embracing the gold belt of Georgia. This region is traversed by the waters of the Coosawattee, Connasauga, Oostanaula, Etowah, and Chattooga rivers and Big Cedar Creek and their tributaries, all of whose waters help to form the Coosa.

These river basins and mountain sides are densely timbered with hard woods. The white-oak region of the Chattanooga range covers about 500 square miles and still possesses the greater portion of its virgin forests. This region embraces a population of about 225,000, and covers an area of about 6,000 square miles of productive soil and unsurpassed mineral resources.

They produce about 50,000 bales of cotton annually, 4,500,000 bushels of corn, 1,500,000 bushels of oats, 1,700,000 bushels of wheat, and other farm products in proportion.

There are nine counties in Alabama lying immediately upon the Coosa River, and cut off from all water communication with the Alabama River, to wit: Cherokee, Etowah, Calhoun, St. Clair, Talladega, Shelby, Coosa, Chilton, and Elmore. The area of these counties lying immediately upon the Coosa is about 3,566,272 acres, of which there is probably 632,855 acres in a high state of cultivation. These lands are wonderfully fertile and easy to cultivate. The most diversified farming is carried on in every part of the Coosa Valley, and with the most gratifying success. Cotton, corn, oats, rye, sugar corn, and potatoes are the principal crops, though almost every vegetable that grows in the temperate zone is produced here; they thrive almost the year round. Fruits grow to perfection, especially apples, peaches, pears, and grapes. The soil and climate seem peculiarly suitable to grape culture. Indeed, fruits of every variety flourish in these soils. Strawberries, raspberries, figs, and melons will inevitably yield in proportion to the attention bestowed upon them.

The population of these nine counties is over 230,000 souls. The assessed value of their property is over $45,000,000. They have in cultivation nearly 700,000 acres of land. They produce annually about 150,000 bales of cotton, 3,500,000 bushels of corn, 750,000 bushels of oats, 500,000 bushels of wheat, and other farm products, including stock, in proportion.

TONNAGE.

The combined tonnage of agricultural products grown annually in that portion of Alabama and Georgia lying immediately on the Coosa River is as follows:

	Tons.
Cotton	50,000
Cotton seed	100,000
Corn	224,000
Oats	40,500
Wheat	67,500
Cattle, sheep, and hogs	20,000
Total annual tonnage	502,000

The value of this may be safely put at $16,000,000 per annum, to say nothing of the miscellaneous agricultural products and the thousands of horses and mules shipped annually from the Coosa Valley.

TIMBER RESOURCES.

There are 2,835,000 acres of unimproved lands lying in the nine counties immediately upon the Coosa River in Alabama.

These lands are clothed with virgin forests of long leaf yellow pine, intermingled with white, red, chestnut oak, hickory, and many other varieties of valuable timbers. These forests contain not less than 5,000 feet of timber per acre, making a grand total of 14,175,000,000 feet, or a tonnage of about 20,000,000 tons, the value of which may be placed at $35,000,000.

Cutting timber from this great forest at the rate of 80,000,000 feet per annum, it would take over a hundred years to denude this forest of its virgin timber, and shipping at this rate would give a tonnage of 150,000 tons per annum from this source alone, whose value would be $5,000,000.

IRON ORES.

Iron exists in the greatest quantities in all portions of the valley. Large iron-ore mines are being extensively worked at Gadsden, Attalla, Crudup, and Gaylesville, from which hundreds of tons of red iron ore is mined daily.

Brown iron ores are being very extensively mined in the Talladega, Anniston, and Piedmont, Ala., and Cave Spring, Ga., regions, and the extent of these deposits is beyond conception. Large and inexhaustible deposits of iron are found right on the banks of the Coosa River, accompanied by coal and lime in great abundance in close proximity, which make the river bank a very desirable place for iron and steel making.

The present output of the iron-ore mines of the Coosa Valley will probably reach 1,600,000 tons per annum, representing a value of $2,400,000. And we might safely say that this amount of ore could be increased to almost any amount that mankind might desire.

LIME.

The lime interest of the Coosa Valley demands more than a passing thought, when we take into consideration that the lime deposits of this valley are probably the richest and most extensive to be found anywhere in the United States, and the further fact that the greatest market for lime is found in the sugar refineries in Louisiana and the West Indies, and this market begins where the waters of the Coosa River, the object of this memorial, empty into the Gulf of Mexico.

These lime deposits are found in great cliffs of pure limestone, assaying 98 to 100 per cent pure lime, towering up over the river and valley hundreds of feet high. They are similar to the cliff limestone region of the Ohio Valley, except the cliff limestone of the Coosa is superior in quality; in fact the lime of the Coosa Valley is unequaled anywhere in purity.

The Lagarde Lime and Stone Company, the Woodstock Iron Company, and the Cobb City Lime Company all have large lime establishments near Gadsden, Ala., and there are several large manufacturers of lime at Calera, Ala.

THE COOSA COAL FIELD.

This rich coal field, so appropriately named after the river and valley in which it is found, lies in Shelby and St. Clair counties, Ala., with a small portion extending about 1¼ miles into Calhoun County east of the Coosa River at "Ten Islands" (the archipelago of the Coosa). It extends entirely through St. Clair County, a distance of about 34 miles, and 24 miles into Shelby County, making the whole length of the field approximate 60 miles, running up and down the Coosa River, and is estimated to contain 350 square miles.

Professor McCalley, in his estimate of the extent of the Coosa coal fields, reaches the conclusion that with an output of 10,000 tons per day the coal in this region would last one hundred and sixty-five years.

As for the quality and character of the Coosa coals, we quote from the report of Eugene A. Smith, Ph. D., Alabama State Geologist, in his report of the Coosa coal fields, 1895:

"While different seams of coal show special differences in the structure and composition in this, as in all other coal fields, yet there are general features of similarity that distinguish these coals as a class from other coals. They are highly bituminons, free burning, yet rich in fixed carbon. Soft, easy to mine, free from bone or slate structure, and also from combined sulphur or pyrite, generally called sulphur flakes, and often and fervently maledicted by the miners in other fields. They long sustain combustion and leave but little ash or cinder and no clinker, and are, hence, well adapted to raising steam, for forge work, and for all other purposes of fuel. The most important characteristic of these coals is in their superior coking qualities. They will rank among the first class of coking coals."

Notwithstanding the almost inaccessibility of a large portion of the Coosa coal fields to transportation the output of coal from this field is now 200,000 tons per annum, valued at $300,000.

MANUFACTORIES.

The Coosa Valley is fast becoming a manufacturing center. Cotton factories, iron furnaces, car and car wheel works, rolling mills, pipe works, and lumbering mills are the principal industries found in the valley, though there is a large variety of other manufacturing carried on. The products of these factories find a market in all parts of the world. The export of the valley is quite extensive and increasing annually. The opening of the Coosa River to through navigation would give a water route of transportation from the very doors of a great many of these factories to all the great markets and would stimulate the building of more factories and the exportation of their products until the Coosa Valley would soon be second to none as a manufacturing center. The Massachusetts Cotton Mills at Rome, Ga., export a large portion of their products, and the entire product of the big Dwight Cotton Mill at Gadsden, Ala., is exported, and alone amounts to over $2,000,000 per annum. The Central Foundry Company, of Gadsden and Anniston, Ala., exports large quantities of cast-iron pipe, and are now filling a large order for Switzerland. The exportation of iron, lumber, and many other products of the factory is quite extensive.

The annual iron production of the Coosa Valley, though in its incipiency as compared with the rich deposits of raw material for iron making found here, is as follows:

	Furnaces.	Tons.
Rome, Ga	1	36,000
Round Mountain, Ala	1	18,000
Gadsden, Ala	2	140,000
Attalla, Ala	1	20,000
Anniston, Ala	2	150,000
Talladega, Ala	1	75,000
Ironaton, Ala	2	145,000
Jenifer, Ala	1	50,000
Shelby, Ala	1	36,000

The value of this is about $10,000,000 per annum.

COTTON FACTORIES.

	Tons.
Rome, Ga., cotton goods	8,000
Gadsden, Ala., cotton goods	6,000
Anniston, Ala., cotton goods and yarns	5,000
Other yarn mills in the valley	2,000

Which approximates in value $8,500,000.

CAR AND CAR-WHEEL WORKS.

Gadsden and Anniston, Ala.: Car wheels, bar iron, and other manufactured products, 170,000 tons, valued at $5,300,000.

PIPE PLANTS.

Gadsden and Anniston, Ala.: Cast-iron pipe, 100,000 tons, valued at $4,000,000.

CARPET AND CORDAGE MILLS.

Anniston, Ala.: 525 tons, valued at $250,000.

There are hundreds of other manufacturers of which we have no way of arriving at a correct valuation and extent of their annual products, hence they are also left out of this compilation.

The annual tonnage and value of the products of the factories as above shown is 961,525 tons, valued at $28,050,000.

RECAPITULATION.

	Tons.	Value.
Agriculture	502,000	$16,000,000
Timber	150,000	5,600,000
Iron ore	1,600,000	2,400,000
Lime	448,000	416,000
Coal	200,000	300,000
Manufactures	961,525	28,050,000

Taking into consideration all these facts, it is safe to say that with the Coosa River opened to through navigation, the commerce to be handled on the bosom of this great waterway would approximate 2,500,000 tons per annum, which would give 6,850 tons daily. This would require 23 steamers per day, of 300 tons burden each, to handle this great mass of freight.

The Coosa River, reaching like a bandeau across the State of Alabama from Rome, Ga., to Mobile, Ala., crosses every line of railway that extends from the Alabama cotton, coal, and iron fields, and the great pine forests, to the Gulf and South Atlantic. The cost of these elements of industry, commerce, and civilization is a fact that interests the people of every section of the United States. The cheapening of the cost of transportation on these commercial necessities is a duty of the Government when it holds the paramount control of such a channel of navigation.

The Coosa River has claims to national care and consideration that are not possessed by any water course of the United States of similar length not yet opened to steam navigation. On the banks of this river great geological systems are in contact with each other, the river draining each of them.

Such a condition is not presented elsewhere in the United States, if it is found in any other country.

Such geological areas are found elsewhere in the United States in perfection, and each of them is indispensable in the grand aggregate of our material resources, but they are widely separated in other localities, and their transportation from one field to the other is so expensive that their value is much diminished.

The use of the Coosa River as a commercial outlet to the ocean for this immense field of industry in agriculture, forests, quarries, and mines, is a great national duty that is devolved on Congress. The United States being the paramount power entitled to improve this river, the States of Alabama and Georgia can not do this necessary work.

Congress has to some extent prosecuted this national duty, and the only question is whether it shall now be abandoned or prosecuted to a success that is commensurate with its vast importance.

This memorial, Mr. Chairman, was prepared in 1899, and during the three years since that time the development along the river has been phenomenal.

At my own town of Gadsden, since then, a large pipe works, a wagon factory, stove works, two car-wheel foundries, an iron furnace, a guano factory, cotton-seed-oil mills, and several smaller industries have been completed and put in operation.

One of the largest cotton factories in the South, owned by Boston capitalists, was then in operation, and since that time has been enlarged.

At Riverside, just below Lock 4, an immense saw-mill plant is owned and operated by the Lathrop-Hatton Lumber Company, and they have recently purchased 25,000 acres of timber lands some distance down the river from this plant.

Anniston, Talladega, Childersburg, and other Alabama towns along and near the river, and Rome, in Georgia, have all largely increased the number of their manufacturing plants since that time. It is a conservative estimate to say that there has been an increase of tonnage of at least 15 per cent tributary to the river since the memorial was gotten out.

From Gadsden five railroads run in all directions, besides an electric railroad 6 miles long connecting Gadsden, Alabama City, and Attalla, all three growing cities, whose corporate limits touch each other, and the aggregate population of which is over 10,000.

Rome, Ga., is a city of 15,000 inhabitants; Anniston, Ala., of 12,000; Gadsden, Ala., a city of 6,000; Talladega, Ala., 8,000; Childersburg, Ala., 2,000; Piedmont, Ala., 2,000, and quite a number of smaller towns all nestle in the Coosa Valley and close by its banks.

At Gadsden and at these other towns capital is constantly being invested, and if the river were opened to navigation to the sea it would increase with phenomenal rapidity.

But, Mr. Chairman, until the survey provided for by the bill is made we only ask that the work which is in an unfinished state be completed and preserved.

To construe Judson's report as strongly as possible against the continuation of the project, it at least advises the completion of Lock and Dam 4 and the construction of a close dam some 13 miles below at a point where prospective Lock 5 has been located.

For the present, we do not ask for the construction of Lock 5, nor the building of a close dam at that point.

Whether the work is abandoned or continued, the completion of Lock 4 is a foregone conclusion, and we insist that an appropriation for that purpose should be made at this time rather than let it continue to be destroyed and washed away before another river and harbor bill is passed.

Lock 4 is situated 3 miles above Riverside, Ala., where the Georgia Pacific division of the Southern Railroad crosses the Coosa River.

It is the lower end of the present navigation of the Upper Coosa. Greensport is situated on the river 40 miles above Lock 4. Locks 1, 2, and 3 lie between Greensport and Lock 4. With Lock 4 and the dam at Lock 5 completed, 12 miles more of a very important portion of the river will be opened and river transportation extended to ten towns and villages and railway connection made at Riverside. There are no towns or villages of consequence between Greensport and Lock 4 except Ragland, a coal-mining town, which is about 1½ miles from the river. But beginning just below Lock 4 there is a series of towns and villages on and near the river bank, ten in number, that will be directly benefited by the completion of Lock 4 and the dam at Lock 5, and river transportation extended within about 25 miles of Birmingham and a connection made with the Southern Railroad at Riverside.

These towns and villages are Riverside, Lincoln, Seddon, Cropwell, Easonville, Eureka, Coosa Valley, Stemley, Ragans, and Beaver.

Their commerce is about as follows per annum:

	Tons.	Value.
RIVERSIDE.
10,000,000 feet of lumber	22,500	$155,000
Miscellaneous	1,630	68,630
Logs that would be handled on river if opened	36,000	54,000
Total	60,130	277,600
LINCOLN.
5,000 bales of cotton	1,250	200,000
Cotton seed	2,500	50,000
Miscellaneous	5,244	200,000
SEDDON.
500 bales of cotton	125	20,000
Cotton seed	250	5,000
Lumber	3,337	18,000
Miscellaneous	320	12,800
CROPWELL.
2,000 bales of cotton	500	80,000
Cotton seed	1,000	20,000
Miscellaneous	312	10,000
EASONVILLE.
2,000 bales of cotton	500	80,000
Cotton seed	1,000	20,000
Miscellaneous	312	10,000
Dairy products	120	10,000
Total	1,932	120,000

The commerce of the remaining, which are villages, is about as follows:

	Tons.	Value.
Eureka	600	$37,000
Coosa Valley	500	30,000
Stemley	400	20,000
Ragans	1,000	60,000
Beavers	500	30,000

As is customary in estimating the exchange of commerce in this country, we must expect in return for the above resources almost a like amount in value returned to these towns, though the articles so returned being in a more refined state, the tonnage of the incoming goods would be about half that of the outgoing. This would make an annual tonnage of both the outgoing and the incoming freight approximating 119,850 tons, valued at $2,378,800 per annum.

It is hard to say what percentage of this commerce would be handled on the river were it opened down to the site of Lock 5, but probably 20 per cent.

This would give 23,970 tons to be handled on the river annually. Then, with the river opened, the entire log product would be handled on the river, which is 36,000 tons, making a total of 59,970 tons to be handled on the river annually from these two sources alone. If, forsooth, the river should not handle the proportion of the mercantile commerce allotted it in this compilation, it would act as a check to regulate the present arbitrary rates imposed on this unfortunate region.

In addition to the above tonnage the brown iron ore and limestone that would undoubtedly be shipped down the river from Collins Spring, 6 or 8 miles above Lock 4, to Riverside, and thence to Birmingham over the Southern road, would be very extensive.

At Collins Spring is what is known as the Daughdrille Mountain. This is a mountain of brown hematite iron ore, bordered on the north by a towering range of cliff limestone which assays 98 to 100 per cent pure lime. It has been estimated that the Daughdrille Mountain contains 50,000,000 tons of brown iron ore above the water level, and the quantity of this rich limestone can not be estimated. It is simply inexhaustible and both these deposits lie immediately on the bank of the Coosa River, while half a mile back is the southern border of the Coosa coal field. The juxtaposition of these rich minerals found here make Collins Spring one of peculiar commercial importance. There is but little brown iron ore to be found in the immediate Birmingham district; hence large quantities of this valuable ore are shipped from different points in the Coosa Valley to the furnaces at Birmingham. The completion of Lock 4 and a dam at Lock 5 will open these rich deposits found at Collins Spring direct to the Birmingham market, and as a result we may naturally expect a very heavy tonnage through Lock 4 from this source, a tonnage that will probably reach hundreds of tons daily to be handled through this lock, to say nothing of the timber and other commerce heretofore mentioned, now knocking at the gate of this important lock for passage.

Anyone who knows the demand for brown iron ore and limestone for fluxing in the Birmingham district can not doubt that the shipment of these products from Collins Spring to Birmingham would soon, with Lock 4 complete, reach 500 to 600 tons daily. This, in connection with the other tonnage aforementioned, would give a total tonnage of 700 to 800 tons per day to pass through Lock 4 were it completed.

Besides the Southern Railroad at Riverside, the opening of the river to Lock 5 will give river transportation to the Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad, which connects at Pell City, a few miles away, with the East and West Railroad, a part of the Seaboard system.

Thus it will be seen that opening up the river this short distance would give competitive traffic with two great railroad systems.

So, even if the work is to be finally abandoned, the completion of Lock 4 and Dam 5 is a work of great importance.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have no fears of the work being abandoned. For a little while it may not receive that attention which its merit demands. But those who are moved by a patriotic desire to subserve the best interest of the whole Government, and not blinded by selfishness and ambition, are bound, when they consider it coolly and deliberately, to recognize that no more important stream flows beneath the Southern cross. So long as I have the honor to represent the magnificent people of the Coosa Valley I expect to keep knocking at the door of the committee, and of Congress, till at least scanty justice is meted out to us. And in after years, when a grateful nation shall gaze upon the immense commerce floating upon the bosom of this splendid river, men will wonder why any committee should ever have been so shortsighted as to suggest the abandonment of this mighty enterprise. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. BREAKWATER AT MARQUETTE, MICH.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause an examination to be made of the breakwater at Marquette, Mich., with a view to connect the said breakwater with the shore; and to report to Congress the result of such examination.

FREDERICK SHAFER.

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

J. N. W. RUMPLE,
J. A. NORTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

COURTS IN UTAH.

Mr. RAWLINS. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 149) to provide for holding terms of court in the district of Utah.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that the State of Utah shall constitute one judicial district, known as the district of Utah, and that terms of the district court shall be held in Salt Lake City on the second Monday in September, January, and April of each year; but terms of the court may be held at Ogden City or other places in the district when deemed necessary by the judge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS OF DEVILS LAKE RESERVATION.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2418) to ratify an agreement with the Indians of the Devils Lake Reservation, in North Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect. The bill was read in full several days ago, and it went over on the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who desired to have the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] present when the bill was considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read in full. Is there objection to its present consideration?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. In section 4, on page 6, line 10, I move to strike out the word "two" before "dollars" and insert the word "three."

There are several amendments which I propose, but I think they may be all treated as one amendment.

I also move to strike out from line 11, commencing with "but settlers," etc., down to and including the word "that," in line 19, and to insert before the word "homestead," in line 19, the word "and."

I move to strike out, in line 19, the word "who" and to insert the word "may;" and in line 21, to strike out the words "shall pay" and insert the words "by paying;" so that the clause from line 10 to line 22 will read:

Provided further, That the price of said lands shall be $3.50 per acre, and homestead settlers may commute their entries under section 2301, Revised Statutes, by paying for the land entered the price fixed herein.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have no particular objection to the amendment. It undoubtedly establishes a new policy with respect to the disposition of Indian reservations, but in view of the fact that these lands are worth from $15 to $20 per acre, and that there are perhaps a thousand people in the vicinity of the lands at the present time anxiously waiting for the action of Congress, and that they are willing to pay for them, I do not believe it will be any hardship upon them to pay $3.50 per acre. I therefore accept the amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That price, as I understand it, reimburses the Government for the amount which it pays to the Indians for the lands.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. On page 7, I move to strike out the word "one," in line 1, and to insert the word "two," so as to reserve two and a half sections for school purposes instead of one and a half.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, line 1, page 7, strike out "one" where it first occurs and insert "two;" so as to read:

And also not exceeding two and one-half sections of the Fort Totten Indian school, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. There is another amendment which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Indian Affairs as an additional section, section 5. It will be found in the report of the committee on page 6. The Clerk has the report before him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota proposes a further amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. This amendment is proposed by the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. As section 5?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Yes; as a separate section.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 5. That for the purpose of resurveying and reestablishing the section and quarter-section corners of the Devils Lake Reservation, and for the survey of the old Fort Totten Military Reservation, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $12,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest, after the words "twelve thousand dollars" to add the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We had the matter of this survey up before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and some question arose about whether $12,000 is not a larger sum than would be needed. It has not been decided in the committee which has the Indian appropriation bill under consideration, but the amendment which has been adopted appropriates the sum of $12,000, and I think it should say "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That has been adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment has been adopted.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But the amendment which has been adopted does not contain the words which I think it should contain, "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. COCKRELL. That has already been agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It has been agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; that was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offered it as an amendment to the amendment, and it has been agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Very well. I did not observe that the amendment had been amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment also has been agreed to as amended.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

JACOB L. HANGER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3690) for the relief of Jacob L. Hanger, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. PROCTOR, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

REPORT ON INTEROCEANIC CANALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the printing of Senate Report No. 1, from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, which were, in line 2, to strike out "five" and insert "three;" in line 4, to strike out "two" and insert "one;" and in line 5, to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 copies of Senate Report No. 1, from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, 1,000 for the use of the Senate and 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Represenatives.

The motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I understand it will be quite convenient to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who has the floor, to now take up the bill in regard to the protection of the President, and therefore I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I realize that the very admirable and eloquent speech of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] yesterday afternoon renders any further observations in advocacy of this bill quite superfluous, but I wish—and that is my sole purpose—very briefly, and I regret to say without much lawyer-like method, to refer to the constitutional argument which was presented the other day by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], who is a lawyer of learning and great acumen, and, I may be permitted to say in passing what is altogether unnecessary, that I have no doubt whatever, nor has, I suppose, any man, of the seriousness and sincerity with which the Senator presented and with which he has advocated his views.

I considered it unnecessary, although perhaps somewhat provoked, for the Senator from Georgia to avow his patriotism on yesterday. No one here, or anywhere else, who knows that Senator, doubts or can doubt his patriotism, his love for the institutions of this country, and his unspeakable abhorrence of anarchy and of the offense which this bill is intended to prevent.

The Senator's position was this, that the law of England at the time our Constitution was framed on the subject of treason was the statute of Edward III, which contained, I think, seven definitions.

Mr. BACON. Originally five; afterwards it was amended.

Mr. SPOONER. I think seven, and originally five, definitions of treason. As the debates in the constitutional convention show, the framers of that instrument, at least those who led largely in framing it, had before them this statute, with which, of course, they were familiar, and in the discussion, which was very limited so far as I have been able to ascertain, there were those who favored the adoption practically of the entire statute, and there were others who expressed a different opinion; but in the end they adopted from the statute of Edward III the clause in our Constitution defining treason with which everyone is familiar:

Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.

The Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason, but no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture, except during the life of the person attainted.

That is the constitutional definition of treason. That Congress can not add to it every lawyer will admit.

The Senator's inference from the fact that, as out of the statute of Edward III, the framers of our Constitution saw fit to adopt only what I have read, it follows that they intended to preclude the government which they were creating from punishing by death or otherwise offenses committed against it which, under the act of Edward III, constituted treason. The Senator shakes his head. He injected a qualification, "If those acts or offenses were naturally in themselves treason." That distinction is not found in the Constitution, of course, nor can the Senator sustain it as a matter of argument. Carried to its legitimate extent, his argument is, Mr. President, from my standpoint, that the Government of the United States is incapacitated by the history of this constitutional definition of treason from punishing offenses which, under the statute of Edward III, were denounced as treason, save that incorporated in the Constitution.

It is perfectly manifest that it was impossible for the framers of the Constitution to have adopted as treason the definitions contained in the act of Edward III. One of them related to the wife of the King, to the wife of the eldest son of the King, and to the eldest daughter of the King—important there, because the offenses denounced involved or might involve the succession. It needs no argument to show that such a definition could have no possible applicability to a Government so different in every way, which the framers of our Constitution were engaged in erecting, for we have here, of course, no hereditary officials.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator, except so far as it may be necessary to have my position correctly stated.

Mr. SPOONER. That is not a statement of the Senator's position; it is a statement of mine.

Mr. BACON. I know; but it is in response to the position taken by me, and the Senator will do me the justice to say, if he will examine the RECORD where my remarks are in print, that I expressly qualified the statement by saying that I was speaking of the statute of Edward III so far as it was applicable to our changed character of government, of course eliminating from it the feature to which the Senator now refers.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, yes; but then the Senator gets down to this, that by the doctrine of exclusion, reference being had to the statute of Edward III, the offenses against the Government which Congress is disabled from punishing are only those which in their nature are treasonable. Of course, the framers of the Constitution would not have adopted the first definition, "when a man doth compass or imagine the death of our lord the King, of our lady his Queen, or of their eldest son and heir;" and there are others.

But, Mr. President, the framers of the Constitution took great care to define with the utmost distinctness the offense which they intended should constitute the crime of treason, because of their familiarity with that bloody and dreadful chapter in the history of England growing out of the doctrine of constructive treason. The judges became habituated, instruments of tyranny as they often were, to inventing new definitions of treason. The Parliament became accustomed, long after the enactment of the statute of Edward III, to enacting new treasons. For a moment let me call attention to a few.

In the reign of Richard II they invented and devised acts of treason, in regard to which I find an act was passed by Parliament with this recital:

> That no man knew how he ought to behave himself, to do, speak, or say for doubt of such pains of treason, and therefore it was accorded that in no time to come any treason be judged otherwise than was ordained by the statute of King Edward III.

Blackstone says:

> This at once swept away the whole load of extravagant treasons introduced in the time of Richard II.

But as no Parliament can bind a succeeding Parliament, Mr. President, it happened, as he says:

> But afterward, between the reign of Henry IV and Queen Mary, and particularly in the bloody reign of Henry VIII, the spirit of inventing new and strange treasons was revived, among which we may reckon the offenses of clipping money, breaking prison, or rescue when the prisoner is committed for treason—

That is treated as treason—> burning houses to extort money, stealing cattle by Welshmen—

That was made treason—

> counterfeiting foreign coin; willful poisoning; execrations against the King; calling him opprobrious names by public writing; counterfeiting the sign manual or signet; refusing to abjure the Pope; deflowering or marrying, without the royal license, any of the King's children, sisters, aunts, nephews, or nieces; bare solicitation of the chastity of the Queen, or princesses, or advances made by themselves, etc.

To get away from that infamy, to render it forever certain that the crime of treason should be definite and fixed, both as to the essence and as to the evidence required to convict, beyond reach of Congress, to forever protect the people of this Government, which they were establishing, from constructive treason, they placed in the Constitution this definition.

Mr. President, the argument of the Senator from Georgia carries him too far, I think. It does not at all follow, as a matter of law or logic, because the framers of the Constitution were unwilling to insert in that instrument as definitions of treason, under the limitations of the instrument as to the character of proof necessary, the definition contained in the act of Edward III, that they intended to leave this Government forever disabled to protect itself against some of the crimes which, under the act of Edward III, constituted treason.

There is no such thing as treason against the President of the United States. The Government of England and the relations of its subjects to that Government and this Government and the relations of our people to this Government are as wide apart as the ocean which divides the two countries. That was a personal government; the King was the embodiment of the sovereignty of the country; war levied against the King was levied against the sovereignty and war levied against the sovereignty was levied against the King.

We have no personal government here. This is a Government not of men but of law. Government is hereditary there; it can not be here. The President is not the sovereign of the United States; he is not even, in an accurate sense, the ruler of the United States. Abraham Lincoln spoke with the utmost accuracy, and in harmony with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, when, at Gettysburg, he said: "This is a Government of the people, for the people, and by the people." The sovereignty here is in the people. This is a Government of the people; and the framers of the Constitution in defining treason used this language:

> Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort, etc.

Does it follow, Mr. President, because an attempt to assassinate the King or the assassination of the King was treason in England under the statute of Edward III, that an attempt to assassinate the President or an assassination of the President is treason in this country?

The President is a private citizen for the time being in a public station. He represents for the time being a part of the sovereignty which constitutes this Government and which is behind it and all around it—the people. But an assault upon him, of course, or an assassination of him, of course, does not constitute treason within the definition which our fathers placed in this Constitution, but it is an awful crime, just the same, against the Government.

Mr. President, are we disabled upon any line of reasoning from declaring it to be a crime and from punishing it as a crime? If the Senator from Georgia is right, as I understand him, the framers of the Constitution succeeded in creating a Government of great elemental weakness; but they did not. Carried to its legitimate extent, I do not know where the Senator from Georgia would find upon his reasoning the power under the Constitution to punish offenses which Congress has provided shall be crimes against the Government, and which for a hundred years we have punished in the Federal jurisdiction.

When the Senator was making his argument—and it was one of great ingenuity and ability, as it was one of great sincerity—the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] called his attention to the fact that, under the act of Edward III, counterfeiting the coin of the realm was treason, and asked the Senator—or that was the purpose of his question—whether he inferred because counterfeiting the coin of the realm was treason under the act of Edward III and was not within the definition of treason under the Constitution that the Government of the United States is disabled to punish it.

The Senator from Georgia promptly—and I thought at the time sufficiently—answered that question by turning to that provision of the Constitution which gives to Congress the power "to provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States." That was not a complete answer to the question propounded by the Senator from Texas.

Here, Mr. President, is an odd thing. The only unfinished and imperfect provision, so far as I remember, in the Constitution is:

> The Congress shall have power to provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States.

There is nothing said there about "uttering." The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the power to punish for uttering counterfeit coin by the Congress is not to be found in that provision. Under the statute of Edward III it was made treason to utter counterfeit coin. The argument of the Senator from Georgia carried to its logical result means that because of that being treason under the act of Edward III and not under the Constitution of the United States, the Congress may not punish it. The Senator said that was not treason in its nature. It comes very near the line. True, it is not levying war, but it is a subtle and insidious attack upon a sovereign power, a power which can only be exercised by the sovereign, and a necessary power to be lodged in and exercised by the sovereign.

That is not all, Mr. President. Under the statute of Edward III it was made treason to bring counterfeit coin into the realm and to utter it. That was omitted from the definition of treason in the Constitution of the United States; nor is it covered by the clause authorizing Congress "to provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States." Can it be argued from that that Congress has no power to declare the bringing of foreign counterfeit coin into the United States and uttering them here is an offense against the Government cognizable by the Federal jurisdiction? The Senator's argument goes that far; but a statute of the United States was passed March 3, 1825, providing punishment for bringing counterfeit coin into the United States from abroad and uttering it here, which resulted in the conviction of one Marigold, and which came to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the very point was made which the Senator makes. (United States v. Marigold, 9 How., 560.)

Whether Congress, under and by the Constitution, had power and authority to enact so much of the said twentieth section of the said act as relates to bringing into the United States counterfeit coins.

The proposition could only be sustained by the argument which has been made by the Senator from Georgia, yet the Supreme Court of the United States found no difficulty in deciding that it was entirely within the constitutional capacity of Congress under the power to coin money and to furnish the country with a currency.

That is not all, Mr. President. By the statute of Edward III, "compassing or imagining the King's death" was treason. Dionysius executed a man for dreaming that the King was dead.

Blackstone says under that clause, excluded, of course, from our Constitution, that—

A bare conspiracy to levy war does not amount to this species of treason—

That is, high treason—

but (if particularly pointed at the person of the King or his Government) it falls within the first, of compassing or imagining the King's death.

Because that was omitted from the Constitution will the Senator argue that we have no power under the Constitution to denounce as a crime against the Government and punish with such severity, within lawful limitations, as to the Congress shall seem fit, a conspiracy to levy war against the Government and to resist with armed force the execution of its laws? The Senator's argument would of necessity carry him that far, because in its nature that is treason, and such a conspiracy was treason under the act of Edward III, and is not treason under the Constitution of the United States.

I say in its nature it is treason for men to secretly plot and scheme to bring about an insurrection or a rebellion against the Government with a view to armed resistance to its laws or to armed attack upon its property. Although they do not themselves go beyond the danger line, it is treason. It is the meanest form of treason. It is potential, Mr. President, but it is cowardly. It is infinitely meaner, as it is infinitely more dangerous, than the open treason which consists in bearing arms and daring the chances of battle. May not the Congress of the United States, although it was in the act of Edward III and the framers of the Constitution excluded it, punish as a crime against the United States such an offense treasonable in its nature, and punish it even by death?

The punishment here has nothing to do with the nature of the offense. Even treason under our statutes is punishable by fine; alternatively by death. The Congress may annex to it attainder. It need not. And if the Senator's argument, carried to its inevitable result, were crystallized into the law of this land, this would be an impotent Government to protect itself against obvious crimes endangering our institutions and obstructing the operation of government. That can not, I submit, be true.

It is true, as the Senator said the other day, that the Constitution confers upon Congress no general power as to the definition and punishment of crime. I think in three instances only is the Constitution specific on that subject. One is as to piracy, another as to treason, and the third as to counterfeiting. And yet from the foundation of the Government the Congress has been enacting statutes, creating and defining offenses against the Government of the United States, and providing for their punishment, and they have been sustained by the Supreme Court of the country, just as in the Marigold case.

The courts justify it under that clause of the Constitution which gives to Congress the power to enact all laws for carrying into effect the powers granted by the Constitution to Congress. I think I speak accurately when I say there is no power conferred by the Constitution upon Congress as to which, in order to safeguard it and carry it forward to its fullest fruition, Congress has not the power to define offenses and provide for their punishment.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] read the other day from the decision in the case of Bollman and Swartwout, 4 Cranch 75, language which covers it, and, with all deference to my friend from Georgia, to me that must be the law. I will show, I think, and I will be brief about it, that it inevitably follows from the decision and later decisions that it is the law. The court said:

Crimes so atrocious as those which have for their object the subversion by violence of those laws and those institutions which have been ordained in order to secure the peace and happiness of society are not to escape punishment because they have not ripened into treason. * * *

It is, therefore, more safe as well as more consonant to the principles of our Constitution that the crime of treason should not be extended by construction—

I agree to that—to doubtful cases, and that crimes not clearly within the constitutional definition—

"Not clearly within the constitutional definition;" crimes in their nature, perhaps, treasonable, as the Senator from Georgia put t—should receive such punishment as the legislature in its wisdom may provide.

That meant Congress. I notice that Professor Pomeroy in his book says:

While treason is expressly defined and direct powers conferred upon the legislature to declare its punishment, it must be understood that the mention of the highest crime includes also those of inferior grades but of a nature kindred to treason.

On the Senator's argument Congress would be excluded by the Constitution from punishing or defining as crimes against the Government and punishing with a severity which met its approval kindred but lesser offenses than treason, such as the conspiracy to which I referred a little while ago. Yet we have had on our statute books for many years, now nearly forty, a statute to punish just such conspiracies, and to say that a Government which has the power to punish the consummated offense of treason has not the power to punish conspiracies whose object is to subvert the Government, and which if carried out necessarily lead to war, is to argue that this is the weakest Government under the sky. It is not.

The Senator the other day quoted from an article by Judge Edgar Aldrich, United States district judge for the district of New Hampshire. I have the pleasure of Judge Aldrich's acquaintance and the honor of his friendship. I know him well. He is a lawyer of great ability, of great erudition, and of eminently judicial temperament, and I beg leave to say that, in my judgment, this article, from which the Senator read and which was presented here by my friend the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], is, with deference to others who have written upon the subject, the most discriminating, dispassionate, and the ablest from a legal standpoint which I have read upon the subject. Judge Aldrich says this, and he says it better than I could say it, and I will take the liberty of reading it:

Under our system the Government means nothing above or beyond the intelligent expression of the will of the people; and when the people ordain that a form of government shall exist for the protection of communities in accordance with the requirements of civilization they assume the responsibility of upholding the institution which they have created.

There is such a thing as inherent power in a government. It is not needful to resort to it in this matter. That inherent power may have its limitations, and it does, but it certainly extends to self-protection, not simply against armed forces but against subtle and insidious enemies.

The Government can not administer itself except through its chosen agents, representatives, or servants. These it must have in order to become operative for the purposes for which it is created. It lies with the people to create a government; they may therefore maintain it. The people can not maintain a government without agents; they may therefore protect such agency through such legislation as the necessities arising out of a threatening evil or pending danger demand.

Who can gainsay that?

To justify such legislation it is not necessary to invoke the "general-welfare" clause of the Constitution, which declares that Congress shall have power to "provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," because all governments necessarily possess the inherent power of self-defense, and such general inherent power of self-defense will justify all necessary and well-ordered legislation for the protection of all necessary agents and representatives. While, as a general rule, civilization and communities receive protection from the State governments, the Federal Government does exist as an entity and for certain limited purposes expressed and contemplated by the Constitution, and, so existing, it may pass all laws necessary for its safety.

It may declare violence upon its agents, servants, and representatives to be a crime against its own existence. It may declare threatened violence to be a crime, because that involves conduct calculated to disturb the good order and well-being of its administration. In short it may, without regard to the enumerated and defined offenses of the old common law, throttle and control any evil directed against its existence and well-being. This is a necessary and inherent power. The doctrine of the right of self-preservation is as ancient as law itself, and is based upon a natural right. The right of the Government to defend, protect, and preserve itself against whatever evil may threaten is a natural, inherent, fundamental, self-evident, incontrovertible, and paramount right.

And he calls attention to many enactments, penal in their nature, which are found in our statute book—crimes obstructing operation of government. There are a large number of them. The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] read yesterday from 7 Wallace which dealt with one—a mail agent of the United States. The statute provides that it is an offense against the Government of the United States to assault or obstruct in the discharge of his duty a mail carrier or a mail-route agent or one engaged in a duty immediately in connection with the administration of the Post-Office Department.

There is a statute which throws the protection of the United States in the same way around a surveyor upon the public lands. In other words, under the decision, and it must be true, there is no man holding an office under the United States, representing the executive part of the Government, engaged in the discharge of his functions, around whom Congress has not the power to throw the protecting shield of this Government, in the States and outside the States, wherever the jurisdiction of the United States extends.

We have laws protecting the United States marshals in the discharge of their duties—men appointed by the President and removable by the President. We have laws protecting internal-revenue agents, inspectors, in the discharge of their duties, and in the discharge of their duties they often lose their lives and are often assaulted and often wounded. The Government under the legislation of Congress, necessary to its administration, has provided for the punishment of such assaults, and those offenses are cognizable in the Federal courts: and if an officer is killed raiding an illicit still in the discharge of his duty, the man who kills him, even though it be in a State, commits a crime against the Government of the United States which is punishable under the laws of the United States and triable in the courts of the United States.

It would be, Mr. President, a strange confession of weakness if the Government of the United States is obliged to rely for the protection of its officials, great and humble, upon the legislation and the judiciary of the States. I do not impeach the patriotism of the States when I say that. I only assert what the Supreme Court of the United States has asserted, that the Government of the United States, within the limits of its jurisdiction and sovereignty, is sovereign in the States and through the United States.

I recognize the sovereignty of the States. I care more for it now than I once did, and I resist and shall continue to resist any invasion by the Congress of the sovereignty of the States. But the Government of the United States must be able by its legislation and by its posse comitatus and by its power and by its courts to protect its own officials assaulted or murdered in the discharge of governmental duty.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have listened with interest to the very able argument of the Senator from Wisconsin, and I have paid particular attention to the Federal statutes to which he has referred providing for the punishment of those who may interfere with certain officers in the discharge of their duties. I am inclined to think that it is right along there that the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Georgia differ.

Mr. SPOONER. We differ back of that, and there, too, perhaps. I do not know that we differ so much there.

Mr. PATTERSON. The question I wish to ask the Senator and to which I wish he would direct his attention is this: Without going into any further details——

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me, as he has stated my position? I have not interrupted the Senator from Wisconsin, because it was not necessary to do it——

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to know——

Mr. BACON. Pardon me a second.

Mr. PATTERSON. I wish to know whether there is any time when the President of the United States is not in the discharge of his duty?

Mr. SPOONER. I will get to that.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is the point.

Mr. SPOONER. As Mr. Justice Miller said, in the case of Cunningham v. Neagle (135 U. S.), which involved the killing of Judge Terry by Neagle, a deputy marshal, in protecting the life of Justice Field, the judiciary of the country, so far as the protection of its members is concerned, is the weakest of the coordinate departments of the Government. They call attention——

Mr. BACON. I am sorry to interrupt the Senator; but as both he and the Senator from Colorado have stated a proposition which relates to me, I hope he will let me interrupt him.

Mr. SPOONER. I said I am not certain that the Senator and I differ upon the matter I am discussing.

Mr. BACON. With very much of the Senator's argument on that branch I agree. In its application we probably differ in some degree.

Mr. SPOONER. The application of it is the point.

Mr. BACON. I do not interrupt the Senator now to state whether there may be some slight difference. I say upon the general proposition which he has been arguing there is no difference.

Mr. SPOONER. The court said it was the weakest. They are obliged to rely for protection—for they can appoint no one but a clerk—upon the marshal, who is appointed by the President, confirmed by the Senate, removable by another Department, the Executive; and the marshals in turn appoint, under the authority of the Attorney-General, their deputy marshals. In the Neagle case it became necessary to resort to a statute of California giving authority to the sheriff to prevent affrays and assaults, connected with a statute enacted by Congress giving the marshals within the States the same power, partly for those purposes, as the sheriffs, that they found justification for Neagle in protecting Justice Field by taking the life of Terry.

In that case Mr. Justice Field was not sitting upon the bench. A supreme justice of the United States, he had gone, as required by a statute of the United States, to his circuit, for the law required each justice once in two years at least to hold court in each district in his circuit. He had held court for a time in San Francisco. He had then gone to Los Angeles to hold court for a few days, and when the assault occurred he was traveling from Los Angeles back to San Francisco.

The Supreme Court held that he was—and this bears in a way upon the question which was put to me by the Senator from Colorado—engaged in the discharge of official duty laid upon him by the Constitution and laws of the United States when traveling from Los Angeles, where he had held court, to San Francisco, where he was to resume his position and function upon the bench, and that it was therefore entirely within the right of the Attorney-General, acting presumably under the instructions of the President, to detail the deputy marshal to accompany him, to sit by the bench in open court, to go with him to the hotel from the court, and to travel with him on the cars, armed every moment and watchful every moment, to protect him in the discharge of official duty, even to the point of taking life.

After Neagle had killed Judge Terry he was arrested upon a warrant issued by the State court and taken into custody. An application was made to the Federal circuit judge for a writ of habeas corpus to take him out of the custody of the State tribunal upon the theory that he had acted pursuant to a law of the United States, and that therefore his case was one exclusively of Federal cognizance. The writ was granted. He was discharged by the Federal court, and it was brought to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the question as to the relative jurisdiction of the State of California and of the United States was elaborately and very ably argued.

It was contended that the offense was one against the peace and dignity of the State of California. It was contended that there was no peace of the United States within a State, a doctrine long ago exploded, and this is what Mr. Justice Miller, one of the ablest judges and lawyers who ever sat upon that bench or any other, had to say upon the subject. He quotes from the Siebold case (100 U. S., 371), and quotes it with approval:

> Somewhat akin to the argument which has been considered is the objection that the deputy marshals authorized by the act of Congress to be created and to attend the elections—> are authorized to keep the peace, and that is a duty which belongs to the State authorities alone. It is argued that the preservation of peace and good order in society is not within the powers confined to the Government of the United States, but belongs exclusively to the States. Here, again, we are met with the theory that the Government of the United States does not rest upon the soil and territory of the country. We think that this theory is founded on an entire misconception of the nature and powers of that Government. We hold it to be an incontrovertible principle that the Government of the United States may, by means of physical force, exercised through its official agents, execute on every foot of American soil the powers and functions that belong to it.

That was made a Federal duty. The principle is the same—

It can be done in Wisconsin. It can be done in South Carolina. It can be done in Tennessee or Georgia. In other words, if the function is a Federal one and the instrumentality is a Federal one, there is no State line so far as power is concerned.

> This necessarily involves the power to command obedience to its laws, and hence the power to keep the peace to that extent. This power to enforce its laws and to execute its functions in all places does not derogate from the power of the State to execute its laws at the same time and in the same places. The one does not exclude the other, except where both can not be executed at the same time. In that case—

And here is the line which we never ought to permit to be obliterated or minimized—

> In that case the words of the Constitution itself show which is to yield. "This Constitution, and all laws which shall be made in pursuance thereof, * * * shall be the supreme law of the land" * * * Without the concurrent sovereignty referred to—> the National Government would be nothing but an advisory government. Its executive power would be absolutely nullified. Why do we have marshals at all if they can not physically lay their hands on persons and things in the performance of their proper duties? What functions can they perform if they can not use force? In executing the process of the court, must they call on the nearest constable for protection?

"Without the concurrent sovereignty referred to"—

When the presence of Terry on the train became known to Neagle he caused the conductor to telegraph to Lothrop, the breakfast station, advising the State officials of the danger and asking that peace officers be at the depot to aid him in protecting Justice Field. When the train reached its destination, the spot where the trouble came and where the assault upon the Federal official came, to protect him against which it was necessary to take a life, Neagle found no response from the State authority and no State official there to uphold or to aid him.

Can the Government of the United States exist without certainty that under the Constitution and under appropriate legislation everywhere it can protect the Federal agents in the discharge of Federal duties imposed upon them by Federal laws? Mr. Justice Miller continues:

> Must they rely on him to use the requisite compulsion, and to keep the peace, whilst they are soliciting and entreating the parties and bystanders to allow the law to take its course? This is the necessary consequence of the positions that are assumed. If we indulge in such impracticable views as these, and keep on refining and re-refining, we shall drive the National Government out of the United States, and relegate it to the District of Columbia, or perhaps to some foreign soil. We shall bring it back to a condition of greater helplessness than that of the old confederation.

And they add:

It must execute its powers, or it is no government. It must execute them on the land as well as on the sea, on things as well as on persons. And to do this it must necessarily have power to command obedience, preserve order, and keep the peace, and no person or power in this land has the right to resist or question its authority so long as it keeps within the bounds of its jurisdiction.

And so they held that the President of the United States had the power as the official, possessing under our Constitution all executive authority, to direct the marshal to attend upon Justice Field and to protect him to the uttermost in the discharge of his duties.

Mr. President, what a strange thing it would be if the President of the United States has the power to protect the judges of the United States in the discharge of their duties in the States and everywhere and Congress has not power to protect the President of the United States in the discharge of his duties in the States?

The court in the Neagle case says something about the Executive. That brings me to the question put to me by the Senator from Colorado, whether there is any time or anywhere that the President of the United States is not in the eye of the law engaged in the discharge of public duties. I answer the question in the negative. The Constitution provides for the election of a President. The Constitution provides his term of office, and he is elected to serve the people in that capacity for the fixed term unless interrupted by disability or by the hand of God. No man has any right or power to interrupt that term or to interrupt in any way the discharge of those functions, and if he does it he commits not treason, but a crime against the Government of the United States, and he makes an assault upon the institutions of the United States.

The President is obliged to register an oath in heaven to take care that the laws are faithfully executed. The power of appointment is in him. The conduct of our foreign relations, of such infinite consequence, complexity, delicacy, and oftentimes danger. are primarily in his hands and in his mind. When is there a time in any waking hour when the President of the United States is not engaged in official duty?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WELLINGTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. SPOONER. I do.

Mr. TELLER. I do not like to interrupt the Senator, but I wish to ask him if there is within the term of four years for which the President is elected any time when or any place where he can not exercise the full functions of a President?

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. TELLER. I think that covers the whole question.

Mr. SPOONER. If he goes off for a little vacation he summons his Cabinet around him when it is necessary.

Mr. TELLER. And he may sign bills.

Mr. SPOONER. He is in close communication with the White House. There is no official act which he can not perform. Of course when Congress is in session and laws are being enacted he naturally is here to approve or disapprove proposed legislation, but at home in Ohio, if he be from that State, or in the Rocky Mountains, where President Arthur went once, or anywhere in the United States or within its jurisdiction he may day or night perform any act imposed by the Constitution or by any act upon the President. He is always at his post of duty, for wherever he is there is his post of duty.

When is there a time and where is there a place in which he is exempt from the obligation of public duty? All of us know there is none. We are in public life; we have had occasion many, many times to meet Presidents of the United States; we have met the President at the banquet table; we have met him in his chamber; we have met him on the cars. When, tell me, is there a time that the mind of a President of the United States is free from a consideration of the duties of the Presidential office? When? There is none; and that is what makes the office one of burden, infinite, indescribable burden, which was breaking down the beloved man who at Buffalo was shot by an assassin.

The court say in the Neagle case, referring to his sworn duty, "that he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

"Is this duty limited to the enforcement of acts of Congress or of treaties of the United States according to their express terms, or does it include the rights, duties, and obligations growing out of the Constitution itself, our international relations, and all the protection implied by the nature of the Government under the Constitution?" They answer the last question in the broadest affirmative.

If a judge dies, the President must appoint his successor. Public interest requires sometimes very prompt action. So with thousands of the other executive agents of the Government. He is obliged to act more than any man I know in the world upon an infinite number of exigencies in the course of the four years or the eight years of his term of office. His Cabinet officers aid him, but in the last analysis the burden is upon him because the responsibility is upon him.

We may protect mail carriers in the discharge of their duties; we may protect surveyors upon the public lands in the discharge of their duties; we may protect United States marshals in the discharge of their duties; we may protect the internal-revenue agents in the discharge of their duties; we may protect the judges in the discharge of their duties, but have we not the power, Mr. President, to protect the Chief Executive in the discharge of his duties?

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. SPOONER. I am anxious to get through.

Mr. RAWLINS. I agree with the Senator about his argument.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. RAWLINS. I do not think the Senator's positions are controvertible, so far as the President and Federal officials are concerned. But I should like to hear the Senator's views in regard to the provision of the bill relating to foreign potentates and as to the ground upon which he claims, if he does so claim, that that provision may with propriety be inserted in this legislation.

Mr. SPOONER. I will get to that when I come to it, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. President, I am about through. It is admitted, Mr. President, indeed it is settled by the Supreme Court of the United States, that an officer of the United States assaulted in the discharge of a duty which he is performing pursuant to the laws of the United States is protected, or may be protected, by the United States, and the assault upon him is an offense against the Government and may be punished in the courts of the United States.

The Constitution says:

Congress shall have power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers—

Those are the powers of Congress, perhaps. Perhaps they are more than that—and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof.

That is broader than men think unless they examine it critically.

Is not the President in every official act which he performs performing it in pursuance of a law of the United States? The Supreme Court say in the Neagle case upon this point:

And we are satisfied that if it was the duty of Neagle, under the circumstances, a duty which could only arise under the laws of the United States, to defend Mr. Justice Field from a murderous attack upon him, he brings himself within the meaning of the section we have recited. This view of the subject is confirmed by the alternative provision, that he must be in custody "for an act done or omitted in pursuance of a law of the United States or of an order, process, or decree of a court or judge thereof, or is in custody in violation of the Constitution or of a law or treaty of the United States."

Now, the court say:

In the view we take of the Constitution of the United States any obligation—

That means obligation of duty—

any obligation fairly and properly inferable from that instrument, or any duty of the marshal to be derived from the general scope of his duties under the laws of the United States, is "a law" within the meaning of this phrase. It would be a great reproach to the system of government of the United States, declared to be within its sphere sovereign and supreme, if there is to be found within the domain of its powers no means of protecting the judges in the conscientious and faithful discharge of their duties from the malice and hatred of those upon whom their judgments may operate unfavorably.

So in that view the Constitution imposing these duties upon the President, which he has sworn as required by that instrument to discharge, puts upon him an obligation to perform those duties, and in performing them, each one of them, large or small, he is performing a duty pursuant to a law of the United States and in obedience to the Constitution of the United States. If we may protect the other agencies of the Government which I have mentioned by throwing the Federal power around them, we certainly may protect the President of the United States from assassination and assault, for he is executing, as the question of the Senator from Colorado implied, the obligations of the Constitution and the duties of the Presidency everywhere and all the time, in the eye of the law, during his term of office.

The court had something to say in this case also on the question of State rights, which I do not think should be much considered here, for in the view of the court it is no invasion whatever of the rights of the State. I will not take the time to read what the court say, for I am anxious to be through. It is very brief, and I ask leave to incorporate it in my remarks.

The matter referred to is as follows:

It can act only through its officers and agents, and they must act within the States. If, when thus acting, and within the scope of their authority, those officers can be arrested and brought to trial in a State court for an alleged offense against the law of the State, yet warranted by the Federal authority they possess, and if the General Government is powerless to interfere at once for their protection—if their protection must be left to the action of the State court—the operations of the General Government may at any time be arrested at the will of one of its members. The legislation of a State may be unfriendly. It may affix penalties to acts done under the immediate direction of the National Government and in obedience to its laws. It may deny the authority conferred by those laws. The State court may administer not only the laws of the State, but equally Federal law, in such a manner as to paralyze the operations of the Government; and even if after trial and final judgment in the State court the case can be brought into the United States court for review, the officer is withdrawn from the discharge of his duty during the pendency of the prosecution and the exercise of acknowledged Federal power arrested. We do not think such an element of weakness is to be found in the Constitution.

The United States is a Government with authority extending over the whole territory of the Union, acting upon the States and upon the people of the States. While it is limited in the number of its powers, so far as its sovereignty extends it is supreme. No State authority can exclude it from the exercise of any authority conferred upon it by the Constitution, obstruct its authorized officers against its will, or withhold from it for a moment the cognizance of any subject which that instrument has committed to it.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, Mr. President, I have said all that I care to say upon the subject. It is of vital consequence; it is fundamental. If the opposite doctrine can be maintained, this is not much of a Government. For one I never shall believe in any doctrine, wherever declared or however argued, which involves a denial to the Government of the United States through the Congress of the power to define as a crime the assassination of a President or a Vice-President or the assault with intent to assassinate him or a conspiracy to take his life.

I am quite well aware that I have discussed this in a desultory way; but I have great earnestness concerning it, because I regard it as so vital. The other objections made to this bill I do not care to spend much time upon.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit an interruption?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SPOONER. I do.

Mr. RAWLINS. I have to go away, and there is one point to which I want to invite the Senator's attention and also the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts. It is in regard to the next section—an attempt to kill the President. I find in a standard author upon criminal law this language in relation to attempts:

A crime once committed may be pardoned, but it can not be obliterated by repentance. Therefore, if a man resolves on a criminal enterprise, and proceeds so far in it that his act amounts to an indictable attempt, it does not cease to be such though he voluntarily abandons the evil purpose.

Now, this point troubles me. Suppose a man proceeds so far as to be guilty of the indictable offense of an attempt to kill the President but he repents before inflicting the fatal blow and abandons the purpose, he may under this second section of the bill be indicted, and if convicted of that offense he must be punished with death. I think before a man is punished with this capital degree of punishment he ought to have room for repentance.

Mr. SPOONER. He ought to repent before he tries it.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the time.

Mr. HOAR. Before he commits the offense, and not afterwards.

Mr. TELLER. If he repents before he tries it, then he is not guilty at all.

Mr. RAWLINS. If the Senator will read the decisions defining attempts to commit crime, he will find——

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator a question? What would he do with a man who shoots at the President, misses him, and then repents before he shoots again? Would he call it square?

Mr. SPOONER. And says he shot to miss, if he did miss.

Mr. RAWLINS. I suppose I would punish him according to the degree of his offense. If a man should buy a gun under excitement or some great provocation, with a declaration that he intended to use it to take the life of the President, and as soon as he recovered his senses and deliberated upon the question repented and went no further, I would not punish that man capitally.

Mr. HOAR. That is not an attempt.

Mr. SPOONER. That would not be an assault with intent to kill the President.

Mr. HOAR. Nor an attempt either.

Mr. SPOONER. Nor an attempt.

Mr. RAWLINS. There are many decisions which would so hold.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SPOONER. I have yielded to the Senator from Utah, if the Senator does not intend to read that book.

Mr. RAWLINS. I intend to read only a brief paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. McCOMAS. Only for a question. Has not the Senator from Utah confounded a threat with an attempt? He has described simply a threat and not an attempt.

Mr. RAWLINS. I will read what Mr. Bishop, a standard author on criminal law, says:

The subject of this chapter is alike intricate and important.

That relates to attempts.

The reports are full of cases upon it, yet it is but imperfectly understood by the courts.

Then he proceeds to elaborate the great uncertainty based upon the decisions of this question as to the degree of action that is necessary in order to involve the crime of attempt, and confesses that upon the decisions it is left in utter uncertainty. The mere intent to do it is not sufficient, but if the intent is coupled with any act making progress in the direction of the consummation of the intent, it is held to be an attempt indictable and punishable as such.

I am in favor of protecting the President and every other person in the exercise of his duties as an officer, but there is some trouble in my mind upon the second section. It goes beyond anything in this country heretofore and anything attempted in foreign countries.

Mr. SPOONER. Has the Senator any decision which holds that if a man said he would commit an offense and bought a revolver and took it home and thought the thing all over and then concluded that he would not commit the offense, that constitutes an attempt to commit the offense?

Mr. RAWLINS. I do not know that I have a decision exactly like that, but the Senator will find numerous decisions. There must be an act, it is true. But I commend this chapter of this standard author upon criminal law to the consideration of the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Massachusetts. That is all the interruption I desire to interpose.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have had some experience in the practice of the criminal law, and with great deference to my friend from Utah, I do not see that the case which he puts could by any human possibility be contended by anyone to come within the languare of section 2.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SPOONER. I do.

Mr. TELLER. I am not a criminal lawyer myself, and I may be mistaken, but it seems to me that we do not change the ordinary methods of declaring this crime an attempt to kill. We may put a more severe penalty upon it, but that is all there is in this case.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the first section. Section 2 refers to the first section for a definition of the offense.

Mr. RAWLINS. The ordinary definition of an offense which involves an attempt to commit murder is pretty well defined in the law. It is embraced in all our statutes. But the crime of an attempt to commit murder is not thus so clearly defined. The decisions, as stated by this author, are entirely in irreconcilable uncertainty, if not in conflict, as to the degree of action necessary to constitute that offense coupled with the offense. If it is an assault with intent to commit murder it must be a direct assault. That change, in my judgment, would very much improve the section.

Mr. SPOONER. I was not giving attention to the particular language of section 2, but I have no doubt myself that a man who assassinates the President ought to die for it under a Federal law.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator need not look at me and make that statement with such emphasis. I think the same as he does about it.

Mr. SPOONER. My friend must not suppose that I entertained any other thought of him. I think a man who attempts to kill the President ought to be punished with death.

If President McKinley had been permitted to live and in a measure recover, wounded and hurt, to linger along for years a different man, his assassin would have been punished for an assault with intent to commit murder by imprisonment for ten years; in other States it might be less or it might be more. All I have to say about that is that, regardless of the laws of the States, it ought to be made by an act of Congress punishable by death, Mr. President, and if the Senator is not satisfied with the language, I suppose, if there is good reason for it, the Senator from Massachusetts will consent to a modification. I see no objection to the language as it stands.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I would make any reasonable modification I could. I know the great legal ability of the gentlemen on the other side of this question, and any language that would meet their grave doubts that will not impair the substance and strength of this bill—mere phraseology—I should be glad to accept.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] asked a question and disappeared.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator from Utah has been called from the Chamber to attend a committee meeting.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no doubt the Senator is necessarily absent, but I will answer him in the language of Judge Aldrich. The Senator asked me a question as to the power of Congress to punish the assassination of an ambassador, and I indorse what Judge Aldrich says upon the subject. He states it better than I can.

Section 3 proposes to include within its provisions ambassadors and ministers from foreign countries.

That is a section of the bill which Judge Aldrich had prepared; it is a very ably drawn bill, and covers more than this bill does.

Mr. COCKRELL. The language of the bill is, "the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country."

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Utah asked me about ambassadors.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought he asked you about the killing of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country.

Mr. SPOONER. Judge Aldrich answers it. He says:

The obligation of protecting such foreign agents has existed, under the principles of international comity and the law of nations, at least since the days of Vattel and Phillimore—

An offense against the law of nations is entirely within the jurisdiction of Congress so far as legislation is concerned. I do not need to spend time upon that. I did intend to comment upon the strictures made by the Senator from Georgia upon section 3 and section 5, denouncing as an offense the act of—any person who shall, within the limits of the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, instigate, advise, or counsel the killing of the President or Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. MCCOMAS. If it will not interrupt the Senator, I will state that the Supreme Court, in the case of the United States v. Arjona, in 120 United States, held that the law of nations requires every national government to use due diligence to prevent wrong being done within its own dominion to another nation, and especially would this apply in the killing of the sovereign of another nation.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; it arises out of the law of nations. I remember that case.

That or kindred language is found in several places. It is objected that under that language an innocent man might be convicted. That might be said, as was remarked by the Senator from Massachusetts yesterday, of any offense. Innocent men have been convicted of murder, of forgery, and of almost every offense in the catalogue of crime. But one consideration escaped the Senator from Georgia, I think, in his criticism of this language, and that is a well-settled rule of construction.

This is a highly penal statute, and its language would, of course, be strictly construed. It can not be enlarged by intendment. The word "instigate" is defined "to bring about by inciting," "to provoke." Its synonyms are "to abet; to animate; to encourage." For forty years the word "incite" has been in the Statutes against insurrection and rebellion. (Sec. 5334, R. S.) Anyone who advises, counsels, abets, incites, encourages, or provokes the assassination of the President of the United States ought to be punished, as provided in this section, by imprisonment at least for twenty years.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether or not the object uppermost in the minds of Senators who feel as he does—and they are on both sides of the Chamber—would not be met by having the law so framed as to punish with death the murder of the President or of foreign rulers, or even for a conspiracy to commit such an offense against the President.

I am perfectly satisfied that if the bill is so framed as to provide for the punishment within the Federal jurisdiction of those who commit murder, or who attempt to commit murder, or are particeps criminis, or who are accessories before or after the fact of murder against the officials mentioned, such a bill will receive a very considerable vote upon this side of the Chamber; and it seems to me that the bill should be so framed as to meet those offenses, and none others.

Mr. SPOONER. That is not all the provision that ought to be made.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SPOONER. I shall be through in a moment, but will yield if the Senator wants to ask me a question.

Mr. CULBERSON. I dislike very much to interrupt the Senator, but I have an engagement which takes me from the Chamber, and I have drafted a substitute for the bill which we are now considering, which to a certain extent, and probably to the full extent, meets the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] who has just taken his seat. If the Senator from Wisconsin will kindly let me offer the substitute and have it read, I shall be greatly obliged to him.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas asks to have read a substitute for the pending bill, which will be read by the Secretary in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

Substitute intended to be proposed by Mr. CULBERSON to S. 3653, entitled "A bill for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes."

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"SECTION 1. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, willfully and maliciously kill the President of the United States or the official next in succession to the Presidency under the Constitution and laws of the United States, or who shall willfully and maliciously kill the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, shall be punished with death.

"SEC. 2. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, attempt to commit either of the offenses mentioned in the foregoing section shall be punished with death.

"SEC. 3. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, advise or counsel the killing of the President of the United States or the official next in succession to the Presidency under the Constitution and laws of the United States, or shall conspire with any other person to accomplish the same, or who shall advise or counsel the killing of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, or shall conspire with any other person to accomplish the same, shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding twenty years.

"SEC. 4. That any person who has conspired as aforesaid may be indicted and convicted separately, although the other party or parties to the conspiracy are not indicted or convicted.

"SEC. 5. That any person who shall willfully and knowingly aid in the escape from punishment of any person guilty of either of the offenses mentioned in the preceding sections shall be deemed an accomplice after the fact, and shall be punished as if a principal, although the other party or parties to said offense shall not be indicted or convicted."

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I do not wish to occupy any further time. My main purpose was to discuss the constitutional question raised by the Senator from Georgia. I think this bill, or its substance, ought to be enacted. I have no doubt whatever about the power of Congress to enact it. I believe it should contain some strong provisions to punish men who advise orally or by printed words the assassination of the President of the United States, or of one in line of succession. That is a grievous offense; it is not liberty of speech, it is license, which ought not to be tolerated. Sometimes, strong men, by the use of words of counsel or advice or an adroit utterance, intentionally and almost inevitably lead some weaker tool to perpetrate this awful crime. I would not invade the liberty of the press; I would not invade the liberty of speech; but I would throw around the Presidential office some safeguards against the effect of such diabolical assaults and dangers. I have finished.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I wish to ask my friend from Wisconsin a question. I have great respect for his opinion as a lawyer and a legislator, and I want to say frankly that I am anxious to vote for this bill if I possibly can.

Does the Senator not think, as a lawyer, that the object which he has just stated in concluding his remarks will be fully attained by changing the language of the bill as he has quoted it, so that it will read: "Aid, abet, advise, or counsel the assassination of the President of the United States?"

Mr. SPOONER. I do. I have stated that I was not wedded to any particular language in this bill. I think the language which the Senator suggests will accomplish the purpose.

Mr. VEST. If the bill is made to read, "aid, abet, advise, or counsel," I then shall vote for it with great pleasure, but I state frankly—I may be wrong; it may be the effect of bad education politically—but I have a great antipathy against the old alien and sedition laws, after a study of the history of them. I have been confirmed in my impression against that legislation, and this bill is nearly a copy of those old alien and sedition laws.

Mr. President, the word "instigate" is too loose. I know that I have been accused by the public press and on this floor of having instigated rebellion against the United States, when I have only given my honest judgment on questions pending here. To submit to a court, with a judge who has very decided opinions upon the question, who is not a capable lawyer—and there are some such judges—and let the question of whether this offense has been instigated come in times of great political excitement before a jury taken from the district in a Federal court, or in a State court from the county, and every lawyer and every layman who has intelligence can see what abuse and what outrage it would justify and which would be perpetrated upon that word "instigate," with the definition given by the Senator from Wisconsin, who, I believe, has read it from some authority.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question, if he will permit me.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. Are not the terms "counsel or advise" as capable of as much misconstruction as the word "instigate?" Here is the difficulty, and I want to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to it: You may be engaged in conversation with a single individual. He may construe what you have said as advising or counseling him to murder the President. He alone can have you indicted, and upon his testimony alone you may be punished for the offense of having counseled or advised him to commit murder. There is no overt act required in connection with the charge.

Mr. HOAR. That is an overt act.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, no; not within the meaning of law. I ask pardon of the Senator from Massachusetts. "To advise" is not an overt act. It gives too much opportunity in times of great political excitement or otherwise for personal revenge or the reeking of private hate and spleen, for one man to be able to say, without a single overt act being provable or having been committed, that his friend or his neighbor or his enemy in a conversation with him advised or counseled him to commit such a heinous offense.

I can not and never will vote for a law that is capable of such wrong against the citizen, when, if the offense is that of conspiracy, then there must be two minds at least meet toward the accomplishment of a given design; but where you make the punishment of any citizen dependable upon a word or a sentence that may drop from his lips inadvertently or otherwise, and his punishment be dependable upon the testimony of a single individual as to what that conversation was, I never can bring myself to vote for it.

Mr. VEST. It seems to me it is entirely immaterial whether it is conspiracy or an individual act, provided it brings about the crime which we are seeking to prevent and punish.

Mr. PATTERSON. But the trouble——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. PATTERSON. To punish for advising or counseling is to punish a man though he may not bring about the crime. I may be accused of having advised the killing of the President, and yet the President may never have been in danger of receiving a single blow.

Mr. VEST. All that is a question for judicial determination. If my friend from Colorado waits for legislation which will meet every conceivable contingency in a court of justice, he might as well abandon the idea of any legislation at all. Hard cases do not make the law. It must be a very weak judge and a very ignorant or corrupt jury who do not understand what the words "counsel and advise" mean.

Mr. PATTERSON. I venture the prediction that there is not such a law as that to be found upon the statute books of any State. There is no provision, I will venture the assertion, upon the statute books of any State that punishes a man for counseling or advising anything. It must be more than that; it must go far beyond that.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Will my friend from Missouri permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I wanted to interject the remark that the venture of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] is a very rash venture. I could within an hour and a half produce hundreds of such instances as those he challenges; but my purpose was to suggest to the memory of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that the word "instigate" is the apt legal word, meaning to incite or provoke, and I wish to endeavor to refresh his recollection by saying that in many of the legal definitions of crime it is used even more frequently than "incite" as the equivalent of the terms "aid" and "abet." It is the precise legal term, I respectfully submit, for the purpose here intended.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I do not know that I understand the Senator from Maryland exactly. Does he mean to say that the words "aid or abet" would be sufficient?

Mr. MCCOMAS. I say that in criminal statutes "instigate" means to incite or provoke. It is used with "advise and counsel" or with "aid and abet," but it covers all there is in "incitement," all there is in "provoking," and it does really include "counseling" and "advising." I mean to say that it is the apt legal term in this connection in the section where it is used. I submit that to the recollection of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. That is very probable; and there may be other words which would meet my approbation and accomplish my object better than those I have suggested. I mean simply that this statute, in my judgment, should be so framed as to reach every human being—if it shall be but one human being—who in any way, directly or indirectly, aids or abets or is accessory before the fact or counsels or advises—those words are very distinctly understood in law and in everyday life—the terrible crime which has been three times committed in this country within recent years. I would vote with pleasure for this bill, although there are objectionable features in it; but I will sacrifice my individual opinion as to the other things if this objection I make can be removed.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator state exactly the amendment he desires to have made?

Mr. VEST. I have not a copy of the bill before me, but I suggest that the words "aid, abet, counsel, or advise," be used.

Mr. HOAR. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. VEST. That is all I ask.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out the word "instigate," and substitute the words "aid, abet." If there be no objection, I ask that that amendment may now be adopted.

Mr. TELLER. Where does the amendment come in?

Mr. HOAR. In the third line on the second page of the bill.

If I may be allowed to say so, I agree with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] that the word "instigate" is the proper legal term, and not only is it the proper legal term, but it is a term requiring more certainty of a deliberate purpose to induce another man to commit an act than are the words "counsel" and "advise." But, in deference to the desire to make this bill satisfactory, without sticking on immaterial matters and in deference to the Senator from Missouri, I will accept his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Massachusetts state the amendment he desires made?

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out the word "instigate" in the third line of section 3 of the bill and to insert the words "aid, abet."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Missouri had two other amendments to offer.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the one I have just suggested may be first accepted.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to know where those words are to come in.

Mr. HOAR. In section 3, page 2, line 3, to strike out the word "instigate" after the word "thereof."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, on page 2, line 3, after the word "thereof," it is proposed to strike out "instigate" and insert "aid, abet."

Mr. TELLER. Now, let the first part of the section be read as it will stand when amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, aid, abet, advise, or counsel the killing of the President or Vice-President of the United States or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the President may devolve, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that the word "instigate" again occurs in section 5, on line 18 of page 2.

Mr. TELLER. That should be stricken out.

Mr. HOAR. In section 5, on page 2, line 18, I move to strike out the word "instigate" and insert the word "counsel."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 5, on page 2, line 18, after the word "or," it is proposed to strike out the word "instigate" and insert "counsel;" so as to read:

That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, by spoken words, or by written or printed words, uttered or published, threaten to kill or advise or counsel another to kill the President or Vice-President of the United States, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not desire to take much time on this bill, for it has been very thoroughly discussed. I do not suppose that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will ask us to vote upon the bill to-day, for I am sure we should all like to see the substitute offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] in print. I do not suppose there is any great haste to reach a vote on the bill to-day.

I have not any question of the power of Congress to enact legislation of this general character. I assume that the Government of the United States has the power to protect its officers and to punish offenses against them, which follows the right to protect. I can scarcely conceive how the Government of the United States could be administered under certain conditions if the Government did not have the power in its own courts to protect its officers.

I have not been one of those who felt that there was such a crying need for legislation of this character as some other Senators appear to think there is. I am anxious to vote for some proper bill, because I think the public sentiment of the country has been aroused on this subject, and the people seem to think that some legislation should be enacted, but I want a bill that shall be as nearly perfect as it is possible to get it.

I realize that it is impossible to prevent some abuse of any provision that we may insert in this or any other bill. In my opinion, the bill has been very much improved by striking out the word "instigate," for while the Senator from Massachusetts says that is the proper word, it is a word of extremely broad definition, and is synonymous with "incite." I know, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] said a few minutes ago, that a number of Senators have been charged on this floor with inciting rebellion in the Philippine Islands, because they did not agree with the method by which the war was being carried on over there, who had as little idea or desire to instigate opposition to the Government as any other Senators here. But in times of extreme excitement those words might be used injuriously, and they are not necessary for the purpose for which this bill is designed.

This bill, as originally prepared, seems to have been more of a measure to punish parties who should assault the President than to protect the President, although it is professedly "for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes." The other purposes seem to me to be the principal thing; that is, the punishment.

The seventh section, which I think is objectionable, but which I do not consider sufficiently objectionable to compel me to vote against the bill, came in by an amendment of the committee, I understand. I do not like it. I prefer very much that the protection of the President shall be remitted to the civil branch of the Government and not the military. I should like very much if the Senator who has the bill in charge would look it over and see if he can not authorize the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Treasury, who has charge of the secret-service force of the Government of the United States, to protect the person of the President by a guard which, to do it effectually, must be a secret guard.

The President of the United States has had that for many years, and I have not the slightest doubt that if there had been attempted in Washington what occurred in Buffalo, it would have been frustrated before the crazy assassin could have reached him. But the President having gone to Buffalo, there was a disorganization of the ordinary methods of providing for and looking after the safety of the President which have been in vogue here for many, many years under all the Administrations about which I have known anything since I have been here, and to a very much larger extent in the last few years than in the early years of my service in this body. I am not complaining of that, because as the population grows greater the danger will be greater. The ordinary methods have been through the secret service of the Government, but the President being away, that service was disorganized, and the probability is that the slight change of a gentleman connected with that service from the usual position he had with reference to the President permitted the catastrophe.

There never will be a time when by any legislation of this character, or any other, you can entirely secure the person of the President of the United States as the head of this Government. No severe punishment, I do not care how severe it is, will do it, and, as a rule, I think the experience of mankind has been that the severity of punishment is not a deterrent of crime. I believe it is a proposition which I need not elucidate, for I believe everybody admits it. When Great Britain had a great many more capital offenses, amounting to more than 200, crime was more rampant and the same offenses were more frequent than with punishments of less severity. So I think as a principle it does not remove the danger to the President of the United States to say that a man who attempts to kill the President is going to be punished by death, or, if he does kill him, that he shall be punished by death.

The danger to the President of the United States comes from two classes of people: One whom we denominate anarchists—to which class it is said the assassin of the late President belonged—and the other are crazy people or people who are not normal. I do not suppose I expose anything that the public does not know when I state that it is almost a weekly occurrence that somebody comes here with a view in his mind of assassinating the President—some crazy man, some foolish fellow, like the man who came here last fall and said he had been elected and not Major McKinley, and he wanted to take the office. There is all that kind of thing. That is the class of people you have to contend with. That is the class of people for whom you want this guard. If any man of determined spirit makes up his mind to kill the President and take the consequences, the chances are very greatly that he can do it, and there is nothing we can do which will prevent it. But we certainly can throw some safety around the President of the United States. However, I do not think we shall throw it around the President by making the Army the agent of his protection. I think it would be a great deal better to leave it where it has been. I suppose everybody knows that in the last Administration we did not make so large appropriations perhaps for that purpose as in some former Administrations, and yet if we had made ten times the appropriation that we did make, the crime would have been committed.

I am anxious to vote for this bill, as I say, not because I think it is so very necessary, nor because I believe it will accomplish very much, but because it meets a public sentiment which has been very rife since the killing of the President of the United States. And yet I am anxious that the bill shall be amended so that not only in its actual administration, but in its general appearances, that it shall have proper regard for the rights of free speech and the freedom of the press. Of course I know it is possible that you may convict any man under any criminal law of a crime named in the law who is not guilty of any crime at all. Those things we can not by legislation avoid, but we can diminish the danger somewhat by using proper words, and we can take away somewhat the temptation to somebody who wants to pursue some other person—to trump up, in common parlance, a charge against the citizen—when there is not any ground for it. That is one reason why I object to the word "instigate." I think the term is broader than is necessary, and I think it would be very easy to say that Mr. Jones or Mr. Smith made a speech somewhere which was calculated to incite the populace to the extent of killing the President or somebody else when the speaker had no idea of any such purpose and when, perhaps, that was not the real result at all of his speech. It is delicate ground. It is not necessary in this bill, or in any other, to go to that extent. If we say that any person who shall willfully and maliciously, as I understand the bill now reads——

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the word "maliciously" been inserted?

Mr. TELLER. I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether the word "maliciously" has not been inserted after the word "willfully."

Mr. HOAR. No.

Mr. TELLER. Then I think——

Mr. HOAR. I have said at some time that I would consent to have that word put in. Indeed I am willing to put in what some Senators thought they would rather have——

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, has the word been put in?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been.

Mr. TELLER. It has been inserted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has.

Mr. TELLER. That is the equivalent of saying "murder." Some Senators have said they preferred "murder." I should not care about it. I do not think there is any real difference between the terms.

The first section provides that "any person * * * who shall willfully cause the death of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country shall be punished with death." Of course, that means who shall do so in this country?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. Otherwise we would not have any jurisdiction.

Mr. HOAR. It says so in the early part of the section.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. It says so in both places.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Georgia has proposed an amendment which seeks to distinguish the act of killing when the President is performing the functions of his office and when he is not. I can not quite see how we can do that.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, he does not state accurately the character of the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Perhaps I do not. I will let the Senator state exactly what it is. The amendment says, "Because of his official position."

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator means a person who shall kill him because he is President, "or for the purpose of destroying the Government or impairing the execution of its constitutional powers." It does not make a bit of difference whether the murderer intends to impair the execution of the constitutional power, he does it by the murder. I do not know exactly how you are going to determine the question "because of his official position," because he is President.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator mean to say that the killing of anybody necessarily interrupts the constitutional functions of government?

Mr. TELLER. It interrupts their exercise for the time being, of course.

Mr. BAILEY. It can not possibly, because the succession is provided for under the Constitution and under the law of Congress, and while it may delay——

Mr. HOAR. That interrupts.

Mr. BAILEY. A moment. While it may delay for an hour until the successor can come to take the oath of office, still the experience is that the successor is always near at hand to take the oath, and in theory, as well as in fact, the succession is almost instantaneous. There never has been an interruption of the constitutional functions of government by reason of the death, either violent or peaceful, of any President of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. It is very easy to imagine that such a thing might happen.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose the shot had been immediately fatal and the Vice-President had been at a distance. Take a case before the days of steam and the telegraph. Suppose Washington had been assassinated and John Adams was at Quincy, Mass.

Mr. BAILEY. Even in that day they had no such law as this, although the inconveniences of travel and notification were very much more serious.

Mr. HOAR. Now, the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the two Senators?

Mr. TELLER. I yield.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator undertakes to make an argument to the effect that there can be no interruption, practically and substantially, in the functions of the Presidential office by reason of the murder of the President. When it is suggested to him that the Vice-President or the next person in succession may be absent and not get the news for a day, or perhaps some things are required to be done within an hour, or that John Adams was at Quincy when General Washington was in Philadelphia, he answers, "Oh, well, we did not have any such law as this."

Mr. TELLER. Because it has not been the case that there has been an interregnum of any great length it does not follow that there never will be. In the recent case the Vice-President, it is true, was hunting. He had every reason to suppose that there was no necessity for his remaining in the vicinity of the injured President. Everybody in the United States believed he was on the road to recovery, and he believed it. Now, if he had succeeded in getting into the wilderness with his guide, where he might have got in another day, it might have been a week before he could have been found. So in that case there certainly would have been an interruption in the exercise of the Executive power. Nobody else, not even the Secretary of State, in the lifetime of the Vice-President can act. It may be a remote contingency and may not often occur.

But I do not know how we are to determine whether the man who kills the President kills him for the purpose of destroying the Government or impairing the execution of its constitutional powers or whether he kills him because he has some grievance against him, as it was said the murderer of Garfield had.

I suppose in the case of the late President there is no question but that the party assassinating him intended to bring about some condition, and probably in his crazy brain he did not understand exactly what; but he intended to interrupt at least the executive functions of the Government, and I suppose he would fall under the provision. I doubt whether you can make those fine distinctions in a bill like this. The President of the United States must at all times be presumed to be in the exercise of the functions devolved upon him by the Constitution and his election, because, as I suggested when the Senator from Wisconsin was speaking, the place of exercising those powers is coextensive with the whole boundaries of the United States.

We have a sort of unwritten law that the President shall not exercise any of the functions of President if he be outside of the country, and that he might abandon his office if he went out. So I presume there is no President who will go out. But we have had a number of instances of the President calling the Cabinet together in the State of New York, in the State of New Jersey, I think in the State of Ohio during the last Administration, and nobody has ever doubted that he could perform every function there that he could perform in this city. At least I do not think anyone ever has. I suppose if a bill should pass and the President had gone over to Maryland, and happened to be over there and the bill was brought to him there he could sign it just as well in Maryland or Virginia as in the District of Columbia.

I see the purpose that the Senator from Georgia has in trying to make a distinction between the official of the United States and an individual citizen of the United States, which the President is in one sense of the term.

I do not think in this discussion there is any necessity for anybody to complain of Senators who have wanted to exercise supreme care, I may say, in getting this bill in proper shape. I desire to vote for it, as I know every other Senator here does, if it commends itself to him in general principles. If it does not violate any fundamental principle of government, every Senator here wants to vote for it of course. Some Senators feel, and I felt so myself, that it was unnecessarily open to criticism; and if I find when I come to read the substitute offered by the Senator from Texas that it meets my views better than this measure, I mean to vote for it, and I do not want anybody to get up here or anywhere else and say that I am less concerned about protecting the person of the President of the United States than they are because I do not see fit to insert in the bill all the provisions they see fit to insert in it. I think it is hardly fair because certain Senators have criticised this bill that there should be criticisms of the Senators to the extent of intimating at least that the criticisms are simply for the purpose of finding fault with the bill and not for making it a perfect and complete measure.

I have followed the Senator from Georgia in his discussion of this bill, and I think it has been able and conservative, and many of his ideas I think meet the approval of Senators who want to vote for the bill and who perhaps will vote for it, although it does not suit them in every particular.

As I say, I do not like to vote for section 7. I do not think it is a nice thing for us to use the Army for the purpose of protecting the President of the United States, and yet there is no great principle involved in it, because it is a limited use of the Army. It is a violation of the general principle that the laws of the United States shall be enforced, not by the Army, but by the civil branch of the Government, and yet I should hardly feel disposed to vote against the bill simply because section 7 does not meet my approval. But I believe the Senator from Massachusetts might make it so that it would meet my approval and the approval of a good many others by simply authorizing the Secretary of War to detail persons for this duty, without saying that they must be detailed from the Army, leaving it discretionary with him as to whether he will take civilians, but putting a duty upon him which I can see the propriety of doing, because I know that no President of the United States will want to take that step. I know the present President of the United States would not like to do it. I do not believe the successor to President Garfield would liked to have taken the step.

It might have been construed that he was afraid of being assassinated. We have the power to determine what protection the President should have, and of course I think we can say if we choose that the Army may be used; but I do not like to do it. I am afraid next time somebody will want the Army used somewhere else to enforce the law, for which it may be used under certain circumstances; but it ought not to be so used except under extreme circumstances.

For that reason I have made the motion to strike this out. I do not intend to press the amendment, but if the Senator who has the bill in charge thinks it ought to be in here and does not think he can make any change in it, I am not going to press my amendment, because if it should be voted down I should not for that reason feel compelled, the other provisions in the bill being correct, to vote against the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I was in hopes we could get a vote this afternoon. The debate seems to be pretty well over. It is now still early, 10 minutes past 3 o'clock. One or two Senators have manifested a desire to see in print before a final vote the substitute proposed by the Senator from Texas, and if that be their desire, perhaps we can get an arrangement for a vote at some hour to-morrow.

Mr. TELLER. I think we can get a vote without any arrangement

Mr. HOAR. I am not quite sure of that, and I think it would be very convenient to have such an arrangement. Senators would know then what they can depend upon in regard to other business. I ask unanimous consent that at 3 o'clock to-morrow the Senate proceed to vote on the bill and pending amendments.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I dislike to interpose any objection to that request, but while we were voting on the subsidy bill a few days ago I discovered a very serious objection to an arrangement of that sort. For instance, none of us know what amendments will be proposed, and yet that unanimous consent having been given, when an amendment is proposed that we might desire to vote either for or against, but in order to do so might desire to state the ground upon which our vote was predicated, we are precluded from doing so.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose we make it 3 o'clock, the debate thereafter to proceed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BAILEY. I should be entirely satisfied with that.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think that would make any practical difference.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not insist upon an arrangement to vote to-morrow. I think, as the Senator from Colorado has said, that we can very easily get to a vote to-morrow, but something might transpire which would make it necessary to carry it further over than 3 o'clock, or even 4 o'clock. Something might transpire so that we could not vote at all to-morrow. I hope the Senator——

Mr. HOAR. I am only asking what I supposed would be for the convenience of all Senators.

Mr. BAILEY. That they might know?

Mr. HOAR. That they might know something of the time when there was to be a vote, and so that the business which was to come on thereafter might be ready.

I may say, without any possible suggestion of any impropriety, I think, that it has been the experience of the Senate for a great many years that these arrangements of fixing an hour to vote some time in the future have very largely operated to the convenience of Senators. They know what to expect. They get the business ready which is to come up afterwards.

There is the objection stated by the Senator from Texas, which is of great gravity, and at the same time when I came into the Senate, and when you came into the Senate, Mr. President [Mr. FRYE in the chair], nearly every measure about which there was a contest was settled by sitting up nearly all night and having a test of endurance. The majority said, "We will sit until we vote." I can remember one very eminent and rather grim Senator who used to sit near where the Senator from Indiana now sits, who used to write on little bits of paper "stick," "stick," and pass them around to his colleagues when they were getting sleepy.

So, after all, when the Senator from Mississippi shall have been here, as I hope he will, as long as I have——

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Thank you.

Mr. HOAR. He will be very much in favor of this way. But I will not press the request now if the Senator objects.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I will say to the Senator, with his permission, that there is no disposition to delay the vote and no disposition to prevent a vote at any reasonable time; but I do not see the necessity for any great haste in voting on this measure, and while I believe we can very easily get to a vote to-morrow, it may be possible that we can not, and I would not like to be precluded now that there have been only two days' debate on the bill. I do not know that I shall desire to say anything on it myself, but I rather think I would like to suggest some things to the Senate to-morrow. My colleague desires to take up a few minutes, probably not more than ten or fifteen.

Mr. HOAR. I will not press the request.

Mr. President, I should like to say just one word about an argument which it seems to me is near the bottom of all or most of the objections which have been made, and that is that under possible circumstances a man may be convicted on imperfect evidence, or he may be convicted when he is innocent, or that there might be a great feeling of popular excitement which would lead to it, and therefore this particularly grave offense ought to be surrounded with safeguards as to the trial and the description which we do not apply to any ordinary crime.

I think Senators err when they say that there is danger in this country that men are to be convicted of treason or of offenses like murdering a Chief Magistrate, or inciting to the murder, on imperfect evidence under local or general political excitement. In all other crimes whatever—parricide, matricide, killing of children, or poisoning wells—you have the ordinary law of evidence. One witness is enough in law, and you trust the jury and the court and the pardoning power and the humanity and the common sense of the American people to make those laws work justice, and they work justice.

If there is any offense which the experience of this country shows men will not be convicted of wrongfully or cruelly under popular excitement, it is the offense of treason. There has not been, I believe, a man punished for treason in this country since its foundation. Every man who was in General Lee's army at Gettysburg, including its illustrious commander, might have been tried in Pennsylvania, before a jury impaneled from that vicinage, of the crime of treason if the Government had so willed, and yet no human being was tried. Until you change the temper of the American people or the Constitution or the regulations in regard to criminal trials, that is the one thing above all others in regard to which an innocent man will be safe. So there is no reason for excepting this offense, dangerous and frequent (as we are compelled sorrowfully to say), from the ordinary methods of ordinary criminal trials.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to call his attention, before he sits down, to two lines in section 6?—

That any person who shall willfully and knowingly aid in the escape from punishment of any person guilty.

Would it not be better to have it read "escape from arrest?"

Mr. HOAR. That includes escape from arrest.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. The lawyer who defended the man might be aiding him in escaping from punishment.

Mr. HOAR. The word "escape" in criminal law is as well defined as the words "murder" or "felony." It is a common-law offense to escape.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. This does not follow the definition of escape in criminal law at all.

Mr. HOAR. I think it does.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. To escape in criminal law is to escape from arrest, whereas this reads, "escape from punishment." That is the matter to which I am calling the attention of the Senator. If he will put it in the definition of escape in criminal law, I will have no objection to that feature of the bill. This is "escape from punishment."

Mr. HOAR. I think the Senator is right in that suggestion. What the Senator says is true.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I was satisfied as to what the Senator meant by the bill.

Mr. HOAR. The old law term "escape" applies only to a person who is under arrest or——

Mr. McCOMAS. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that it might satisfy the Senator from Mississippi if he would make it read, "in the escape from arrest or from punishment." Perhaps that would meet the effect of the suggestion.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. "To avoid arrest or escape from arrest."

Mr. HOAR. I think there is great force in the Senator's suggestion. What are the words which the Senator from Maryland suggests?

Mr. McCOMAS. I would say, "escape from arrest or from punishment."

Mr. HOAR. "To escape from arrest or punishment."

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. The very objectionable point lies in the words "in the escape from punishment," because the lawyer who defends him, if he is charged with crime, is aiding him to escape from punishment.

The idea which I wish to convey to the Senator from Massachusetts is that instead of making it read that anyone who aids him to escape from punishment shall be himself guilty, let it read that anyone who aids him to avoid arrest or escape from arrest shall be himself guilty.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; but it is not necessary to detain the Senate by a discussion of phraseology. I think he can probably draw a phrase which I will agree to if he will let it stand for a moment. I think the Senator's point is well taken.

Mr. McCOMAS. Before the Senator leaves the matter, I suggest to both Senators that if we simply say—and that is the common-law matter of escape—"that any person who shall willfully and knowingly aid in the escape of any person guilty," etc., I think that would satisfy the purpose of the bill and satisfy the criticism.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. That would satisfy the criticism.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; let that be inserted. then.

Mr. McCOMAS. Then we shall have to strike out, in line 25, page 2, the words "from punishment."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 25, page 2, after the word "escape," strike out the words "from punishment."

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. In order to make that fit, we should strike out the words "in the" and insert "anyone to;" so as to read, "willfully and knowingly aid anyone to escape."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts. The Senator from Mississippi is proposing an additional amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Has the amendment been agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi proposes something further.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator state it?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I do not think that without the addition of some other words the clause "that any person who shall willfully and knowingly aid in the escape of any person" would make the sense intended by the Senator from Maryland. I suggest to strike out the words "in the" in addition to the words "from punishment" and to insert "anyone." I think that will accomplish it.

Mr. McCOMAS. I think that there is no added significance by striking out the preposition. It will mean the well-known common-law phrase.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. The Senator is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland proposes an amendment, which will be stated,

The SECRETARY. In line 25, page 2, section 6, strike out the words "from punishment."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts has concluded what he desired to say, I shall occupy a few moments of the Senate's time.

In the beginning I desire to say that no Senator here and no citizen of the United States elsewhere abhors more than I do the crime out of which this bill grew. No Senator here and no citizen elsewhere cherishes a more profound abhorrence of anarchy and its pernicious doctrines than I do. I readily agree that a man who advocates the violent destruction of all government is not entitled to the protection of any government, and I would as cheerfully vote for this bill as the proponents of it if it drew the proper distinction between killing the President as the official head of the Republic and killing him as an individual.

We all agree that this Government has the power to remove every unlawful obstruction to its operation. Undoubtedly it possesses ample power to punish men who resist any of its officers in the execution of their lawful duties, and that principle applies from the President down to the humblest deputy marshal.

But, Mr. President, the Government of the United States possesses no power to punish any man who assaults or murders one of its officers in a matter not connected with his official duties. Let us suppose that a Vice-President is engaged in a hunting expedition, and that while he was thus engaged some of his fellow-hunters, without knowing who he was, should engage in a personal encounter with him. Now, sir, whether that encounter was provoked by personal insult or provoked by a supposed trespass upon the hunter's land, and although the hunter might be entirely ignorant of the Vice-President's personality and of his office, under this bill he could be arraigned in the Federal courts and punished; and this, too, notwithstanding the fact that the man who committed the assault had not the least intention of interfering in any degree with the operation of the Federal Government.

He might be as loyal and as patriotic a citizen as the Vice-President himself; he might have been as ready—and when I say that anybody was as ready as the last Vice-President to respond to his country's call I pay him a great compliment—he might have been as ready as the last Vice-President to have responded to any call upon him by his country; he might have cherished its institutions as fervently as the Senator from Massachusetts, and yet without any thought of interfering with the operation of the Government, without any thought of assailing it in any particular, he might engage in a personal quarrel with an unknown stranger, who might turn out to be a Vice-President of the United States in search of exciting recreation.

It has come to be an annual occurrence that the Chief Magistrate of this nation retires in the summer time to his usual home for rest and leisure. Let us suppose that in accordance with this custom the present President of the United States, when the dog days come, shall be at Oyster Bay, and there, without any reference to governmental questions or policies, he falls into a controversy with one of his neighbors about fences or boundaries—a most improbable supposition, but not by any means an impossible one—will any Senator say that we ought to so far forget our theory of this Government as to punish a citizen of New York who quarrels with and possibly assaults the President of the United States over a question having no relation to the Government?

Mr. President, the demand of the people in this country is that Congress shall lay its heavy hand upon the anarchist, and in that demand I join as heartily as anybody. Within the constitutional power of Congress, I would go to the very limit. I would hunt him from one end of this country to the other, until he should find no resting place. But, sir, in attempting to correct one evil, let us not introduce another. Let us rather show the world that we can suppress lawlessness according to law, and that in making laws to punish those who would subvert all government we can and will make them according to the Constitution.

I believe in suppressing lawlessness; I believe in subduing anarchy; but I believe in doing both according to the law; and there is no justification for doing either in any other way. If any man shall kill or assault with intent to kill the President of the United States because he is the President of the United States, and thus seek to destroy all sovereignty through the murder of the President, then surely there would not be in any quarter of the globe a voice lifted in his defense. The eradication of the anarchists is the one purpose which the country demands shall be conserved; that is the purpose the Senate desires to accomplish; and if you will offer a bill for that and that purpose only, we will present to the country the gratifying spectacle of a unanimous vote for its passage. Make it plain that we seek to destroy the men who seek to destroy the Government, and there will be no difference.

Of course, I speak without any canvass on either side of the Chamber, but I undertake to say that a bill drawn upon those lines and keeping away from the controverted or doubtful question will command the vote of every Senator in this Chamber. How much better will it be to serve the purpose which we have in mind by a unanimous-consent vote than to insist upon a measure of doubtful constitutionality and thus divide us as we must upon our consciences divide?

The Supreme Court, in the Neagle case, went a long ways, but it did not go to the extent, and in my judgment that court will never go to the extent, of saying that the Federal Congress possesses the power to punish a purely personal offense against one of the officers of the Government.

But, Mr. President, I have no expectation, of course, of influencing the vote of any gentleman on this measure, and I merely ventured to detain the Senate for the purpose of stating my own position, because when the roll is called upon this bill, standing as it does, it is impossible, with my view of the constitutional authority of Congress, to vote for its passage.

Mr. COCKRELL. If there is nothing further to be done, why not have the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee, printed just as it has now been agreed to, and let the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] be printed?

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection, Mr. President.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the bill may be printed as amended, so that we can have it before us in that form to-morrow when it comes up for discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks that the pending bill be printed and that the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas be printed.

Mr. HOAR. Is there any other amendment now actually offered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are amendments which have been printed and laid on the table, but none is pending. No amendment is now offered.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that the amendment of the senior Senator from Texas has not been printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] offered certain amendments——

Mr. COCKRELL. I know, but the amendments offered by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] and the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] have been printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have been printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. But the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has not been printed. Let us have that printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will also be printed, with the bill as amended, if there be no objection.

Mr. HOAR. Either all the amendments should be printed separately as they now are——

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Or printed with the bill. I think it is rather more convenient to have them printed separately.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment of the Senator from Texas will be printed separately, just as the others have been printed.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. I suppose the order includes the printing of the bill as amended up to this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Up to this time.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to offer a substitute for section 7, and I ask to have it printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received. Does the Senator desire to have it read?

Mr. TELLER. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed.

Mr. BERRY. If that matter is disposed of, I desire to make a report out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Arkansas making a report? The Chair hears none.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT ST. CHARLES, MO.

Mr. BERRY. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4469) extending the time for the completion of a wagon-motor bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo., as provided by an act approved June 3, 1896, and as extended by the act approved January 27, 1900, to report it without amendment and to submit a report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is simply a bill extending the time for the completion of a bridge over the Missouri near St. Charles. The charter has already been granted, and the bill provides for an extension of the time for its completion. It is only ten lines long or less. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which will be read in full to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to extend the time for completing the construction of a wagon and motor bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo., to June 3, 1904.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCLUSION AND DEPORTATION OF ALIEN ANARCHISTS.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I ask leave, out of order, to introduce a bill to provide for the exclusion and deportation of alien anarchists, which I shall ask to have read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Before the bill is read by its title at the desk, I desire to say that it is not original with me. It is a bill which was introduced in the Senate, I understand, by former Senator Hill, of New York, which passed the Senate, and which by a very narrow margin failed to pass in the other House. It is the bill which was referred to by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] in an article written by him and published in the North American Review of December, 1901, from which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] read, and in which the article of Judge Aldrich appears.

I introduce this bill and ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, not that I think the bill is sufficient in itself, although in the article to which I have referred the honorable Senator from Michigan went to the extent of saying that if this bill had passed the Fifty-third Congress, in his opinion, it would have prevented the assassination of President McKinley. It is possible that some further legislation may be required than is found in the provisions of this bill; but there are other bills kindred to it now before the Judiciary Committee. I introduce it and ask that it may be referred, in order that whatever there may be in the bill which can be availed of may be at their hands.

I have been induced to offer it because of my conviction of the correctness of the statement made by the Senator from Texas, that the great need, the great demand of the people of the United States, in view of what has occurred, and their anxiety that it should not again occur, is that we shall have preventive legislation. It is not sufficient that a man who murders the President of the United States shall be punished—and there is no doubt about the fact that whenever one does murder the President of the United States he will be punished—as he always has been in the past. But that does not meet the requirement. The requirement is to adopt measures which shall prevent the murder. It is with that view that I introduce the bill. I am heart and soul in favor of the most extreme legislation which can possibly be devised or justified for the accomplishment of that purpose.

The bill (S. 4610) to provide for the exclusion and deportation of alien anarchists was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 20, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate March 19, 1902.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 19, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of House bill 84.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the reprint of House bill 84.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to know the title of the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ADAMS. It is for the reorganization of the consular and diplomatic service of the United States. The print is exhausted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice to the House that immediately following the disposition of the river and harbor bill there will be called up for consideration in the House the privileged reports from the Committee on Elections No. 1 of the cases of Spears against Burnett and Moss against Rhea, except that they will not be called upon Friday to interfere with the Friday Calendar.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12346, the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair, for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished chairman of the River and Harbor Committee said in his presentation of the bill that there had been a great deal of misapprehension—not to use the stronger term, misrepresentation—about many matters connected with this river and harbor bill. Now, sir, if there be any one subject about which there is misapprehension, and to some extent misrepresentation, it is in regard to the Mississippi River, and especially that portion which I have the honor to represent on this committee, the lower part, from Cairo to the Gulf.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the average member of this House fully contemplates how important is the Mississippi River, and how vastly important is that portion which we know as the overflowed region. In order to give you some little idea of the vast importance of that mighty stream, well called the Father of Waters, I wish to read very briefly from an article on the subject by Maj. J. A. Ockerson, member of the Mississippi River Commission. He says:

The Mississippi River is a commercial highway of immense value. It penetrates the heart of the most fertile section of the Union for a distance of about 2,500 miles. Its navigable tributaries, aggregating over 15,000 miles in length, reach out in all directions toward the remote limits of this great valley. It drains a territory whose area equals in extent the combined area of Austria, Germany, France, Italy, Portugal, Spain, Norway, and Great Britain. The river itself, in its winding course, covers a range of 6½ degrees in longitude and 18½ degrees in latitude. The headwaters of the tributaries extend in longitude from New York on the east to western Montana on the west, and reach in latitude from British America on the north to the Gulf of Mexico on the south, or about 1,800 miles in longitude and 1,500 miles in latitude. This vast drainage area, 1,256,000 square miles in extent, is equal to nearly one-half of the total area of the United States. It touches 30 States, 2 Territories and 2 provinces of the British possessions. Only 9 States to the eastward and 7 to the westward lie entirely beyond the confines of this great basin.

Those remarks, gentlemen, are applicable to the drainage basin; but what I wish to speak to you particularly about is the overflowed area of that great river, which amounts to 30,000 square miles. Now, you may say "30,000 square miles does not convey a very definite idea." We know things in this life by comparison. When we reflect that Belgium, one of the important kingdoms of this world, contains only 11,373 square miles, and supports six and a half million people; when we further reflect that the Netherlands, another of this earth's important kingdoms, consists of only 12,648 square miles and has over 5,000,000 inhabitants, and that these two kingdoms united have only 24,000 square miles with about 11,000,000 people—6,000 square miles less than the overflowed region of this mighty river—it conveys some idea of its magnitude.

When, sir, we reflect further that the great State of Massachusetts, so ably represented on this committee, contains only 8,315 square miles; Rhode Island, 1,250; New Jersey, 7,815, and Maryland, 12,210, or a total of 29,550—still less than the overflowed area of the Mississippi—this also conveys some idea of its magnitude.

Why, sir, what would we think if we should arise some morning and read in the papers that the Connecticut River had overflowed its banks and that the entire State of Massachusetts was submerged? We would be filled with horror and surprise. And yet the entire area of that State is only about one-fourth of the overflowed area of the Mississippi. We would be filled with additional horror and surprise if the papers also told us that the Delaware River had overflowed the entire State of New Jersey and the Potomac River had overflowed the entire State of Maryland. Yet, gentlemen, when the Mississippi River overflows and its flood area is submerged, it is an area greater in extent than these four great States combined—greater in extent than the two kingdoms of Belgium and the Netherlands together.

If this area, which is as rich as the valley of the Nile, richer than any other portion of this continent, had a population as numerous as the population of Belgium, 535 souls to the square mile, it would contain fully 15,000,000 people. See what a mighty empire it would be, how vastly important, and how well worthy of and entitled to Government assistance.

Now, what has the General Government done for the improvement of the levee system along this river? I take from the report of the Senate Commerce Committee on the Mississippi River floods, page 9, this statement, which was prepared by Captain Waterman, secretary Mississippi River Commission, under the direction of General Gillespie, the president of that Commission. It shows that the "total yardage of levees constructed by Federal, State, local, and private authority is 164,860,375 yards, built at a cost of $47,631,503, of which yardage 68,570,461 were constructed by Federal authority at a cost of $13,320,708, and 86,289,944 yards by State, local, and private authority, at a cost of $34,310,795."

Since this report was prepared the General Government has expended on levees $3,333,000, making a total expenditure by the National Government for levees of $16,653,609; and since that time the States and riparian landowners have expended more—I have not the exact figures, but they have spent more—making by computation the total amount expended by the States and riparian landowners at least $37,643,795, or a total cost for the levees of $54,297,404.

Now, I wish to impress upon every member of the committee the fact that for every dollar spent by the National Government in building levees on the Mississippi River the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas have expended two and one-quarter dollars. We are not coming here empty handed and asking for aid. We are helping ourselves, and doing it in a most vigorous manner. The levee interests along the banks of this river are in the hands of levee boards, and these levee boards and the States of Louisiana, Arkansas, and Mississippi actually collect annually a levee tax of $2,130,000. So you see that we do not come to you empty handed, but we are contributing cheerfully and enormously from our own means. It has been said by a great many that the Government has been contributing one-half of the amount expended upon the levees. I tell you, Mr. Chairman, the Government has not been contributing one-half toward this improvement. We have contributed for our own protection two and one-quarter dollars for every dollar the Government has put up, and we are paying more and more every year. We are paying an immense amount of local taxes, and I say we are paying more and more for the reason that our lands are enhancing so much in value because of this levee protection and the consequent increase in crops and the general development of the valley.

Now, I have told you that it has cost thus far to build the levees something like $54,000,000. You, perhaps, would like to know what it would cost to complete the levee system. According to the report of the Mississippi River Commission the entire cost of completing the levees on this river will be about $18,000,000. The National Government for some time has been spending, through this Commission, something like $1,000,000 to $1,250,000 annually, and the riparian lands and States about $1,250,000 to $1,500,000. So you see that in a few years—perhaps eight, at the outside—the levee system will be complete and perfect. There will be no gaps in the system from Cape Girardeau, Mo., to the passes on the Gulf of Mexico. It has been a long lane, but we are about at the end of it. We can see daylight.

In thinking of the levee system along the Mississippi River I am tempted to refer to levee systems on other great rivers. There are other rivers in the world which require levees besides the Mississippi, notably the Yellow River, in China. I find it very difficult to obtain any information about that great river. It is very difficult to get anything accurate on the subject. A great many books have been written about China, but none of the authors seem to know definitely what has been done by the Government and what by the local authorities in the matter of improving that mighty stream, which they tell us was leveed from one end to the other two thousand years before the Christian era, and which some of them tell us occasionally breaks over its banks, overflows thousands and thousands of square miles, and destroys millions of people. One author says that in the flood of 1887 7,000,000 people were drowned by the floods of the Yellow River. This almost surpasses human belief, but he tells us it is true. I wrote to Mr. Wu, the Chinese minister, asking him for information on these subjects, and here is what he says:

Prior to the Taiping rebellion, which lasted from 1850 to 1864, the Imperial Government used to appropriate from 6,000,000 to 8,000,000 taels a year for the expense of maintaining and repairing the Hwang Ho levees.

A tael, as you probably know, is $1.02 of our money. Think of it, six to eight million taels per annum for maintaining levees on the Hwang Ho River. He continues:

Since then the annual expense of maintaining and effecting ordinary repairs has been borne by authorities of the riparian provinces, while now and then for extraordinary repairs, occasioned by unusual floods and requiring large sums of money, the Imperial Government is called upon for necessary appropriation. The amounts thus appropriated vary according to the extent of damage done and the repairs to be effected. The conservation of the river is under the charge of the director-general of the Yellow River, who is assisted in this work by the governors of the provinces of Honan and Shantung. There is no special tax on the riparian lands of the river for conservation purposes.

I also wrote to Baron Gevers, minister for the Netherlands, in order to ascertain something about the cost and methods of keeping up the levees on the Rhine, and here is what he writes. In discussing the rivers generally, he says:

The "waterstaat" in general means the care for the construction and maintenance of every description of river works, dikes, etc.

The constitution makes a distinction between the general waterstaat and the special (or more clearly termed) waterstaat. The latter concerns more particularly the draining and protection of low lands from the encroachments of inland waters, and the expenses are covered by the so-called "polderlasten," a tax levied from the owners of the lands benefited. The special waterstaat is under control and supervision of the provincial administration.

As to the general waterstaat, which I believe interests you most, I can say in general that it concerns only the great rivers and principal waterways and the keeping thereof in a safe and proper condition for the protection of the country at large.

The general waterstaat is entirely under the control of the Government, which defrays all expenses out of the national revenue.

So you see, Mr. Chairman, that on these two great rivers, the Yellow River of China and the Rhine of Holland, the expenses are at least to a very great extent borne by the General Government.

Perhaps some one will ask the question, Why should Congress build levees? What right has the United States to spend the public money for building levees to protect the lands along the banks of this river? This is a very pertinent question, and if you will bear with me a few moments I think I can show you why it should be done. In the first place, it is the duty of Congress to promote commerce between the several States and Territories. Now, whatever is beneficial, necessary, and advantageous in promoting commerce is a proper thing for Congress to do. Commerce is very much benefited on the Mississippi River by the construction of levees. In order to prove that I desire you to bear with me and hear what some of the most eminent engineers of the United States have to say on that subject, and also what Judge Robert S. Taylor, of Indiana, member of the Mississippi River Commission and one of the ablest and best citizens of the United States, has to say on it. I read first the opinion of Maj. Smith S. Leach, of the United States Army. He says:

What nature has failed to do and what remains for man to accomplish in order to fit the Mississippi River to his wants and uses is summed up in the one word "control." Guide the current as a skillful workman guides his tools and it will not fail to carve out a channel commensurate in size with the magnificent agency employed and worthy of the greatest of rivers traversing and draining the most fruitful and prosperous of countries. To secure the greatest possible improvement of a channel it is necessary that the greatest attainable volume of water be made to flow through the channel. That this condition is not realized when a large volume of water is escaping over the sides needs but to be stated in order to be conceded.

Col. Charles R. Suter, one of the greatest of our engineers, was a witness before the Senate Commerce Committee several years ago, and being questioned in regard to the building of levees on the Mississippi River, had this to say:

Questioned by Senator GIBSON. You stated a moment ago, in reply to a question by the Chairman, that if you were improving the Mississippi River, even if it were running through a wilderness, if the country through which it ran was not peopled, you would still build levees on the banks.

Colonel SUTER. Yes, sir.

Senator GIBSON. Why do you hold this opinion?

Colonel SUTER. Because I consider that the improvement of the stream for navigable purposes without it is impossible.

The CHAIRMAN. Why?

Colonel SUTER. I think you have got to retain control over the whole volume of water. The discharge which passes within the banks is less than half of the flood discharge of the river, and the low-water discharge is only one-tenth of that which passes within the banks, about one-twentieth of the total discharge, and any works that you can put in to control the low-water flow on a stream like the Mississippi are liable to be utterly destroyed and rendered nugatory by this vastly larger volume of water which passes down the river during flood stages. At this season of the year the cut-offs occur, which will upset any plan of improvement, because they change entirely the regimen of the river, its course, its slopes, and everything about it.

Again, the water being over the works and everything else has a chance to develop new channels precisely where you do not want them to occur. A still further effect is produced where the levees are down; the water that goes over the banks keeps going out and coming back again. Whenever it makes its appearance in the river it acts like a tributary. It produces entirely new phases, just as any tributary will. Sometimes it entirely reverses the conditions of flow. The influence that levees exert under these heads I believe I have stated as conservative. They prevent the river from doing damage to the works we put in to improve the low-water discharge of the stream.

The CHAIRMAN. If there was no question about protecting the land, and you were simply improving the Mississippi River for navigation, would you have built the levees that are now built?

Colonel SUTER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You say you would?

Colonel SUTER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. So that, regardless of the question of landowners, you say that this Commission has done none too much toward levee building?

Colonel SUTER. That is my opinion.

Capt. Dan C. Kingman, United States engineer, another witness, testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose you drop all considerations of overflows and regard navigation alone, how then?

Captain KINGMAN. I should consider that the levee is a very important means of improving navigation, and I can give an instance. The Morganza crevasse was caused by a break that occurred in 1874. It remained open as a crevasse practically until closed in the winter of 1886 and 1887, a period of about twelve years. It has a deep bend there and plenty of water, and there had been no trouble with the navigation until after the crevasse was formed. After the crevasse occurred the navigation became worse and worse, and steamboat men told me they hated to run that bend at night, particularly in low water, not when the water was running out. When the water was running out there would seem to be danger of being drawn into the crevasse. The steamboat men dreaded it at low water because the sand bar or tongue of land opposite this bend had extended so far over into the bend that there was hardly room enough for two large steamboats to pass there. The crevasse was closed jointly by the commission and by the State in the winter of 1886 and 1887. Since then the navigation has steadily improved until now it is as good as it ever was. The current is quite regular. There is ample room now, and steamboat men have spoken to me repeatedly this year about the great improvement which has taken place in Morganza Bend since the crevasse has been closed. There is an actual case where the building of a levee made bad navigation good.

Judge R. S. Taylor, a witness before the Rivers and Harbors Committee during the present session, was asked his opinion about the benefit of levees to the navigation of the river. He replied:

I think that the improvement of the river channel for navigation, its perfect and final improvement, requires the control of the flood discharge as well as the low-water discharge, that the Mississippi River makes its own channel and makes it a good channel or a poor channel, according to the amount of water that flows in it. It is a better river now for navigation than the Arkansas River, because it is bigger and for no other reason. The inclosure of the flood water in the channel makes the river larger. It sets at work a greater amount of energy in the scouring-out process, scouring out the channel, and making the river throughout its length a river of larger average size, capable of doing more work and capable of keeping open a better channel.

Our experiments made some years ago all pointed to that result. In the early part of this work we made repeated surveys at points where there have been old crevasses. Some crevasses have remained open for ten years. When we made surveys of the channel 4 miles above and below and then closed the crevasses and then made another survey over the same stretch of river, we always found that the river had improved by the closure of the crevasse, improved in some cases as much as 15 per cent. Many experiments of that kind were made.

Questioned by the chairman:

I would like to ask if this expresses your views on the subject of levees: "While it is not claimed that levees in themselves are necessary as a means of securing ultimately a deeper channel for navigation, it is believed that the repair and maintenance of the extensive levees already existing will hasten the work of channel improvement through the increasing scour and depth of the river bed which they will produce during the high-river stages. They are regarded as a desirable, although not a necessary adjunct to the general system of improvement submitted."

Mr. TAYLOR. I think that is true. I think that has always been the opinion of a majority of the Commission, and in most of its history the opinion of all of them. That subject has not been much discussed in the Commission in recent years. It has been regarded as settled, and there has been but little discussion about it in recent years.

My own judgment about the matter is that the contribution made by the Government to the construction and repair of those levees is a proper thing for the Government to do independent of its connection with the navigation of the river. The lower plane of the Mississippi River is an exceptional area of land. It is a great drain through which the surplus waters of the whole northern Mississippi Valley go. The progress of civilization, the clearing up of those lands in the upper valley, the denuding of the forests, the draining of swamps, have all contributed to throw upon that lower channel a volume of water which has made its control very much harder than it would have been except for those improvements in the north.

The improvements in the upper part of the valley have thrown upon that part of the river a burden, an enormous burden, for the benefit of the lands that lie above, a burden that those people could not of themselves carry. I believe that if the Mississippi River Commission had not come in to the aid of the people in 1882, that most of those levees would have been unbuilt today. When the first allotment of money was made for the repair of levees the country had just suffered from the vast flood of 1882. It was absolutely lying waste, the people were without means, and without any possibility of restoring their levee system. The contributions by the Government gave the people courage, they took hold and issued bonds, mortgaged their lands, and made contributions, and the existing system to-day is the result. I think it could not have come into existence by the unaided efforts of those people, and I think now we are in sight of the time when, in consequence of that aid, they will be able to take care of themselves.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I desired to take up the time of the committee I could repeat much testimony similar to this. The late Maj. Henry C. Flad, of St. Louis, one of the most eminent civil engineers in the United States, held to this opinion. He was for years a member of the Mississippi River Commission and thoroughly familiar with that river. Maj. B. M. Harrod, of New Orleans, also a very able civil engineer and a member of the Mississippi River Commission since its creation, in 1879, had the same view of this subject and still holds it. Mr. Eads, probably the greatest civil engineer this country ever produced, the man who conceived and carried out successfully the idea of improving the South Pass of the Mississippi River by means of the jetties, held to this view. The Mississippi River Commission, which was appointed in 1879 for the special purpose of improving the Mississippi River for the purposes of navigation, for commerce, and for all problems connected with that river, have for many years held to the same opinion—at least the majority of the Commission have.

So I say to you that when Congress spends money to build levees on the Mississippi River, it spends money to promote the navigation of that river and to benefit its commerce, and when it does that it acts in strict accordance with the Constitution of the United States.

I find, moreover, that there is other authority in the Constitution for the expenditure of money in the building of levees. The Constitution provides that Congress shall make all needful rules and regulations respecting the property of the United States, and I assert here, without fear of contradiction, that the Mississippi River is the property of the United States. It does not belong to the States through which it runs; it belongs to the whole Union. It is a grand highway for the use and benefit of every citizen of the country. The necessity for the control of this great national highway caused us to make the Louisiana purchase in 1803. That was the main inducing cause which influenced Mr. Jefferson and the Congress of the United States to purchase Louisiana from France. Our States in the great West bordering on this river found it necessary to get their commerce to the sea through this water channel. They could not do it successfully, because the mouth of the river was controlled by a foreign power; hence we were compelled to acquire it.

When the States of Louisiana, Arkansas, and Missouri were admitted into the Union, it was under the proviso that they should not interfere in any manner whatsoever with the free navigation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries; that that great river and its tributaries, and also the rivers in those States which flow into the Gulf, should be forever free for the use and enjoyment of every citizen of the Union, and those States came into the Union with that proviso.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this river is the property of the Government, and it is invested with its control, why should it not build levees and control it? Why should it be allowed to spread over the country, destroying millions of dollars worth of property? If you are the owner of some vicious beast, it is your duty to confine the animal and not let it run wild and destroy everyone with whom it comes in contact. The National Government owns the Mississippi River, and it is its duty to control it and keep it from committing this terrible devastation to so many people in the valley.

The Constitution of the United States also provides that Congress shall establish post-offices and post-roads. In the valley of the Mississippi thousands of post-offices have been established, and a perfect network of post-roads. Now, will any sane man claim that it is not the duty of Congress, after establishing these post-offices and post-roads, to pass all needful rules and regulations for their control and management and for keeping them in a suitable condition for use? We have a number of penal statutes on the subject of interference with the United States mails.

Suppose that the most obscure post-office in the State of Massachusetts were interfered with by a band of robbers, if we can imagine such a thing about that enlightened Commonwealth, and that it was necessary to send General Miles with every soldier of the United States to that obscure locality to protect the mail. Would we not send them instantly? Would we not spend millions of money, if necessary, to protect the mails and prevent them from being interfered with? Certainly we would, in any individual case.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if we would do that in the individual case, why not protect the post-offices and post-roads of this great Mississippi Valley, many of which are 50 to 75 miles from the banks of the river, post-offices and post-roads which have no connection with the river, but which are in its overflowed area and which, when the river breaks out of its banks and floods the country, are entirely inundated, the waters sweeping over the face of the earth from 5 to 15 feet deep, so that there is absolutely no ingress or egress over the ordinary dirt roads and the railroads of the country, and no way to get about except in skiffs. Is it not the duty of Congress, I say, to protect the post-offices and post-roads of that great valley? Unquestionably it is. So that even if it were not necessary to promote the ordinary commerce and navigation of the river, it would be our duty to spend this money for the purpose of protecting the inhabitants of the valley for whom we have established these post-offices and post-roads.

We also find warrant for national aid to levees in the general-welfare clause of the Constitution, for while the overflowed region of this valley does not directly concern the people of the entire Union, it does indirectly. The area subject to floods below Cairo is an important portion of the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Missouri. Hence these six great Commonwealths have a very direct and abiding interest in the protection of their domain, and they form such a large part of our national body politic as to entitle what concerns them to serious national consideration. Moreover, the large population of the flooded region, with their innumerable farms, factories, railroads, and business enterprises of every kind, are so closely connected in social and commercial relations with every other part of the United States that they can not be subjected to the greatest distress and ruin without a resultant injury to the people of very many other sections. Hence it would seem the part of wisdom to protect them in order to promote the general welfare of the Union.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, I would like to ask him this: Have you ever estimated, or do you know of anyone who has ever estimated, and if so, I should like the gentleman to give it, as to the amount of water poured into the Mississippi by reason of the snows that gather up in the Rocky Mountains and out in the far West and melt?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I have never heard of any estimate of that, but the best authorities say that our floods do not come from the Upper Mississippi and Missouri, and that we get only about one-third of our dangerous floods from those rivers. The main damage done to us by floods comes from the waters of the Ohio and its great tributaries, the Tennessee and the Cumberland.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have been informed that when the Tennessee overflows the Mississippi overflows.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. That is very nearly true.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The reason why I asked that question was that the friends of irrigation out in the West say that if the water from the melting snows that fall out West were caught in irrigation reservoirs that it would very much lessen the overflow of the Mississippi River; and they make that a great point in favor of having irrigation in the West.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I believe there is something in their statement; but, as I have already stated, the estimate of the best authorities on that subject is that we only get about one-third of our flood water from that region. Now, if the reservoirs could retain a large portion of that one-third it would lessen the destruction from overflow to that extent.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. A great deal of the flood comes down in the Missouri from the melting snows.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him this question. Do you not think the establishment of the Appalachian forest reservation would be a very great deal of benefit in checking the overflow of the Tennessee and the Ohio rivers?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is rather a Yankee answer. I really do not know about that. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] speaks with so much clearness and knowledge of the subject, I was in hopes he could answer the question I had asked him; and if the gentleman from Alabama can, I should be very glad for him to answer it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. They claim that that would be the effect of establishing the Appalachian forest reserve embracing portions of Georgia, portions of North Carolina, Tennessee and Alabama.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I yielded for a question, but not for a discussion.

Proceeding with my remarks, I wish to read, before finishing this branch of the subject, a brief special message which was sent to Congress on April 17, 1882, by one of the greatest Republicans who ever occupied the Presidential chair of the United States, Mr. Chester A. Arthur. He says:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter dated the 29th ultimo, from the Secretary of War, inclosing copy of a communication from the Mississippi River Commission, in which the Commission recommends that an appropriation may be made of $1,010,000 for "closing existing gaps in levees," in addition to the like sum for which an estimate has already been submitted.

The subject is one of such importance that I deem it proper to recommend early and favorable consideration of the recommendations of the Commission. Having possession of and jurisdiction over the river, Congress, with a view of improving its navigation and protecting the people of the valley from floods, has for years caused surveys of the river to be made, for the purpose of acquiring knowledge of the laws that control it, and of its phenomena. By act approved June 28, 1879, the Mississippi River Commission was created, composed of able engineers. Section 4 of the act provides that "it shall be the duty of said Commission to take into consideration and mature such plan or plans and estimates as will correct, permanently locate, and deepen the channel, and protect the banks of the Mississippi River; improve and give safety and ease to the navigation thereof; prevent destructive floods; promote and facilitate commerce, trade, and the postal service."

The constitutionality of a law making appropriations in aid of these objects can not be questioned. While the report of the Commission submitted and the plans proposed for the river's improvement seem justified as well on scientific principles as by experience and the approval of the people most interested, I desire to leave it to the judgment of Congress to decide upon the best plan for the permanent and complete improvement of the navigation of the river and for the protection of the valley.

The immense losses and widespread suffering of the people dwelling near the river induce me to urge upon Congress the propriety of not only making an appropriation to close the gaps in the levees occasioned by the recent floods, as recommended by the Commission, but that Congress should inaugurate measures for the permanent improvement of the navigation of the river and security of the valley. It may be that such a system of improvement would, as it progressed, require the appropriation of twenty or thirty millions of dollars. Even such an expenditure, extending as it must over several years, can not be regarded as extravagant in view of the immense interest involved. The safe and convenient navigation of the Mississippi is a matter of concern to all sections of the country, but to the Northwest, with its immense harvests, needing cheap transportation to the sea, and to the inhabitants of the river valley, whose lives and property depend upon the proper construction of the safeguards which protect them from the floods, it is of vital importance that a well-matured and comprehensive plan for improvement should be put into operation with as little delay as possible. The cotton product of the region subject to the devastating floods is a source of wealth to the nation and of great importance to keeping the balances of trade in our favor.

That balance, gentlemen, which now amounts to and for several years has amounted to between six and seven hundred million dollars per annum.

It may not be inopportune to mention that this Government has imposed and collected some seventy millions of dollars by a tax on cotton, in the production of which the population of the Lower Mississippi is largely engaged, and it does not seem inequitable to return a portion of this tax to those who contributed it, particularly as such an action will also result in an important gain to the country at large, and especially so to the great and rich States of the Northwest and the Mississippi Valley.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 17, 1882.

I was very much surprised on yesterday, Mr. Chairman, to hear the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who usually attacks the river and harbor bill, make this statement:

I am sorry that the committee have not extended their inquiries with the same minuteness to the Mississippi River and its improvement. They do not tell us just what has been expended upon this great stream, and yet I remember a few years ago, when I last investigated, we had already spent $35,000,000 upon improvement of the navigation (so called) of the Mississippi River. I think it largely exceeds up to this date $100,000,000, and except that the jetties—a wise improvement, markedly beneficial—except for them no man can show that there has been one iota of improvement in the channel that is to be navigated of that great stream.

I remember that a few years ago the President of the United States congratulated this Congress in a message upon the achievements of the Mississippi River Commission. As I now recollect, he stated that the Commission in the improvement of the channel at that time expended $19,000,000, and at Plumb Point, perhaps it was, they had secured an increased depth of 1½ inches, and, on another reach, something slightly in excess of 2 inches. I am glad to know that, with reference to this body, the committee has taken the back track, and they now insist that all the expenditures of this Commission shall first be revised by the Secretary of War and by the Chief of Engineers, a step in the right direction, and a step I hope to be followed by others until the progression shall annihilate this useless adornment to our Blue Book, as they have the Missouri Commission.

I tell you, gentlemen, that while we have been making this expenditure, all the time the commerce on these streams has been diminishing, and is now next to nothing.

Now, I am sure the distinguished gentleman would not willfully misrepresent facts. I can not conceive for a moment that he intended to misrepresent the facts when he made that statement. But he surely has not stated them in regard to the commerce of this river. I have taken the pains to examine the reports of the United States supervising inspectors of steam vessels, and they show that on the Mississippi River below Cairo to-day there are 31 per cent more steam vessels in operation than in 1896, and 30 per cent more than in 1881. Does this look like the commerce of that river has diminished—an increase of steam vessels amounting to 30 per cent in twenty years? Is there a decrease in that?

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is that an increase in number or increase in tonnage?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Increase in tonnage. I would like to add for the information of the gentleman that that does not include the tonnage of the barges—that is the increase in tonnage of the steam vessels. Now, the gentleman from Iowa tells you that the navigation on that river, or the commerce on that river, amounts to nothing. I wish to show to you, by way of illustration, that the city of Memphis has nine steamboat lines or trades—nine lines of steamers—which do a very large and growing river commerce; and what is true of Memphis is relatively true of the other principal cities on the river, Helena, Greenville, Vicksburg, Natchez, Baton Rouge, and New Orleans. There is a great and steadily growing river commerce between Cairo and New Orleans. Commercial statistics of the Mississippi River, prepared by Capt. J. W. Bryant, of New Orleans, a recognized and most reliable authority, show that for the year ending May 31, 1899, there were plying on its waters, between Cairo and New Orleans, 189 steamboats and 1,635 barges, having a net tonnage of 1,471,128 tons, and that the amount of freight carried was 4,708,355 tons, valued at $94,605,762. (See Riparian Lands of the Mississippi River, by Tompkins, page 274.) This is exclusive of the coastwise and foreign commerce of the port of New Orleans. How any fair-minded man can say that the "commerce on this river has been diminishing and is now next to nothing," when the real truth is that it has grown over 30 per cent in the past twenty years, and amounted three years ago to the princely sum of nearly one hundred millions, is an enigma to me.

The gentleman from Iowa also stated, as I have just read to you, that a President of the United States in a message to Congress said that after the river commission had expended $19,000,000 there was an increase at Plumb Point Reach of 1½ inches and an increase of 2 inches in depth at some other reach, the name of which he did not remember.

Mr. Chairman, that question came before the Rivers and Harbors Committee in the recent hearings that we had for the purpose of framing this bill. We had before us General Gillespie, Chief of Engineers, and the late president of the Mississippi River Commission. We asked him about Plumb Point Reach, and what had been the effect of the expenditure of money thereon, and his answer is on record in the committee room if any member wishes to see it. He said that when the improvement began, the channel depth over Plumb Point Reach was only 4 to 5 feet, and as a result of that improvement, it increased between 4 and 5 feet, giving a total depth of about 9 feet, and has been 9 feet and over for years; and that for years and years since that improvement began, the steamers never cast a lead on Plumb Point Reach.

The other reach, which the gentleman did not remember, is that known as Lake Providence. I happen to live in the town of Lake Providence, and know something about that reach. I know that when I became a resident of the town in the fall of 1882 there was practically no low-water navigation in the river on that reach. I know that often during the low-water season I have seen as many as two or three of the magnificent Anchor Line and other large boats stuck on a sand bar in Lake Providence Reach. Shortly after that the work of the Mississippi River Commission began, and for the past twelve or fifteen years, I have never seen a steamboat aground in the channel of that reach. General Gillespie also testified in regard to this reach that the navigation had been improved until it is now at least 9 feet.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow an interruption at this point?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to know if there are any steamers such as compose the great Anchor Line now on the Mississippi River?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Yes, sir. There are three of the original Anchor Line boats still on the river—the Hill City, the largest of all of them; the City of St. Louis, the next largest, and another whose name has been changed to Chalmette. In the Memphis trade are the Robert E. Lee, the James Lee, the Kate Adams, and the Dewey, all magnificent side-wheel steamers that cost about $90,000 each. They are not quite as large as the steamers of the Anchor Line, but as fine boats, and do a large freight, passenger, and mail business.

And I wish to say to the gentleman that the Ohio River boats, I am reliably informed, are larger, faster, finer, and more numerous to-day than ever in the history of the river, and many of those Ohio River boats also ply on the Mississippi River.

Replying further in regard to the navigation of the river below Cairo, I quote as follows from the report of the Mississippi River Commission, made through the Chief of Engineers (see Supplement to Engineer's Report for 1901, p. 10), which reads:

> It may be stated that on no bar between Cairo and the Head of the Passes was there at any time during the low-water season of 1900 a channel depth of less than 10½ feet.

This is the latest official report on the river, and it shows a wonderful improvement since the Commission began operations about twenty years ago, when there were many shoal places having less than 5 feet and impassable for steamboats.

Just a word, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the common fallacy that levees cause the bed of a sediment-bearing river to rise and finally become as high as the level of the adjacent country. Some writers state that this is a fact in regard to the Yellow River, of China, but the latest and best authority on that subject, Gen. James H. Wilson, in his admirable work on China—Travels in the Middle Kingdom—denies emphatically that the bed of that river has risen as high as the adjacent land. Accurate statistics are attainable as to the Rhine and the Po, which have been leveed for a long time. In his testimony before the Senate Commerce Committee, May 12, 1890, Gen. Cyrus B. Comstock, then president of the Mississippi River Commission, and a most accomplished Army engineer, made an elaborate statement on this subject as to the Po, the Rhine, and the Mississippi. In summarizing his remarks he said:

> From an examination of the Po and the Rhine it may be concluded that if their beds rise in the leveed portions, which is not entirely certain from the data, it is at so slow a rate as not to be an important factor in the maintenance of a levee system. On the Mississippi the records, while not extending over a period long enough to give final results, do not, so far as they go, indicate that the bed has risen.

Since 1890 the river gauges, which are most carefully made and preserved every year, fully bear out the conclusions of General Comstock and show that the bed of the river is not rising. They rather indicate a material scouring out of the channel in some places.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I can finish in a few moments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that his colleague be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. SMALL. I have no objection if it will not interfere with other gentlemen who have been accorded time to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call attention to the fact that the House has ordered that general debate on this bill shall close at 3 o'clock. Is there objection?

A MEMBER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I ask that the gentleman be allowed ten minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that his colleague on the committee be granted ten minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I will detain the committee but a few minutes longer. I wish to suggest in regard to the overflow region of the Mississippi Valley one point. I think it is the most magnificent roadbed for railroads in the United States, and some of us here who are not interested in rivers seem to be interested in railroads. I remember well in the mighty flood of 1897, the greatest on record, that the Illinois Central Railroad, which runs from Chicago to New Orleans, and which passes for many miles through the Yazoo delta in the overflow region of the Mississippi Valley, was absolutely shut off and prevented from doing any business—at least that portion of its line was—and I have been informed it suffered a loss at that time of fully $500,000.

Mr. Chairman, I have stated that this valley is a magnificient bed for railroads. I am assured by the railroad people that the cost of constructing a railroad over the perfectly level plains of this great valley is not more than one-third as much as it is over the places where railroads are ordinarily constructed—the hills and valleys—up hill and down dale of most of the States. I am also assured by practical railroad people that one engine and crew will carry through the valley 60 cars, and that the same engine and crew can haul only from 18 to 20 cars over the uneven country of other sections. Now, what does that mean? If a railroad can be constructed in this valley for one-third of the cost in other places, and operated for one-third of the cost, it means that the freights of the great West and Northwest can be carried to the seaport of New Orleans much cheaper than they can possibly be carried elsewhere, and that the people of the whole Union are interested in preserving the valley from floods.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, allow me to say that I think Congress pursued a wise and just policy when many years ago it began the improvement of this great river. There is certainly no river so national in character and no project more important and far-reaching than the improvement of such a river. I sincerely hope that the project will never be abandoned until that whole valley has been protected, and until those courageous people who have done so much for themselves—who have spent $2.25 for every dollar spent by the General Government—shall have been placed in a position of perfect safety, in such a position that immigration will flow there from all parts of the world, and that we shall speedily have a population of from 15,000,000 to 16,000,000 of thriving, prosperous citizens of these great United States. [Applause.]

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise to-day in support of this bill now pending before this committee. For the past one hundred years the American people have been trying to work out the great problem of transportation. During the past seventy years our people have built, equipped, and are now operating 193,000 miles of railroad—enough in length to reach round the globe nearly eight times; and they have invested in that great system of transportation $11,000,000,000 or one-eighth of the entire property value of the United States.

In 1840—ten years after this system of railroad building commenced—the average rate of carrying a ton of freight 1 mile upon the roads then in operation was 7½ cents. It now appears that last year upon our great railroad system the average cost of hauling a ton of freight 1 mile was three-fourths of 1 cent. In other words, since 1840 the freight rates in this country have gone down from 7½ cents a mile per ton to three-fourths of 1 cent, the cost at present being one-tenth of the cost sixty years ago. Last year these great lines of railroad transportation conveyed 600,000,000 passengers and 1,100,000,000 tons of freight.

Now, while our people have been building up this gigantic system of land transportation we have been building up at the same time a system of merchant marine upon the Great Lakes and rivers of our country. When I state to you, Mr. Chairman, that during the last year there passed through the Detroit River four times as many vessels as passed through the Suez Canal and that they carried a freight three times as great as was carried by the nations of the world through the Suez Canal, you get some idea of the magnitude of our inland commerce and some idea of the greatness of the American people.

The bill before the committee seeks nothing more nor less than to facilitate transportation and at the same time to cheapen freight rates. The freight rates as now charged are so low as to permit the farmer of Illinois and Iowa and Kansas to compete with the farmer of New England. I find that the cost last year of taking a bushel of wheat from the city of Chicago and landing it upon the docks in New York was 5¾ cents per bushel; that a ton of freight when taken by waterway from Chicago to New York cost $1.92; that when it was taken by rail it cost $4.87. Now, when rates of that kind exist in this country, it is possible for the farmer of Kansas to compete with the farmer of New England.

And this system of transportation is the very thing which to-day is making the inland States great. It is for that reason that those States that do not receive what is called direct benefit ought not to object to the passage of this bill. For many years past the people of the State of Massachusetts, the State which I have the honor to represent in part, have gone into the West, have built railroads, have spent millions of money for the development of these great lines of transportation, and I maintain that in what we of Massachusetts have done for the building up of the railroads in the West, for the building of steamers to ply upon the lakes from Duluth to Buffalo, we have benefited those people quite as much as they have benefited us by giving us an opportunity for investment.

More than that, Mr. Chairman, the country to-day has become so great that we no longer look at these matters with any local jealousy. No longer do we say that an improvement to the harbor of Galveston is not a direct benefit even to the ports and the cities of New England, for when you undertake to develop transportation which lessens freight rates, you benefit every class of the people. You can not improve the harbor of the city of Boston unless you benefit the farmer in the West, because by improving the harbor of the city of Boston you increase the freight facilities, you cheapen the rates, you make it possible for the farmer of the West to get his products to the seaboard, and from the seaboard into the foreign markets at a cheaper rate, and therefore it is of direct benefit to him.

This country, Mr. Chairman, has become to-day so united, so free from sectionalism, so much interested in the development of the nation, that we no longer hesitate when some great question of national improvement comes up. We shall have before us in a short time a question in which those who represent the far distant Western States are greatly interested. I refer to the question of irrigation. Now, for my part, I believe in a system of irrigation; I believe that the people of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts are broad enough to say that it is a benefit to New England, that that great section of the country in the West should be developed, even though it be developed at some expense to the National Government.

So I hope that in voting for this bill those who represent those inland States in the West will not forget that whatever they do to improve the rivers and harbors of this country they do to improve their own condition in the West, and that with better facilities for transportation will come cheaper rates; with cheaper rates will come greater production, that with the building up of our merchant marine will come greater facilities for transporting the products of the American people, and will enable our people to consider our interdependence upon each other regarding all questions of legislation, and cultivate that broadmindedness by which we in the East will not forget those in the West, and those who represent the Western States will not forget those States that are upon the seaboard.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that this bill may go through without any decided opposition. I believe that this Congress has before it great duties to perform. We have already passed the bill which was advocated so strongly here by the very distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to build an isthmian canal. We shall be called upon later to take up the question of irrigation. We shall be called upon later to take up the question of ship subsidy. What I ask, Mr. Chairman, is that we shall consider all these propositions, including the proposition that is now before us, with that broad mindedness which is characteristic of the American people and which it is the duty of every Representative to show in the deliberations and the actions of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. LESTER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SNOOK] and fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to discuss any of the provisions of the bill which is now pending before the House, but I desire for a moment or two to call the attention of the House to a bill which was considered by the Senate for the last two weeks and which was adopted by it last Monday. I refer to the bill commonly known as the "ship-subsidy bill," the title of which claims that it is "to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and the common defense; to promote commerce and to encourage the deep-sea fisheries."

One of the objects of this bill, it is claimed, is to promote foreign commerce, and at this time, just before the bill is brought before the House of Representatives, I desire to call the attention of this House to the position of the largest class of exporters in the United States upon this question. In referring to the summary of imports and exports for the year ending December, 1901, I find that the total value of domestic exports for that year amounted to $1,438,038,990. Of that sum agricultural products amounted to $940,246,488, or 65.38 per cent of all the exports of this country for the year 1901. I call attention to the following table which gives the amount of domestic exports in detail, and which emphasizes the interest that the farmers of this country have in the export trade:

For several years the farmers have been considering the different measures about to come before Congress which affect their interests, and along with the other measures which have been considered by them is this measure which its advocates claim is needed for the purpose of expanding our foreign commerce. These people, who represent 65 per cent of the total exports of the United States, on the 28th day of September, 1901, adopted the following resolutions, which I desire to read as part of my remarks with reference to this bill and the principles on which it is based:

The principle involved in the ship-subsidy bill before the last Congress has the unanimous opposition of the farmers of the country as expressed by the National Grange and by the master of every State grange in the land. We are in favor of the development of the American merchant marine and of manufacturing, as we are in favor of the development of American agriculture, but are no more in favor of contributing to a few wealthy shipbuilders than we are of contributing to farmers or manufacturers. We have reasons founded on sound principles of statesmanship to oppose a scheme that contributes to the profits of the few at the expense of the many without adequate return. The toiling farmers of the land have developed American agriculture until its products constitute a majority of the exports of the country without Government aid, and we understand that American steamships are already yielding their owners profits in transporting these and other products to all parts of the world without Government subsidies. The farmers of the country ask for no special favors in legislation and oppose in the most vigorous manner such special favors to shipbuilders and owners as are embodied in what is familiarly known as the ship-subsidy bill.

These resolutions clearly state the opinion of that class of individuals who are most largely interested in the subject of foreign commerce, and I take great pleasure in calling the attention of the House to these resolutions, which so clearly state the objections of the farmers of this country to this bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to discuss the pending bill, but I propose instead to discuss our tariff system, a question that has ever been foremost with the American people since the foundation of this Government, and which will continue to be one of the important questions before this people, for the reason that the two great political parties differ very widely in their ideas of the tariff. The theory of the Republican party has been a tariff for protection rather than for revenue, while the Democratic party has advocated a system more for the purpose of revenue than for protection. It is true that the tariff question has at times become dormant, but only to rise again and become one of the foremost questions before the country. We have evidence that this question is now beginning to agitate the people. We hear murmurings, we feel it, we see signs and evidences of it every day. The repeal of the war-tax bill by this House, when the majority denied any amendments, indicated that the question was again becoming important.

The bill now before the Ways and Means Committee, relative to reciprocity with Cuba, also indicates that the question is a live one. The interest that the beet-sugar people of this country are taking in that bill indicates that it is a coming question. But the greatest evidence that it is a live question, and one which is sure to receive the attention of the people, is the fact that a prominent Republican member of the Ways and Means Committee introduced a bill for the repeal of certain tariff taxes, and had the following of some of his party in that committee. Therefore, if this Congress does not pass some legislation looking to the revision of the tariff, it will be for the reason that the Republican majority denies the right of this House to legislate on that subject. It seems to me that the majority of this House are in favor of certain tariff revision, but they are afraid to permit the tariff issues to be presented to the House for consideration; therefore, we have an example of this Congress being afraid of itself. If this Congress is afraid to take any action upon an important question that demands its attention, what will the people of the country say and do and how will they place any further confidence in the dominant political makeup of this Congress?

We, in this country, are to-day occupying the high and enviable position that England occupied seventy years ago when she virtually threw down her tariff walls and opened her trade to all the world. The reason England did that was because she was a great nation, the most powerful nation financially and otherwise that then existed. To-day the United States is undoubtedly the greatest commercial nation in the world. Last year we exported more goods than any other nation in the world, exceeding England in our exports by $75,000,000 for the year 1901. Our exports for that year were $1,487,000,000, while our imports were only $823,000,000, making a difference in trade in favor of this country of $664,000,000, an amount nearly equal to two-thirds of the total bonded indebtedness of the United States.

I do not say that we should do as England did and adopt free trade, but I do say that we should take liberal action on our tariff question. Our tariff needs a general revision. Many items that are now upon the dutiable list could be put on the free list. A further reason for being able to take an active stand in the revision of our tariff is because of our great financial prosperity. We have more gold in the Treasury vaults than any other nation in the world. We now have $546,000,000 of gold in the vaults of the Treasury—far more than any other nation in the world. We have the smallest bonded indebtedness of any nation in the world. It is less than $1,000,000,000, while that of England is five or six times greater, and that of France probably ten or twelve times greater than that. We have in active money in our Treasury to-day $329,000,000, far more than any other country has.

To show that a high tariff is not longer necessary, we exported in 1901 $93,000,000 worth of manufactured merchandise in excess over the year before, while our imports of manufactured merchandise fell off $29,000,000 in 1901, showing that we are now seeking the markets of the world instead of it being necessary to have a tariff wall to protect us against the trade of other countries.

Our tariff system has brought animosity or prejudice on the part of other countries. Many of them have become hostile to us and have legislated specially against the United States. Russia, France, and Austria have had special tariff legislation in retaliation against our present system, and to-day the law-making power of Germany is in session discussing a bill in retaliation, or rather hostile to American exports.

The Western farmers of this country have certainly suffered greatly by reason of our tariff system. Russia has placed hostile laws against our grain and meat products and against the cotton growers of the South by putting an almost prohibitive tariff upon the raw cotton of this country. Yesterday, when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] was questioned very closely about protection, as to what he would do in case he should be asked to name a committee on ways and means composed of people who had no protected interests in their districts, he said he did not believe there was a district in this country that was not benefited by a protective tariff.

When he said that I thought of the Western farmer, who is the very bone and sinew of that great section of our country. He not only grows all the food products consumed at home, but he is dependent upon markets across the ocean for the sale of his surplus products. He produces nothing in consequence of which protection can give him any benefit, for instead of buying imported food products he is dependent on the trade of the world for a disposition of his surplus products; therefore, while he gets no protection, or rather it is worthless to him, on his products, at the same time he must pay tribute to the protective tariff system on nearly everything he consumes. What a political advantage that gives to my friends, the Democrats of the Western States, and I thought why do they not go out into that country and talk tariff to these people, the people who have been paying protection prices all their lives while they have never got any benefit from it.

It seems like a farce to read some of the Dingley tariff items for the supposed benefit of the farmers of the United States. How these Western people have been and are now being hoodwinked I can not understand. Take, for instance, the item of hogs. The tariff on them is $1.50 a head; on the item of wheat it is 25 cents per bushel, on corn meal 20 cents per bushel, on oats 15 cents a bushel, when, as a matter of fact, none of these commodities are ever brought to this country; but, on the contrary, we are the great exporters of them to all the world. Why, this country produces one-fifth of the wheat consumed by the world. We produce two-thirds of the cotton consumed by the world. Why, to-day in the war between Great Britain and the South African Republics we are largely furnishing the British and Boer armies with their bread.

During the siege of Pekin, when the allied armies were in China, we were furnishing largely the foods to support those armies, and at the same time we supplied the cotton goods which the people in China were wearing. We take the wrong view of our tariff system. It seems to be the idea to have all countries customers of ours, yet by an arbitrary tax against other nations deny ourselves the privilege of becoming customers of any other country. In other words, the idea is to have all the balance of the world bankrupt but ourselves. That is not the correct spirit of tariff arrangement that should exist between friendly countries.

Every country should be ambitious for an advantage in trade. We should be rivals, but the contest should be on the broad principle of selling and buying. We must seek trade from all countries, but the time will never come, and should not, when we will not need from various countries of the world goods that we do not produce. More especially should a great country like ours be most liberal. We enjoy a natural blessing that but few countries are favored with. Not only do we produce a great overflow of the necessities of life, which must seek an outlet in foreign markets, but we have reached a high position in manufacturing, and we must look to foreign consumption for a disposition of this surplus. Therefore the high commercial position we enjoy should cause us not to forget that we are interested in the welfare of all countries with which we have dealings of a business nature.

We are a nation seeking trade not only among ourselves, but we invite trade from every land; trade that is reliable and healthy. We want dealings with countries that are prosperous and successful. We can not safely desire any other.

The commerce and trade between two countries is similar to that between individuals.

If a man has something to sell, he will want to get a reliable customer. Take, for instance, the large dry goods firm of the Claflin Company, New York, or of Alfred Fields & Co., of Chicago. Do these large American houses send their drummers out to seek the trade of bankrupt or unfriendly customers? They would send them to the very finest customers, those who would be most friendly to their interests and most reliable in their credits. It is the same with our trade with foreign countries.

I was astonished, Mr. Chairman, when studying this question, to find that of the excess of exports over imports in favor of us of $664,000,000, $597,000,000 came from two friendly nations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Georgia may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, I found that the balance of trade in favor of us with foreign countries out of $664,000,000, $597,000,000 of that balance came from Germany and England, the two most friendly nations, commercially, to ourselves. By retaliation the trade of France has become about a balance with ours. Russia has offending tariff laws against us, and her trade is greatly reduced. Therefore, it is important that we should throw down largely our tariff walls and invite the trade of all lands. I beg to submit a table of our exports and imports with five of the strong countries of the world for 1901, the first two most cordial and friendly in their commercial or tariff legislation, while the three last have passed hostile legislation to offset our tariff laws as against theirs:

	Exports.	Imports.	Excess in favor of us.	Excess against us.
England or United Kingdom[a]	$631,000,000	$143,000,000	$488,000,000
Germany[a]	191,000,000	100,000,000	91,000,000
France	78,000,000	75,000,000	3,000,000
Austria-Hungary	7,000,000	10,000,000		$3,000,000
Russia (European and Asiatic)	9,000,000	10,000,000		1,000,000

[a] Total trade balance from these two commercially friendly countries in our favor, $679,000,000.

Thus making the trade of these commercially unfriendly nations against us $1,000,000.

The above table but illustrates the wonderful gain and advantages that the United States can have by always having most liberal tax relations with the various countries of the world.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say something about reciprocity, but I will not have time to do that. I do say, however, that I believe that reciprocity is a failure. I believe that a great Government like this should have but one system, one kind of tariff for all countries, and the only time and the only occasion when we should change that would be when some country became hostile to us in their legislation and passed specially unfriendly legislation to us. Then, in place of reciprocity I would substitute retaliation, and retaliate by increasing the tariff against that offending country. But a great nation like ours should deal justly with all alike. I do not believe we should undertake to make a private arrangement here with one country and a private arrangement with another country.

We should not attempt to treat England and Germany, whose purchases are $597,000,000 in excess of our purchases from them, on worse terms than we would some other country whose trade was far smaller. I think that would be unfair and unjust. I think we should deal honorably and fairly with all and have one rate of tariff. It would be very much like I understand the principle to be in some of the large wholesale and retail houses of this country which have but one price; so that if you were to send an innocent child into that store he could buy his goods just as cheaply as the most intelligent adult. The same system should prevail in the United States. We have become a great country, and we should have broad and liberal tariff laws.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would not be misunderstood relative to our position with Cuba. We should give that country some most liberal concessions, not, however, for the purpose of securing her trade, but on account solely of our near, unusual, and peculiar relation to her. Cuba is a ward of ours, and I advocate concessions to her for her sake alone.

We are sending our goods into the markets of the world, we are sending them everywhere, and we want the trade of all the world. Consequently we should not have any restriction. We are an independent people largely because we are great producers of the food supplies and necessities of life, while we have, on the other hand, become a great manufacturing people, and we are now sending our manufactured goods to all parts of the world. We have become the lenders of money to many nations of the world. We no longer confine our loans to this country, but are making loans to many other countries.

Mr. Chairman, as stated in the beginning of my speech, the country is beginning to sound the call for some kind of tariff legislation, and it is with much gratification that I submit an editorial, dated March 17, from one of the foremost papers of the South, the Atlanta Constitution, urging tariff revision:

THE HOPE OF TARIFF REVISION.

The only hope that the spoliated consumers of this country have for a revision of the Dingley tariff lies in the committal of the Government to the Democratic party.

The only hope the people have that government of the trusts, by the trusts, and for the trusts may perish from the Republic lies in the same measure of relief.

One of the most prominent facts that has been developed by the deliverances in both Houses of the present Congress and by the leaders of both parties is that the people are restless because of the plain robberies committed from them by the tariff as it now stands, and that they mean to have justice out of the situation at any cost.

Speaker HENDERSON says "that there could be, wisely, revision on certain parts of the tariff laws, and that reductions can be wisely made in some matters, no sane man will attempt to deny." Why, then, does he and his Committee on Rules refuse to allow a willing majority in the House—made up of revision Republicans and Democrats—prepare and propose those wise reductions? He answers that "the danger is, that in trying to reach a few remedies we will involve the country in serious difficulties;" or, in other and truer words, the people may take too much, and take it from the plethoric, plutocratic trusts who supply the sinews of war for the Republican party.

Therefore the question resolves itself into simple terms and propositions. The trusts live and move and have their being in the circumference of the Dingley Act. By it they are enabled to monopolize production and fix prices, because they have no fear of competition. They demand that their special privileges to loot the pockets of American consumers shall not be withdrawn by any general revision and lowering of tariff rates. The Republican leaders, knowing that the fat with which to grease their campaign wheels comes from the profits of the trusts, dare not let down the bars and turn the people in upon that standing corn of the joint conspirators—the trusts and the party bosses.

How long will the people stand for that sort of highway robbery? How much longer will the farmers of America consent to pay 40 per cent more for trust-made plows than are paid by the Canadians and Cubans after freight and foreign tariff duties are paid on them? A hundred other articles of daily home consumption present the same conundrum. It is for the people to answer at the polls whether they prefer Republicanism and robbery or Democracy and a just revision of the tariff that will harm no honest American industry and spoliate no honest American citizen or home.

Here we have the pivotal and paramount issue, on which the Democratic party should make its appeal to American voters in every Congressional district between this day and the ides of the coming November.

Again I quote from two editorials in the Washington Post, a strong protective-tariff journal, under dates of February 18 and March 1, stating the time had come for tariff legislation, and strongly urging and advising it:

TARIFF REVISION.

Many times before and since the assembling of the Fifty-seventh Congress the Post has admonished the Republican members of that body of the danger of a refusal to revise the tariff. The necessity for revision has resulted more from the unexpectedly great success of the Dingley tariff than from mistakes in its schedules. The one serious mistake in that act was its reciprocity feature and the imposition of some duties bearing a margin that was intended for reduction by reciprocity treaties. Mr. Dingley and his associates were pledged to that irregular and condemned plan of tariff legislation by the action of Republican national conventions. They did not foresee the change in popular feeling and the views of statesmen by which Mr. Blaine's scheme of Executive tariff tinkering has been practically ruled out.

The Post advocates that freedom of trade from the protection standpoint. The only consistent protectionists are those who believe in abolishing all tariff schedules that are not needed either for protection or revenue, and whose only object is to shelter monopolistic extortion. Whenever any industry has reached the point at which it is able to care for itself it has vindicated the wisdom and beneficence of protection, and the transfer of its product to the free list is but carrying to its logical result the only argument on which protection was built up or has a right to live.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee for its attention. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I listened this afternoon with much interest to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and on yesterday to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LAWRENCE], both of whom are members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, who spoke in commendation of the provisions of this bill. The gentleman from Louisiana had the unctuous consolation of knowing that the Mississippi River, in which he was peculiarly interested, had received $12,000,000 out of the total appropriations contained in this bill, being one-fifth of the entire sum carried. The gentleman from Massachusetts had ample justification in expressing his pleasure in the fact that the harbors and waterways of that great State had been conserved by appropriations to the amount of $4,652,895, nearly one-twelfth of the amount carried in the bill. I do not think I have made any error in the addition of the several items.

As one of the Representatives from the State of North Carolina, I have not the same incentive to favor this bill, and I must enter my dissent to its provisions so far as my State is concerned.

The district which I have the honor to represent extends from the Virginia line southward along the Atlantic coast for a distance of 210 miles, including Beaufort Inlet. It has within its limits 2,885 square miles of inland waterways. It has 20 rivers, both large and small. It possesses a water-borne commerce which is not only very considerable at the present time, but promises great possibilities for the future. There are within its limits prosperous and progressive towns tributary to these waterways, peopled with intelligent citizens who are keeping pace with the onward march of industrial progress. Elizabeth City, easily the queen city of the northeastern counties, located upon the beautiful Pasquotank, is but a fair illustration of its commercial progress. The old and historic town of Edenton, which overlooks the broad and magnificent bay of the same name, is forging ahead and adding year by year to her tonnage in shipping and in valuation of her water-borne commerce.

The towns of Plymouth and Williamston, situated upon the Roanoke, a bold stream, which was the scene of many historic naval encounters in our late civil war, afford no ordinary examples of thrift and prosperity. The town of Greenville, at head of easy navigation on the Tar River, has made such rapid progress during recent years as to surprise even the stalwart business men who have wrought its commercial development. The town of Washington, situated upon the beautiful Pamlico River, needs no commendation from those who have had the opportunity to visit its hospitable people or of studying its commercial growth. Year by year its shipping has increased in tonnage, and the value of its products has grown in proportion. The commercial statistics of that port show a tonnage for 1900 of 613,895 tons, being an increase over the previous year of 106,000 tons. Time does not permit recalling other progressive towns, like Hertford, Murfreesboro, Winton, Roper, Columbia, Belhaven, Beaufort, and Morehead City. Its agricultural lands are fertile and responsive, and the surplus products of the farms vastly increase the wealth of that section of North Carolina as they are carried out to the industrial world. And yet, Mr. Chairman, the waterways in that district and the commercial interests which are involved receive the munificent sum of $77,900 in this bill.

But how fares the entire State? North Carolina on its eastern border extends along the Atlantic coast for a distance of more than 300 miles. To say nothing of the smaller streams, there are seven large and bold rivers flowing through the State into the inland sounds and then into the ocean. These are the Pasquotank, Perquimans, Chowan, Roanoke, Pamlico, Neuse, and the Cape Fear. There are numerous inland sounds and bays, the principal of which are the Pamlico and the Albemarle Sound, the latter being the largest body of fresh water on the Atlantic coast. The lower Cape Fear River below Wilmington furnishes one of the finest channels and ports on the Atlantic coast, if not the very finest. It is, therefore, pertinent to inquire to what extent the harbors and waterways of my State receive recognition and appropriations in this bill. Gentlemen will be surprised to learn that the honorable Committee on Rivers and Harbors after more than two months' incubation and zealous study, with no other professed desire than to serve the interests of the whole country and to mete exact and even justice, have in their wisdom and magnanimity appropriated the sum of $267,400 for the entire State. Of this sum $150,000, or more than one-half, is appropriated to the Cape Fear River below Wilmington, and even that amount is insufficient for the needs of that magnificent port and channel to the extent of $100,000.

There are three districts in my State which are directly interested in this bill—the Sixth district, represented by my colleague, Mr. BELLAMY, and the Third district, represented by my colleague, Mr. THOMAS, and my own district, the First. The waterways of the district of my colleague, Mr. BELLAMY, receive $160,000, and of my colleague, Mr. THOMAS, $29,500, and the First district the sum of $77,900. In the face of these conditions, Mr. Chairman, it is said we should be grateful for what we have received and not antagonize this bill, because forsooth we may displease some gentlemen, and in any event will not be able to defeat the bill. Modesty and silence under injustice are not always virtues to be commended.

We, the Representatives from that good State, desire to inquire with all deference why it is that the commercial interests of our State have been neglected in the provisions of this bill. Is it because, as my colleague [Mr. BELLAMY] intimated two days ago in this House, the State is not represented by membership on that committee? I will not make any invidious comparisons between States and districts which are represented and those not represented on that distinguished committee. It is proper to say that the gentlemen composing that committee, including the distinguished chairman, repudiate the intimation that membership carries with it preemptions upon appropriations for the commercial interests of their respective districts and States. On yesterday the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who opposed this bill, maintained that the committee should be composed of members whose districts were not peculiarly and directly interested in harbors and waterways, upon the theory that they would study the commercial needs of the country from a national and just standpoint, and thus free the committee from the suspicion of logrolling for each others' interest, as has been suggested from various quarters.

It is apparent that North Carolina had no representative upon the committee, and according to the theory of the gentleman from Iowa we should have received more even justice.

Certainly it could not have been the intention of the committee to willfully discriminate against the State. I would not without the clearest proof make such a charge against any committee of this body. If they are not acquainted with the relative importance which the State bears in her relation to the Union, I would point them to her history in the past, from which they would learn that in every critical period of the Republic she has stood square to a conscientious performance of her duty and contributed more than her share to its perpetuation and progress. If it is along material lines that they desire evidence, I would point them to that silent but eloquent compilation of figures shown in the Twelfth Census, which indicates a healthy and rapid growth in her commercial and manufacturing interests during the last decennial period, and which would convince any gentleman desirous of ascertaining the facts that she was entitled to greater consideration than she has received.

Neither would it be pleasing to charge that the committee had distributed these appropriations, or as they prefer to designate them, their recognition of the commercial interests of the country, by sectional lines or as the result of sectional prejudice. We have been told that we are approaching an era of domestic tranquillity, of peace, of concord, of mutual recognition of the merits, the advantages, the growth, and the possibilities of every section of this great Union, and there have been many evidences of amity and of justice. Certainly this committee would not sound a discordant note and revive among the people of any section the sentiment of sectional discord. I can only attribute the action of the committee to the fact—and I make the charge with all deference—that the membership of the committee are not acquainted with the commercial growth of the State and with the needs and interests of her existing commerce and with the possibilities of her waterways.

Perhaps the action of the committee may be explained in the speech of the distinguished chairman on the floor of the House on last Monday in his most remarkable statement, that of the $60,000,000 appropriated in this bill $50,000,000 were appropriated, to quote his words, "for great projects, for great ports, and great channels," leaving $10,000,000 to be distributed throughout the country among its small harbors and waterways. Therefore, five-sixths of the total appropriations have been concentrated upon a few great harbors and one-sixth thereof doled out among a few of the great number of smaller projects. They have been inadvertent to the fact that the smaller ports and waterways are relatively of as great importance to their respective sections and that they make up the great volume and aggregation of our waterborne commerce and commercial interests.

I hope the committee have not permanently fallen into the evil lines which are charged against many of the policies which actuate the administration of the Republican party, that of concentrating wealth and favor and recognition among the few and neglecting the many interests which represent and sustain our commercial progress. After all, the great ports are only clearing houses of the lesser ports and waterways, and if the latter languish from neglect the former will dwindle into insignificant proportions.

Among the several projects in North Carolina which are entitled to favorable consideration I desire to call particular attention to one which has been omitted by the committee. I introduced early in the session a bill authorizing the appointment of a board of engineers to consider the subject of an inland waterway from Norfolk, in the State of Virginia, to Beaufort Inlet, in the State of North Carolina.

This is not only important to the commercial interests of our State and not only affects the commerce of the great port of Norfolk to the north of us and of the Chesapeake Bay, but the other ports and States further north, as well as the Atlantic ports south of Beaufort Inlet. There appears to be a woeful amount of ignorance concerning the necessity of this waterway. Its opponents have asked as to its necessity. They point to the map with great satisfaction and call attention to its inland sounds and its stretch of coast upon the Atlantic and inquire why does not the coastwise shipping seek an outlet to the ocean and engage in coastwise traffic. I beg to contribute a few pertinent facts within the limited time at my disposal which may serve to inform the country. A most interesting contribution upon this subject was made by Mr. S. T. Abert, United States civil engineer, and is contained in Senate Executive Document No. 35, Forty-fourth Congress, first session. I quote one paragraph therefrom:

> The coast of North Carolina is over 300 miles in extent. For the greater part of this distance barrier reefs, or a cordon of long, low, narrow sand-hills, varying from one-fourth of a mile to nearly 4 miles in width, resist the billows of the Atlantic and appear for centuries to have maintained the same position in which we now find them.

This narrow cordon of sand reefs or the "Banks," as they are sometimes termed, separate the Atlantic Ocean from the inland sounds of the State. The State is unfortunate in the character of its inlets to the ocean. From the southern extremity of Pamlico Sound, extending northwardly to Chesapeake Bay, there is to-day practically only one navigable inlet to the ocean, which is known as Ocracoke Inlet. While this affords a depth of from 10 to 14 feet, yet its approach from Pamlico Sound is restricted by a "swash" or sand bar with only a depth of between 7 and 8 feet, and, as the chairman [Mr. BURTON] has very frequently stated, the minimum depth controls navigation.

Beaufort Inlet and the inlet leading from Cape Fear River to the ocean, both of which are south of Pamlico Sound, are to-day practically inaccessible to shipping from points farther north by reason of the shallow depth of Core Sound and of the incomplete condition of the Club Foot and Harlowe Creek Canal. But not only is navigation within this territory confined to Ocracoke Inlet with its limited depth as an outlet to the ocean, but the coast of North Carolina presents almost insuperable obstacles to our coastwise commerce.

I need only refer to Cape Hatteras and the outer Diamond Shoal in confirmation of this statement. Cape Hatteras has for centuries been the terror of the mariner, and it has been aptly termed "the graveyard of the Atlantic." Hundreds, yes thousands, of proud ships have ended their last voyage amid its tempestuous seas and foundered on its cruel sands and rocks. Thousands of lives of brave seamen have been sacrificed in the vortex of its waves. Millions of dollars of valuable property have paid tribute to its insatiate greed.

Its history is eloquent of death, disaster, and suffering, and the engineering skill of the modern world has been unable to resist its ruthless career or afford protection to the travelers upon the seas. But this is not all. Cape Lookout, which lies to the south of Cape Hatteras between Ocracoke and Beaufort inlets, has been scarcely less prolific of disaster and death. In this busy world we soon forget isolated instances of misfortune or catastrophe. It is only when they are aggregated that we can appreciate their enormity. I hold in my hand a compilation of marine disasters upon the coast of North Carolina from Gull Shoal, north of Cape Hatteras, south to and including Cape Lookout and Shoals, for a period of eleven years from July 1, 1890, to June 30, 1901. This summary was at my request prepared under the direction of General Superintendent S. I. Kimball, of the Life-Saving Service.

I wish time permitted some eulogy of this veteran public servant, who has held his post of duty so long as leader of the humane work of saving life and property and of minimizing the terrors of the seas. I will print this statement as an appendix to my remarks, and shall now only take the time to repeat its recapitulation. It shows during this period that the number of marine disasters on the North Carolina coast have been 80; the number of vessels totally lost, 41; the number of lives lost, 42; property involved, $5,562,405, and property totally lost, $2,294,900. I call your attention to the pertinent fact that the great bulk of these disasters occurred not to vessels engaged in our foreign commerce, but more than 90 per cent were vessels and steamers engaged in our coastwise trade between our Southern and Northern ports.

May I call attention to another physical condition along our coast? A stretch of land separates the Chesapeake Bay on the north from the inland sounds of North Carolina, which has been pierced by two canals owned by private corporations, one known as the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal and the other known as the Dismal Swamp Canal, and which afford an average depth of about 8 feet. These answer a very useful purpose, and yet, for the reasons above given, they only serve the local commerce of eastern North Carolina north of and including Pamlico Sound and its tributaries. So that it appears, Mr. Chairman, that this portion of eastern North Carolina, comprising nearly 200 miles of its seaboard, is practically, at the present time, cut off from an outlet to the ocean and its water-borne commerce is restricted on the north via Chesapeake Bay to vessels and steamers having an average draft of 8 feet or less. Who, then, will say, in view of the physical conditions which confront our coast, that this inland waterway is not a necessity?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMALL. I ask unanimous consent to continue longer.

Mr. BURTON. I give notice that this is the last time I can consent to any extension of time, because there are others who wish to speak and the general debate is to close at 3 o'clock. I make no objection in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, in the emergency river and harbor bill of June 6, 1900, provision was made for the survey of a part of this waterway, as follows:

Pasquotank River: With the view of obtaining a navigable depth of 16 feet at mean low water from South Mills, on the Pasquotank River, thence down the Pasquotank River, through Albemarle Sound, Croatan Sound, Pamlico Sound, and Core Sound to Beaufort Inlet, including also cost of procuring a navigable depth of 18 feet through Beaufort Inlet and 18 feet through Ocracoke Inlet, respectively.

South Mills is the southern terminus of the Dismal Swamp Canal. The report of this survey was submitted by the Chief of Engineers, and is contained in House Document No. 202, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, and is worthy a careful reading. In fact, I can not too highly commend the intelligent and painstaking reports of the local engineers, Capt. E. W. Van C. Lucas and Maj. James B. Quinn. Not only was their report most favorable, but it received the cordial indorsement of Col. Peter C. Hains, division engineer, and also of the Chief of Engineers. I will take the time only to read an extract from the indorsement of Colonel Hains:

The survey is for a project of great national importance, and should be undertaken only after the most careful consideration and study to see that the best route is adopted. I do not think the surveys thus far made determine this fact with certainty. This survey is for a particular route described in the law, leaving the engineers no discretion in the selection of a better one, should it exist. There are other routes that should be examined, and the best connection made between Albemarle Sound and Chesapeake Bay, whether it be via the Dismal Swamp Canal or the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal. Moreover, the entire route should be owned by the United States.

I am clearly of the opinion that an inland waterway should be opened by the United States from Norfolk south, that it should be under the absolute control of the United States from one end to the other, and that the Government would be justified in expending a considerable sum on such a work.

While emphasizing the national importance of this inland waterway both for commercial reasons and for strategic purposes in time of war, it is proper to say that the report embodied two other conclusions. First, that the route embraced in the survey made was not sufficiently comprehensive and that legislative authority should be given to make proper surveys and estimates of other routes along the same general course in eastern North Carolina for the purpose of satisfactorily determining which was the most available and economic route. Second, the report further suggested that it would not be wise for the Government to undertake this great project as long as the northern communication with Chesapeake Bay was dependent upon the use of a canal owned by a private corporation, which might fail to enlarge their canal to correspond with the Government waterway and thereby render the latter useless. In substance, that both of these canals should be examined with a view to determining which afforded the best route, and that one or both should be owned by the Government and maintained as a part of this inland waterway. The above suggestions were eminently wise and practical, and it was for the purpose of making the further surveys and of examining and appraising the value of the two private canals that the bill which I refer to was introduced at this session. For information I will append this bill to my remarks.

But, Mr. Chairman, it has been said by the distinguished chairman of the committee that the true criterion of appropriations for the improvement of our waterways is the amount of commercial interests involved. By this test we submit with confidence the merits of this measure to Congress and to the country. It appears from the report of the Chief of Engineers and from other reliable data which has been collected that the estimated value of coastwise commerce to be affected by the establishment of this inland water route at the seven ports south of Beaufort Inlet aggregates more than $116,000,000. The ports referred to are Wilmington, N. C., Georgetown, S. C., Charleston, Savannah, Brunswick, Fernandina, and Jacksonville.

It may be said that an equal amount will be involved in the coastwise commerce from the ports on the Alantic coast north of and including Chesapeake Bay. This does not take under consideration the amount of coastwise commerce involved from the inland sounds and rivers and ports in eastern North Carolina. It would therefore be conservative to estimate that more than $300,000,000 of coastwise commerce would be affected and benefited by the construction of this inland waterway. This means 10,000,000 tons of commerce per annum. The cheapest form of water transportation is that carried by large barges and towed by powerful tugs. Wherever this method of transportation has been adopted freight rates have been greatly reduced. Since the institution of barge transportation in the coal trade from Chesapeake Bay to the North "freight rates have been reduced more than half, and where a few years ago they amounted to from $3 to $5 per ton, they are now from 75 cents to $1.50 per ton." The freight rates on lumber from the South have also been largely reduced.

If the establishment of this inland route resulted in the reduction of rates by even 10 cents per ton on the estimated tonnage, say 10,000,000 tons annually, it would amount to a saving per annum of $1,000,000. At 5 per cent this is the interest on $20,000,000, which is nearly four times the total cost of the construction of this inland water route, including the purchase by the Government of one of the intervening canals and the enlargement thereof. Who will gainsay the conclusion that the establishment of this inland water route is desirable and necessary by reason of the immense commercial interests involved?

This is not a local enterprise, but a national project. It is one of the several links in the chain of the great inland waterway which shall ultimately extend from Boston, on the coast of New England, to Beaufort Inlet, on the coast of North Carolina.

I may state as another pertinent fact that coastwise navigation on the Atlantic south of Beaufort Inlet is comparatively safe. Physical conditions which sustain this statement are well known and recognized. I interrogated the distinguished chairman of the committee when he was on the floor last Monday as to the reasons which actuated the committee in refusing to include this project in the bill. Here was his reply:

Mr. BURTON. First, there were numerous claims from different localities in the country for the survey of inland waterways, as from Delaware and Maryland and the coast of New England, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, and Texas. It did not seem to us fair to include this item in North Carolina without including all the rest. This was in pursuance of a rule as far as possible to treat all alike. The second reason is this: In the year 1900 a provision was inserted for a survey of an inland waterway in this very locality. The estimated cost, I think, of 16-foot navigation was $1,900,000, or an 18-foot navigation at a very much larger sum.

Either of those amounts was sufficient to preclude the desirability of an appropriation being made for it now. After one waterway has been surveyed in North Carolina—and so far a preference has been given to it in comparison with other States—and an estimate came in of so great size as did come in, it did not seem desirable to have another waterway survey there right in the same neighborhood. Such a course would not only threaten undue appropriations, but it would be unfair to other localities whose inland waterways remain unsurveyed.

I submit that the explanation does not explain. The professed intention of the bill is to recognize great projects where commerce would be largely benefited, and I submit with confidence that this inland waterway supplies both conditions. In this connection I call attention to the fact that the House Committee on Railways and Canals favorably reported yesterday a resolution authorizing the President to appoint a commission for the purpose of considering the establishment of a free and open waterway connecting Chesapeake and Delaware bays, and the chairman of that committee, Mr. DAVIDSON, of Wisconsin, is one of the distinguished members on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. We congratulate the country upon this favorable report, recognizing the importance of the connection between Delaware and Chesapeake bays, but we deplore the omission of a provision recognizing the more important inland water route connecting Chesapeake Bay and Beaufort Inlet, North Carolina.

Mr. Chairman, the movement in favor of this inland waterway has come to stay, and the commercial interests involved will continue to knock at the doors of Congress until a favorable response is given. [Applause.]

APPENDIX 1.

A bill (H. R. 7452) authorizing the appointment of a board of engineers to consider the subject of an inland waterway from Norfolk, in the State of Virginia, to Beaufort Inlet, in the State of North Carolina.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a board of engineers, to consist of not less than three and not more than five, and to be taken from either the active or the retired list of engineers in the service of the United States, to consider the entire subject of a waterway of not less than 16 feet depth from Norfolk Harbor, in the State of Virginia, to Beaufort Inlet, in the State of North Carolina, with instructions, first, to make surveys of all possible routes, if necessary, whether or not included in recent surveys made by Maj. James B. Quinn and Capt. E. W. Van C. Lucas and reported to Congress in Executive Document No. 202, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, and, second, to submit a report with estimates and recommendations, and, in the event of a favorable recommendation, a description of the best route, such report to contain an estimate of the total cost of the construction of the route recommended for adoption, including the probable cost of the purchase and improvement to 16 feet depth of any private waterway that it may be to the interest of the United States to acquire and improve in connection with the above improvement. And said board, when appointed, is authorized to order such journeys for any or all of its members as may be necessary to investigate not only any or all possible parts of proposed route but also the commercial interests of any part or parts liable to be affected by the establishment of the proposed waterway.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this bill makes two appropriations for the improvement of the Cumberland River in Tennessee. They are on page 62, and are as follows:

Improving Cumberland River, Tennessee, below Nashville: For the completion of the lock and dam at Harpeth Shoals and for maintenance, $180,000.

Improving Cumberland River, Tennessee, above Nashville: For the completion of Lock and Dam No. 1 and for maintenance, $105,000.

The first item, Mr. Chairman, is to complete the lock and dam at Harpeth Shoals in the Lower Cumberland. That is the most "formidable" obstruction, and officially so characterized, in the entire Cumberland. The other item is for Lock No. 1, just below Nashville, about 2 miles. This lock is in the Upper Cumberland. Locks Nos. 1 to Lock No. 7 are in the "Upper Cumberland."

It will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that this appropriation is to build and complete only these two locks—No. 1 and A, or Harpeth Shoals—one in the Upper and one in the Lower Cumberland. We in the last and present Congress have insisted before the honorable River and Harbor Committee that these two improvements be completed, and that the dams be put in at Locks 2 to 7, and also that an appropriation be made to purchase the land and locate Lock B in the Lower Cumberland, which is already located on paper by the engineer who made the survey for this improvement, I believe, in the year 1889.

But the committee has seen fit to make appropriations for only Locks 1 and A. We are very desirous, the friends of both the Upper and Lower Cumberland, to have the Cumberland improvements above and below Nashville completed. With these improvements completed, not only the products coming from the Upper Cumberland down to or by Nashville can get out to the Ohio River, but it will give us competitive rates; it will give us a cheap transportation not only for products coming out of the Cumberland River to the Ohio, but also give the merchants of Nashville and the Upper Cumberland—and there are a great many towns on that river—an opportunity to have competitive rates from Cincinnati and above and from the Mississippi Valley generally.

The improvement of the Cumberland will not only give this competitive rate to Nashville (and as the matter now stands we have only one system of railroads there), but it will give us an opportunity to exchange, as it were, products with the people in Illinois, in Indiana, in Missouri, in Arkansas, as far as the Ohio River is navigable. The original estimates made for the improvement of the Lower Cumberland amount to $1,783,350, and for locks 1 to 7, inclusive, in the Upper Cumberland, about $1,200,000. These improvements will give slack-water navigation for 125 miles above and 75 miles below Nashville, or 200 miles. The entire situation as set forth by the Cumberland River Improvement Association, which I approved in a speech in the House when the last river and harbor bill was pending here, is set out in the following document:

CUMBERLAND RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

The honorable Committee on Rivers and Harbors, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: To bring before you more pointedly the information asked for by your chairman, Mr. BURTON, in our discussion of the improvement of the Cumberland River this morning, we beg leave to state:

First. The most important lock.—Lock A, at Harpeth Shoals, in the Lower Cumberland, is the most important single lock. The masonry of the lock is finished. The estimated cost of putting in the dam and other accessories is $150,000. It will give a depth of 6 feet at the lock and 3 feet at lock No. 1, 2 miles below Nashville.

Second. Lock No. 1.—Lock No. 1 belongs to the upper-river system, but is located 2 miles below Nashville, as above stated. The completion of Lock A before completing Lock 1 would back up the water on Lock 1 and render it more difficult and expensive to complete. In the last river and harbor bill $50,000 was appropriated for cleaning out and preparing for the dam at No. 1, and the work is now being prosecuted. The estimated cost of completing Lock No. 1 is $150,000. The masonry is completed. Both Locks 1 and A should be completed and put in operation at the same time, and will afford slack-water navigation from a point about 25 miles above Nashville to a point near Clarksville, a distance of about 65 miles below, and will extend the season of navigation to Nashville in the lower river for several months in the year.

Third. Lock B.—Lock B has been located near Clarksville, but the ground for it has not yet been acquired. This lock is very important in connection with No. 1 and A, and should be put under way at the earliest date possible, and when completed will, with Locks 1 and A, overcome the main difficulties to navigation in the Lower Cumberland.

Fourth. Locks C, D, E, F, and G.—Locks C, D, E, F, and G, being the remaining locks in the lower river, have not yet been located. In view of the possible delay in locating and acquiring the necessary ground therefor, we would urge that a specific provision be made for this in the pending bill. This would also be necessary should it be deemed advisable to put the construction of these locks under the continuing-contract system.

UPPER CUMBERLAND.

The completion of Locks 2 to 7 in the upper river will cost only about $750,000, and will give slack-water navigation for a distance of 125 miles above Nashville, and the completion of Lock No. 1 (Upper Cumberland) and Locks A and B in the Lower Cumberland will add 75 miles more, making 200 miles of navigable river.

Within this territory are located the principal cities and towns of the entire river, rendering the completion of this portion of the river of the greatest commercial value.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF ENGINEER IN CHARGE.

The importance of completing the improvement in the lower river is recognized and set forth by Lieut. Col. M. B. Adams, United States engineer in charge of the river, in his last report to the Chief of Engineers, in which he says:

"The estimated cost of providing an outlet into the Ohio River—i. e., the completion of the scheme below Nashville—is $1,714,500, and with the funds available and the lock sites secured the work might be accomplished in about two years."

And again, Colonel Adams, in further discussing the importance of the lower-river improvement in connection with Locks 1 to 7, inclusive, which are now built, says:

"It seems impossible to urge the cost that has first been indicated with too much vehemence, being apparently the only way of securing a return for the expenditures already incurred and may hereafter be incurred within a reasonable time and for a reasonable additional outlay."

The engineer, after stating that the completion of the improvement would probably reduce the freight charges 40 to 50 per cent, says:

"I do not hesitate, therefore, to ask for the entire sum that will be required to carry the lower-river scheme of improvement and the lower portion of the upper-river scheme of improvement to completion at an early day."

The sums asked for by the engineer, Colonel Adams, in his report cited above, are $1,714,500 to complete the system in the Lower Cumberland, which he says can be done in two years, and $1,200,000 for the Upper Cumberland to complete locks 1 to 7, both inclusive, and some minor work in the upper river.

This will secure over 300 miles of navigable water through one of the richest sections of the country and give immediate practical results.

CHIEF OF ENGINEERS' RECOMMENDATION.

The Chief of Engineers has cut the amount asked for by Colonel Adams to $600,000 for the upper and $600,000 for the lower river.

CUMBERLAND RIVER CONVENTION.

It can not be appropriate for us in this connection to state that we are sent to present these matters to you for your consideration by a large and representative convention of the people in the Cumberland River Valley, held in Nashville, November 15, 1900. In this valley is an estimated population of about 1,000,000 people, and it covers an area of about 18,500 square miles. The latent wealth of this territory is equal to any territory of equal extent in the world. Its arboreal and mineral wealth and agricultural possibilities will make it a most inviting field for the capitalist and the laborer, once the Cumberland River is made a safe and reliable highway of transportation, but which is now suffering for want of river transportation and railroad facilities.

SPECIFIC APPROPRIATIONS REQUESTED.

In conclusion, we beg leave to urge upon you that an appropriation be made in the pending river and harbor bill sufficient to cover the following items:

First. To finish Lock A (Harpeth Shoals)	$150,000
Second. To finish Lock No. 1	150,000
Third. To acquire necessary ground and construct lock and dam of Lock B (say)	300,000

Fourth. To provide necessary amount for locating Locks C, D, E, F, and G, and acquiring necessary ground therefor, looking to the early completion of improvement in the Lower Cumberland.

Fifth. To build dams and other accessories to Locks 2 to 7, both inclusive, in Upper Cumberland.

To this should be added the amount recommended by the Chief of Engineers for keeping the river free from obstructions.

We suggest that the sum appropriated for the Upper Cumberland shall first be applied to the completion of Lock No. 1, by the construction of the dam and other accessories, and to Lock No. 2 and the others in their numerical order as far as the sum appropriated will go.

Respectfully submitted.

Committee.

Here it is seen that Colonel Adams, the engineer, states the freight charges by these improvements will be reduced from "40 to 50 per cent." This of itself will be a great blessing to the people of Tennessee and Kentucky. Colonel Adams further states:

It seems impossible to urge the cost that has first been indicated with too much vehemence, being apparently the only way of securing a return for the expenditures already incurred and may hereafter be incurred within a reasonable time and for a reasonable additional outlay. I do not hesitate, therefore, to ask for the entire sum that will be required to carry the lower-river scheme of improvement to completion at an early date—his idea being to improve the Lower Cumberland complete and at the same time finish up the work at Locks 7 to I inclusive, the total cost being for the 7 locks about $1,200,000.

In the brief time I have it will be impossible to exploit the resources of Tennessee and Kentucky that will be carried on the Cumberland when thus improved.

Mr. Chairman, there is not a fairer land in the world than that through which this river courses. It begins in the Cumberland Mountains in East Tennessee and passes through the magnificent coal, iron, and forest lands of that country that are yet practically untouched, on through the blue-grass region of Tennessee, thence through western Kentucky to the Ohio. So great are the possibilities for capital in East Tennessee, near the Cumberland, that capitalists are now building a railroad from Nashville up through that country to Knoxville, connecting with the roads that come from Cincinnati, showing again how solicitous we are about getting competitive rates and a new way of getting to and from Nashville by way of Cincinnati and Knoxville on east. The people of Nashville have been so solicitous for this road, Mr. Chairman, that they have twice voted a subscription of $1,000,000 to build a new railroad to the city of Nashville and through this eastern country, the Upper Cumberland Valley, that we might get what might be known as commercial freedom.

They have made sacrifices that they do not want to make under ordinary circumstances, but in this case did so to procure and protect their commercial liberty. They voted this appropriation of a million dollars by a vote of about 5 to 1. I believe in the first election there was some defect in the charter and our people were so anxious that immediately another charter was procured and they went back to the poles and again registered their will, determined as they were to have this railroad, even if they had to tax themselves. They wanted commercial freedom. So they voted it again, and this road is now being built to these rich forests and coal and iron fields in the Upper Cumberland Valley.

Mr. Chairman, if the improvement upon the Cumberland River above and below Nashville is made, as it should be, the benefit will be general. Every section of the country west of the Mississippi is more or less concerned with Tennessee commercially, socially, professionally, or otherwise. We have more educational institutions there than any other city in the world of its population, I believe, and students from everywhere come there to school. We have great stock farms. Our stock farms are of the finest in the world.

People from all over the world come there to buy stock. We have great timber lands and iron fields and coal fields, so that if we can get this improvement we will get a return in the way of cheaper freights for the farmer as well as the merchant.

As it is, there are dams in the river, but they are not worth a nickel as they stand. They are there in the river, turning the current first to one side and then to the other, interrupting what commerce there is along the Cumberland River—but there they stand, silent sentinels, notifying us that Uncle Sam has stopped, as it were, never to appropriate again another cent toward completing them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you know it is a bad business proposition for a man to plant his crop and then go away and leave it, even if there is a fence around it. The Government has planted this money, has constructed this masonry from rock culled right from the banks of the river. It was not necessary to haul it a hundred yards; and yet, Mr. Chairman, in the wisdom of this great committee they have failed to make an appropriation to complete this work, and rest the matter simply by giving us $5,000 to maintain it in statu quo.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that when this committee reflects over this matter as seriously as I have, and as my people have, they will in the future go on up the river as they have started, completing the locks from Lock No. 1 to No. 7, at the same time continuing the improvements in the Lower Cumberland, about which Colonel Barlow in his report says:

From an engineering point of view the survey seems to thoroughly establish the feasibility of the improvement of this river by locks and dams as far down as Big Eddy Shoals, and as a continuance of the method now in progress above Nashville it would appear to be worthy of adoption, similar commercial reasons applying to both sections. The language used in my preliminary report of September 10, 1888, upon this question seems specially applicable and is as follows:

"I respectfully report that in my opinion this lower section of the Cumberland River is 'worthy of improvement' even to the extent of establishing locks and dams thereon, if found necessary, after a complete instrumental survey of the river below Nashville has been made.

"The public necessity and convenience subserved by the radical improvement of the Lower Cumberland would be the opening up of the vast and varied mineral and forest resources of the Cumberland Valley to navigation, and if to secure this benefit to the fullest extent it is found necessary to construct locks and dams, it would constitute but the extension of the lock and dam system of the Upper Cumberland to the lower river; only an accurate instrumental survey can determine whether such canalization is absolutely necessary.

"The commerce of the Cumberland River extends to the most important points of the Mississippi system, and it is thought that this commerce will continue to largely increase as the river above Nashville is improved, by reason of heavy shipments seeking the western waterways."

Special commercial statistics are not appended to this report for the reason that such a compilation is preparing by a committee of citizens appointed for the purpose, with the intent of submission to the War Department and Congress. Such data will be submitted hereafter, as soon as they become available.

Reports of Mr. C. A. Locke, assistant engineer, and Mr. B. B. Smith, assistant engineer, are transmitted herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. W. BARLOW,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Corps of Engineers.

[a] Dressing.

Estimated cost of locks and dams, $1,783,350.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise merely for the purpose of asking permission to extend in the RECORD the remarks I made this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the remarks he made this morning. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, the speech in this House on yesterday by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] offers, so to speak, a gleam of sunshine in the clouds of extravagance that hang about the Capitol under the present régime, but I regret that, in my judgment, when the gentleman fired his shot he selected as a target that bill the least subject to attack of any of the bills that have been or will be offered during this session.

The gentleman criticises the composition of the committee, saying that it is made up of gentlemen from whose districts come clamorous appeals for appropriations at the hands of this committee. This criticism is without point, unless the insinuation is to be indulged in that these men yield to these clamorous appeals against the real interests of the country and by combination pilfer from the Treasury amounts in excess of the just deserts of these various projects. For one I do not believe that insinuation to be justified with reference to a single member of the committee, and for my part I believe the policy in making up the committees of this House, upon this or any other matter, is the wiser one, that you select the members, both of the majority and of the minority, best informed in reference to the matters that are to be discussed and acted upon by the committees thus raised. Of course it is necessary, if that policy be adopted, that the men should be of honor and character, and then the country will get the benefit of intelligent, accurate knowledge honorably applied to the subjects that will be discussed before the committee and presented by it to the House.

As if to hedge against the possible sting involved in his criticism, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] compliments the distinguished chairman of the committee that reported this bill to the House, in which, as a Democrat, I heartily concur. No man that has been brought in touch with this committee will deny that its chairman is peculiarly fitted for the arduous and important duties of this great committee. It is amazing how this man carries in his head the minute details of all the different projects that come clamoring before this committee for recognition from all over the country. It is amazing how he can know as much about the different projects involved in a State as the member from the State itself.

There is no doubt about that, and I take it that his compliment to the chairman is equally true of the other members of the committee so far as honor, character, and conscientious desire to serve the whole country is concerned. That is my opinion. I can not speak from accurate knowledge of many members of the committee, but I can speak from accurate, extended, and familiar knowledge of one of its members, who comes from a State having as many clamorous interests and as vitally interested in this bill as any other State in the American Union, and whose prospects in the future to be subserved by these improvements are, in my judgment, in excess of any other State or Territory in the Union. I do not need to defend the member on this committee from Texas. He is known too well in Texas, and I will not insult the character of the constituency that I in part represent by giving any eulogy of "TOM" BALL, as he is familiarly called.

A word in reference to the merits of the measure. The gentleman from Iowa asks, as if he posed and staggered every man in this House, "Where will the end be if we go on appropriating millions for deepening the harbors of our country?" Why, that question can be asked with reference to every other appropriation bill that comes before this House, for of necessity they must increase with the growth and development of the country; and the best answer to it is the answer made by the chairman of the committee when he opened the discussion in reference to this bill and gave a comparative statement of the growth and augmentation of appropriations for various other purposes in comparison with the increase of appropriations for this purpose, which shows conclusively that up to date we have been making the vital mistake of repeatedly running our hands too deep into the Treasury in every other line except the most important one, which is for the development of our waterways and the harbors of our country, which lead to the commercial supremacy of the greatest republic in the world.

It is my honest, deliberate conviction that the whole people who bear the burdens of taxation receive more direct, substantial benefit by the expenditure of the dollars carried in this bill in proportion than in any other expenditure of the Government, and that the benefits are more widely and evenly distributed than by any other appropriation. The whole subject may be summed up in a breath. Every honorable man recognizes that the future of this country is largely dependent upon its commercial and industrial life. We have reached the point now when the competition of the home market by the improvement of our interior traffic lines and transportation and investment of capital and all of that has become keen, and of which the people would largely get the benefit, except for some trade restrictions of which I have not the time to speak now. The time is now coming when we must enter across the oceans into the keenest international competition that the world has ever seen.

Shall we be supreme there? Shall we go on and on building up a tremendous balance of trade in our favor that has helped to produce the marvelous prosperity in this country unparalleled heretofore in our history? Nothing can contribute to that end by legitimate means better than dollars rightly expended for the deepening of our harbors, in inviting mightier ships, in shortening the waterways, inviting competition between competing railroad lines reaching the different ports of the country, and thus furnishing quicker and cheaper transportation for the cargoes that shall be sent to foreign markets. That is the problem that confronts the honorable statesmen of to-day of this country—how best the interests of the commercial and industrial system of this country can be subserved in transportation.

I have read with much interest and with close and keen attention the debate at the other end of this Capitol with reference to the ship-subsidy bill, which recently passed that body.

And it has occurred to me with overwhelming force that nearly every argument that was offered in favor of that bill applies with double force to the appropriations of this character, and that none of the objections urged there against that bill apply with any force against this bill. I am a believer, Mr. Chairman, in the statement that "competition is the life of trade." I have no patience with the man who argues that the development of the rivers and harbors of the country constitutes a menace to railroad interests and breaks up railroad transportation. I admit that it brings about competition, and it ought to do it, but that competition is rightful, just, wise, and beneficial to the interests involved, as well as to the country at large. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, in closing the general debate I can not omit to extend my thanks to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] for his kind words of commendation. Such words of commendation are especially gratifying when coming from a member of so long and eminent service in this House. My hope is that the gentleman from Iowa may yet serve long enough in this body to vote for a river and harbor bill. [Laughter.] But what he said, Mr. Chairman, is not complete without giving equal praise to the other members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. No subordinate organization or any committee in this House has worked more faithfully or earnestly for the public good—I think I may say this without fear of contradiction—than all of the members of that committee.

If there are improvements in this measure over prior bills, these improvements would not have been possible without the concurrence and cooperation of the 16 men who have labored with me. As I stated in presenting the bill, for two months, almost daily, from half past 10 in the morning until half past 4 or 5 in the afternoon, we have been working upon this bill. We have tried to eliminate from it that which does not belong there and to include that which should be there. We have tried, if necessary, to face the possibility of public clamor if we were right. We have tried to omit those items which were subject to just criticism, and if I deserve the friendly words of the gentleman from Iowa, my colleagues on the committee deserve them as well.

I can not quite agree with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] in some of his objections to this bill. The one to which I wish to call attention particularly is that with reference to the increased depths of the harbors in the United States. In my judgment there is no more important improvement required in the river and harbor bill. The gentleman from Iowa himself called attention to the increase in the capacity of freight cars from 10 or 20 tons for each car to 50 tons. Should the freight car increase in its carrying capacity, and the ship on the ocean, while invention and progress are making their influence felt, not increase along with it?

If railway managers were not content to stop with freight cars of 20 tons capacity, and so improved their tracks, their motive power, and the size of their cars as to give them 50 or 60 ton cars, ought the capacity of boats to remain at 4,000 when it can be increased to 20,000 tons? Ought we to stop with 20 feet of depth of water in the harbors when boats are already in sight that may draw 40 feet? There is a very interesting document, which if I had with me I would ask leave to have printed as a part of my remarks, by E. L. Corthell, an engineer of prominence and of reputation in other countries as well as in this, in which he forecasts the size of boats for the next half century, and makes the estimate that in the year 1950 the boats that carry the major part of the freight between the great ports of the world will draw 50 feet.

Now, this is largely conjectural, it is true; but that man would be at the same time a very bold man and be possessed of a deal of inertia in his temperament who would deny that such an advance could not be made. Take the improvements by the telephone and the telegraph—by the telegraph within sixty years and the telephone within thirty years. Not only in means of communication, but in all the qualities of a progressive era the whole face of the earth has been revolutionized by these inventions. Is it probable that we shall stand still in maritime architecture, in the size of boats? It is no captious disposition of the boat owners that causes them to build vessels of larger capacity and deeper draft. It is in response to the demand of the times for larger capacity and safety in the construction of vessels. The truss model is the one now adopted. The prairie schooner is not a good model for an ocean steamship. The naval architects have found the truss model to be the best, because it gives greater steadiness and capacity to the boat.

I mentioned in my remarks last winter several ships of 35 feet draft. They were the Oceanic and the Cymric, of the White Star Line; the Minneapolis, of the Atlantic Transport Line, and the Kaiser Wilhelm, of the North German Lloyd Line. Each one of these ships could be loaded to a greater capacity than 35 feet. We say we make no mistake in providing a depth of 40 feet in New York Harbor; we have made no mistake in providing or seeking to provide a depth of 35 feet in Boston Harbor.

There is a factor of safety to be considered in this connection. An ordinary depth of 35 feet in the channel does not provide for a 35-foot vessel, because the waves oftentimes cause the boat to go up and down, and even in a smooth sea—as smooth as a mill pond—a boat cuts a course. The prow goes ahead and turns the waters to the right and left, and the stern sinks toward the bottom, "sucking the bottom," as it is called by mariners. So that whenever there is a grounding, unless the boat runs "head on" against a rock, or gets out of its course, it almost always strikes at the stern, rather than at the prow, because in the course of the boat a sort of hollow is made, greater as its rapidity is greater.

We shall, I think, in the future, keep pace with the progress of the times by increasing the depth of the channels everywhere. In this movement we can not stop.

Now, I wish to call attention to some of the objections which have been made by other gentlemen to this bill. Two gentlemen from North Carolina in the course of this discussion have stated that their State in this bill receives only $277,000; and they claim that this is "discrimination."

I want to call attention to certain facts, and in doing so I do not say anything whatever to decry the importance of the State of North Carolina. We have all heard of its great growth in cotton spinning and in the manufacture of furniture, of its undeveloped resources, and of the commercial awakening among its people, but if you look at the official reports you will find that the aggregate of water-borne tonnage on every river and every harbor that is being improved by the Government in North Carolina is 2,400,000 tons per annum—a little less than that. Eleven members of this committee represent States having one, two, three, or four rivers or harbors with a much larger tonnage than the whole State of North Carolina.

My own city has three times as great a water-borne tonnage as the whole State of North Carolina. Sixty-five miles to the east of us is the town of Conneaut, of which many gentlemen may never have heard, but which has 700,000 or 800,000 tons more than in the whole State. Fifty-four miles to the east is the town of Ashtabula with 5,500,000—more than twice as much as the whole State of North Carolina. Then there is Fairport, 28 miles away, with nearly as much; and Lorain, 26 miles to the west, well up to as much, and Toledo with very nearly twice as much as the whole of that State. In the State of New York there is not only the city of New York, but several other harbors, as well as channels, having three, four, and five times as much tonnage as the whole State of North Carolina.

Let us look for an instant at the city of Philadelphia. It is 56 miles from that city down to the deep sea. It has a total tonnage of 22,000,000, nine times as much as the whole State of North Carolina, yet the single port of Wilmington, N. C., has received in the aggregate appropriations from this Government of $3,200,000—$300,000 more than has been expended for the channel from Philadelphia to the sea, although that channel has, as I have said, nine times as much tonnage. The city of Wilmington, with its 697,000 tons, I believe, has received $500,000 more of appropriations from this Government than my own city that has twelve times as much tonnage. I do not really see, when we come to count the past and join it with the present, that North Carolina has very much to complain of.

Why, Mr. Chairman, an engineer told me that some years ago, when a Senator of that State was chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, an appropriation of $50,000 was made for a certain improvement in that State when $10,000 was on hand and it was all that could possibly be expended in two years. Do all that could be done, there was no place on the river where they could expend that $50,000.

There has been no discrimination against this State because of its having no member on the committee. There is a great project of locks and dams on the Cape Fear River, up to Fayetteville, to cost $1,620,000.

Now, this committee has decided that it is best to go slow in the building of locks and dams. We have projects of this kind in the country the aggregate cost of which would be over $150,000,000. We have recommended to cease building locks and dams on the Coosa; we have recommended to cease building them on the Cumberland above Nashville; we have recommended that we will merely finish or partly finish one on the Upper White River. We have adopted only two projects that are new and those comparatively inexpensive, $350,000 for the Trinity and $450,000 or thereabouts for the Ouachita, on both of which rivers complete results would be obtained at a comparatively small cost.

A gentleman appeared before us on behalf of this project, and I was very much pleased at some of his arguments. He was telling what an enormous tonnage they would have at Fayetteville if the locks and dams were built. He went on the theory that the commerce that was right on the ocean side would come out to Fayetteville just for the fun, I may say, of being hauled down through those locks and dams. It is wise to scrutinize projects before we adopt them. A 4-foot navigation, as I said in the opening, or a 6-foot or an 8-foot, where there must be numerous locks and dams, is a very doubtful experiment. It is a question whether it would pay It is a question whether it would not be an unnecessary expense and waste of money. A conclusive argument against this is that we have adopted no new project like this, and this one is not in the same class, by any means, with those for which we have appropriated money in this bill.

I do not know that I understood the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] to find fault that greater appropriations were not made in his State for the Cumberland River. If he did, I want to call attention to two bills that he has introduced in the House this session. One is No. 3167 and the other No. 3163. In one of them he asks $55,000 for Lock No. 1 and in the other $90,000 for the completion of Lock A, at Harpeth Shoals; in all, $145,000. So the committee has done him a blessing against his will, because they have included recommendations not merely for $145,000, but for $275,000, and $10,000 for maintenance thrown in—very nearly twice what he asked in his bills that were presented here.

The committee thought it best to finish as far as possible the improvement of the Cumberland River from Nashville to the mouth, but as regards that portion above Nashville, where an expense of $6,800,000 will be required to complete the work, we do not think it best to enter upon it at this time, not even if there are unfinished locks and dams there, because it would be, in my judgment, a waste of public money. There are some problems in transportation now that are working themselves out. That is the relative share of tonnage that shall be carried by railways and by waterways. There is an incidental question which is of course of very great importance, and that is how far waterways affect freight rates.

But if we were to listen to some arguments it would lead to the conclusion that to make a $2,000,000 railway charge reasonable rates you must spend $10,000,000 in the building of locks and dams of the most expensive quality. The problems ought to adjust themselves naturally and easily. There are different kinds of service rendered by the railroad and by the waterway. Neither one can intrude upon the province of the other without loss. When they parallel each other, as in the case of the New York Central Railroad and the Erie Canal, each benefits the other, and the question as to what kinds of freight each shall carry is very readily solved—which affords the natural means for carrying freight at the cheapest cost?

When there is a railroad route between two cities, and in order to get water transportation between them it is necessary to canalize a river at great expense, it is not worth while to do so, even if it does have some bearing on freight rates. There is a simpler remedy, and that is through legislation by Congress or by the States, compelling the common carrier to do its duty. It is not right to come to Congress and say: "You must, by a method which is wasteful from a broad economic standpoint, compel the railroad to do that which we are not willing to do by legislation in our own State or in Congress."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman pardon an interruption?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I did not catch the first part of the gentleman's remarks, but from what I have heard I think that the gentleman from Ohio misunderstood what I said a moment ago. I made no complaint whatever, I do not now, for what you have done for Harpeth Shoals and Lock No. 1, that is just below Nashville, your purpose being, as my purpose is, to complete those two locks; but what I desire—and without undertaking to criticise it at all, and if the gentleman undertakes to state that I think if he will read my remarks he will find them to the contrary—was to have Congress appropriate enough money to finish up the other five locks, because the dams are there and are in the way of navigation, because incomplete.

Mr. BURTON. Of course on that I desire to say that because the Government has expended money on a public work, say, a third of the cost, and finds then that the greatness of the cost will render it wasteful, the committee has thought best to stop further expense, further waste—that is, if $100,000 has been wasted, it is not worth while to waste $200,000 more. I certainly absolve the gentleman, however, from any neglect about his project, because he called at the committee room. I was merely calling attention to the bills which he introduced.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman will bear me out in this: That that project above Nashville, as well as below, and particularly above, has been passed on time and again and approved by the committee or the department that approved the two locks that the gentleman is now appropriating money to complete.

Mr. BURTON. I recognize that, and I recognize the further fact that we have about $350,000,000 of projects before us that have been approved or recommended, and we can take up only a comparatively small share of them.

Now, I want to pay some little attention to the arguments in behalf of the Coosa River. One gentleman in the discussion made this statement:

> Now, Mr. Chairman, that statement of the chairman of the committee was incorrect in this: He says that for several years past no appropriation has been made for the prosecution of this project.
> Now, if by this statement he meant to refer to the fact that no bill or appropriation has been passed for the purpose of continuing the work on the project, that is correct.

What incorrect statement did I make? Of course, in the great number of figures and facts to which I must refer, I am very likely to make an error, and I want to be corrected if I do so; but I certainly made no error in this statement. Let us see the ground on which the gentleman bases the conclusion that an error was made. He says:

> I refer him to page 52, I believe, of the bill which his committee reported two years ago. He will remember that the very language almost of the amendment which I have given notice I shall offer was inserted in that bill.

Now, passing by the fact that it was not two years ago, but one year ago, for that is a minor error, the gentleman seems to think that because a bill was introduced here which failed to become a law, that was an appropriation. I repeat the statement that no appropriations have been made for this project for several years. I am willing to take the responsibility for that. It was the very first item I noticed when I became chairman of the committee in December, 1898, that I thought was extravagant and wasteful. The fact that an item was inserted in the last bill is no reason why it should be inserted in this. The committee have not been working upon this bill for two months to no purpose. We have been seeking to eliminate some items which do not belong there.

Mr. BURNETT. It is a fact, however, that that committee and the committee of the Senate did recommend $175,000.

Mr. BURTON. I have already sufficiently answered the gentleman on that. I said, and I repeat it, that the fact that it was inserted in the last bill is no reason why it should be inserted in this bill; that this committee has not given two months' study to this bill to no purpose. If the gentleman had paid attention, he would have heard my statement.

Mr. BURNETT. But at the same time this committee recognized the importance of that work enough to incorporate an item of $175,000 for it in the last bill.

Mr. BURTON. They did not appropriate it; they inserted it in the bill.

Mr. BURNETT. And it passed the House, passed the Senate, passed the conference committee, and was defeated in the Senate because it was talked to death by a Senator.

Mr. BURTON. I conceded all that.

Mr. BELLAMY. May I interrupt the distinguished gentleman?

Mr. BURTON. I have but very little time. I think I shall have to ask the gentleman to defer until we come to the five-minute debate. He will then have opportunity, no doubt.

Mr. BELLAMY. It is simply a question.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. BELLAMY. It refers to a statement you made on the floor which I think ought to be corrected. You stated that the harbor of Wilmington had received $2,300,000 in the course of its history, which was a great deal more than the State of Pennsylvania from Philadelphia down to the sea had received, if I understand. Now, if the gentleman will look at the last report of the Chief of Engineers of the United States he will see four items for the Delaware River, one for the Delaware Bay, near Lewes, $380,000——

Mr. BURTON. I do not know that I made my statement sufficiently explicit, but what I referred to——

Mr. BELLAMY. Another for the Delaware breakwater,

$2,807,000; another for the harbor of refuge, Delaware Bay, $1,304,000, and the fourth, for the Delaware River, $2,986,000, which amounts to $7,000,000 alone for four items.

Mr. BURTON. I said for the channel from Philadelphia to the sea—56 miles. The Delaware Bay breakwater is not a part of that improvement. There is a harbor of refuge for boats, if they desire to resort to it from anywhere along the coast. Now, I can not yield to the gentleman further, and he must excuse me, as I have very little time.

I want to talk a little about this Coosa River project. The estimated amount for its completion is, for the lower 68 miles, $4,916,320. I have with some pains sought to obtain the assessed valuation of the counties bordering upon this portion of the improvement. They are the counties of Elmore, Chilton, Coosa, Shelby, and Talladega, of which the total assessed valuation of the real estate is about $8,000,000, according to the census of 1890. The rate of taxation there in rural counties, I am told, is about 1½ per cent at the very outside.

Mr. BOWIE. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly, although I am very much pressed for time.

Mr. BOWIE. I will state that the gentleman's figures are very much in error in regard to the assessed value of those four counties.

Mr. BURTON. If the gentleman will notice they are the official figures taken from the census of 1890.

Mr. BOWIE. The census?

Mr. BURTON. From the census of 1890.

Mr. BURNETT. That was twelve years ago.

Mr. BURTON. That is true. These are the latest available figures, as I believe. The county of Elmore has an assessed valuation for real estate and improvements, according to the census of 1890, of $1,444,033; the county of Coosa an assessed valuation of $789,826; the county of Chilton, $768,378, making a total of about $2,800,000. Then the river runs into the counties of Talladega and Shelby, this improvement extending about three-eighths of the distance on the boundary line between those two counties. That would make the total assessed valuation of real estate in counties bordering this improvement between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000.

Mr. BURNETT. These figures are stated to have been made twelve years ago.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, yes; that was twelve years ago, and I hope they have grown a good deal since then.

Mr. BURNETT. What are the figures according to the present census? Are they not available?

Mr. BURTON. The present census has given no publication of any figures on this subject that I am aware of.

Mr. BURNETT. Are there no bulletins showing it?

Mr. BURTON. Not that I am aware of. I sent to one of the departments of the Government, and I will say for the benefit of the gentleman that I take it for granted they have sent the best information available. The information was sent about ten days ago. If the gentleman can find any better information I shall be very glad.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman wants it we will furnish the tax books of the counties.

Mr. BURTON. One and one-fourth per cent on a total assessment of $8,000,000 would make about $100,000 per annum if we include the whole of the assessed valuation of the real estate of those counties through which this improvement passes. That means that the Government of the United States is asked to expend an amount equal to the taxation upon real estate in those counties, portions of which are not touched by this improvement at all, for fifty years and more. Now, then, gentlemen, we think it is about time to draw the line when we come to an improvement so expensive as that. When we turn to this river we find that the amount of tonnage is 33,000 tons a year, about a day's tonnage in a great port in the rush season.

I have become accustomed to find my mail abounding every day in criticisms, sometimes amounting to abuse, of the chairman and the members of our committee for unfriendliness and moral perversity. Gentlemen of the committee, I am perfectly willing to take the obliquy, and the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors are perfectly willing to share the obliquy with me of pointing out what would result from this kind of an improvement. At great length some gentleman spoke of how near this Coosa River is to Birmingham. Why, the nearest point on the upper portion of the river is 25 miles from Birmingham, and here I presume the gentleman will say I am making an inaccurate statement. But I rely on Rand-McNally's Atlas. The map lays down two lines of mountains, the Oak Mountains and the Karr Mountains, in the territory between Birmingham and this river, one ridge being an extension of the other.

Now, let us see how much validity there is in the argument that the opening up of Coosa River is going to benefit Birmingham. I find that city is 25 miles away from the nearest point, and a range of mountains between. Then, again, the improvement we are asked to make is to reach coal fields. We are now improving at great expense the Black Warrior, the Warrior, and the Tombigbee. These are the natural outlets from Birmingham coal fields, extending to the south and west. The expense will run into the millions of dollars—three, four, or five millions—and is it right for one State to ask that within 40 or 50 miles of a stream that you are improving at such an expense we should prosecute another improvement that will cost six millions?

Mr. BURNETT. How far are these apart?

Mr. BURTON. Some considerable distance; but in one case, the Coosa, there is a range of mountains between them, and in the other, the Black Warrior, it is in the same valley, and comparatively easy of communication. The Black Warrior River reaches coal fields already in operation. The coal on the upper portions of that river will be reached by the canal and locks.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors are willing to face criticism upon this bill. I have never asked any member outside of this House to vote to retain any item that is in this bill; but in private conversations outside I have frequently requested members not to allow any further item to go in. We prepared this bill with our best endeavors for the benefit of the country, and for the whole country, bearing in mind all portions of it—not considering any Mason and Dixon's line, or any section of it. With these remarks, gentlemen of the committee, I submit this bill to you, and now ask that it be read under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improving said harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 119, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, by providing channels 35 feet deep, but modified in width so as to provide a channel 1,200 feet wide from the navy-yard at Charlestown and the Chelsea bridge and Charles River bridge to President Roads, and 1,500 feet wide from President Roads by route designated as No. 3, through Broad Sound to the ocean, $600,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such material and work as may be necessary for prosecuting said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $3,000,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated: Provided further, That the expenditure hereby authorized shall be made with a view to securing channels 35 feet deep and of a width as uniform as possible.

Mr. NAPHEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the members of this House to the grounding of the Dominion liner, Commonwealth, in Boston Harbor during the consideration of this bill. This is the second time she found bottom at practically the same point. Other steamers have experienced a like trouble in recent years. The Cunard Line was obliged to withdraw two large steamers, the Saxonia and Ivernia, from the Boston service. That the harbor improvements provided for in this bill are necessary has been repeatedly demonstrated beyond a question, and the recent mishap to the Commonwealth emphasizes the fact that they are immediately necessary. I realize that the sum you are invited to give for this purpose is large, and there will be a corresponding return, not to one section, but to the entire country. If you enable us to modernize this harbor in order that transportation by sea may be safe, expeditious, and cheap, the farmer in Illinois, the ranchman in Texas, and the planter in Georgia will share directly in the benefits.

Boston Harbor is vital to the agricultural and grazing interests, as a port of distribution for their products, and important to the National Treasury as a source of revenue. Nevertheless, it has received little attention in comparison with other harbors of inferior standing. In the coasting trade it is probably the first harbor in America—10,436 coasting vessels made the port during the year 1900 as against 9,016 at New York, 4,588 at Philadelphia, and 3,088 at Baltimore. In the foreign trade it is admittedly the second harbor in America, outranking New Orleans, Philadelphia, and Baltimore in the order named. During the year 1901 its total foreign trade was worth $197,005,218, of which about 70 per cent, or $131,667,890, consisted of exports. It is needless for me to elaborate on these figures. It is the only port among the principal seaports to show an increase in its exports, or in its total foreign trade during the year 1901.

With all our energies bent upon capturing the markets of the world, can we afford to neglect the just appeal of this great station, through which one-twelfth of our products bound for these foreign markets must pass? But it is the character of our foreign trade even more than its extent which lifts the proposition before you above mere sectional lines. Boston Harbor is not the port of New England alone—five-sixths of its export trade consists of products originally forwarded from the West, the Southwest, and the South. Out of the $123,000,000, the total value of our exports in the calendar year 1900, no less than $103,000,000 represented the aggregate of the following five staples:

Provisions	$42,958,230
Breadstuffs	25,000,618
Raw cotton	15,248,606
Leather	10,039,200
Animals	9,697,753

Under this last head occurs an item which may interest members who represent the grazing constituencies.

In the shipment of live cattle Boston leads the country. One hundred and twelve thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine head were exported last year, and our losses in transit, both of horned cattle and of sheep, exhibited the usual low percentage. We are preeminently the great cattle-shipping port of the country, and as long as we remain 180 miles nearer Europe than any other large Atlantic harbor we shall maintain this position. Almost as much might be said of our shipments of grain and provisions; and not these items alone but the others which I have cited are of interest to my colleagues from the West and the South. They know as well as I, that the business of the farmer does not end to-day with mere production. If merely to raise crops from the soil meant prosperity, then Cuba, with her 800,000 tons of sugar ready for delivery, would be rich and contented, instead of poor and depressed.

Distant markets must now be sought, competitors must be undersold, the journey to the point of delivery must be swift and cheap. You can not forego a single advantage; you can not ignore a single obstacle. To conduct your foreign trade with imperfect instruments is to court agrarian disaster; and what instruments or organs are more vital than your harbors, exhaling and inhaling the life-giving breath of trade, from the internal parts of the body politic?

I have already indicated the rôle which Boston Harbor plays in this great respiratory movement. Our natural advantages are such that we are likely to improve our relative rank, as we have done, during the last thirty years; for while the export trade of the whole country has only trebled in that period, the export trade of Boston has been increased from seven to ten times. Our geographical position shortens the sea voyage to Europe many hours, and the total journey from the West correspondingly.

The harbor itself is 10 miles long and large enough to contain 50 islands, amid which sheltered roadsteads afford safe anchorage to the shipping. To these advantages of nature, commercial enterprise has added docks, warehouses, railway terminals, and every facility for the transmission of goods and passengers. A great and thriving city lines the shore, and spreads inland for a depth of many miles. Until recently it could be said of Boston Harbor that it offered no barrier to the largest vessel afloat. But the great ocean liners, sinking deeper and deeper with the weight of their huge cargoes, have at last reached the bottom in the second port of the land and render a deepening of the channel necessary.

By a project of 1892, dredging operations were begun. A depth was fixed which seemed adequate for the ships then afloat or building, and money was appropriated by Congress at various times for the completion of the plan. But the development in the size of ocean carriers has outrun all calculations and we now stand face to face with the serious problem which I shall briefly lay before you.

At mean low tide there are 23 feet 6 inches of water in Boston Harbor at its shallowest point. The largest vessels now entering draw 31 feet 6 inches when fully loaded, and since the main channel is now less than 1,000 feet wide, it is not impossible that some day we may experience a blockade more effective than that which the Merrimac attempted at the entrance to Santiago. Many days the tide does not rise to its full height, and the outgoing steamers are compelled to depart only partly loaded. Every day throughout the year they are compelled to wait for flood tide, losing valuable time, and rendering a regular schedule impossible.

You can well imagine the annoyance and the expense which are occasioned by such conditions. They are felt by passengers, by the mail service, and, above all, by shippers of produce, upon whom the burden finally falls in the form of inferior service and added rates. A partly loaded steamer, can not give such favorable terms as a fully loaded one; a delayed vessel, can not reach her destination so quickly as one that has free egress at all hours of the day and night. I need not picture to you the positive danger of ingress and egress, to and from such a harbor, for the huge liners which carry so much of our precious merchandise. It suffices to point out that this peril also translates itself into economic terms, and like all the other conditions described, will sooner or later act as a check upon our growing export trade, for this trade will progress, or stand still, with the increase in the size of the ocean carriers. Every foot added to the length and depth of these great vessels, makes the journeys of our goods to market cheaper.

Twenty-five years ago the largest ships were of 2,500 tons. To-day they are of 12,000 tons and more, and the rates have been divided by four; it is the law of wholesale, as against retail prices, acting with mathematical accuracy. This law will continue to act in the future until the limit of size is reached, and we can not afford to handicap our commerce, by refusing entrance to the cheapest carriers.

In order that these ships may enter with ease, a permanent improvement has been projected, calling for this expenditure. In proportion to the result obtained the sum is small; for with that outlay, according to the plans of the Government engineers, a channel from 1,200 to 1,500 feet wide and 35 feet deep at low tide, and 44 feet and 6 inches at high tide, can be dredged.

I do not believe that any road, or tunnel, or canal, can be constructed in any part of our country, which will bring the same return for the outlay, as this deep-water avenue. Its influence will be felt immediately in the freight charges at our port, which now amount to some fifteen or twenty millions annually. Supposing the improvement to extend its benefit over a period of twenty years. Its total cost under the estimate will be less than 2 per cent of the freight charges on cargoes leaving and entering Boston during that time. The saving effected by it will certainly be many times the cost.

There is another table of comparisons, which may fairly be made, before you judge the relative magnitude of this appropriation.

What have other harbors received as compared with Boston Harbor, and what has been their return for the outlay? I find that the harbor at Galveston, in twenty-nine years ending with 1899, received $8,528,000 from the National Treasury. The harbor of Savannah, in seventy-three years, received $6,434,869. The harbor of Charleston, in twenty-one years, received $4,302,500. About $20,000,000 has been spent upon these three minor ports, while Boston, in seventy-four years, received less than four millions.

Comparing our trade with theirs, it is difficult to see a reason for such discrimination. Comparing our revenues with theirs, the discrepancy becomes monstrous. During 1899 the revenue collected at the port of Boston amounted to $15,365,858. Those collected at Galveston amounted to $152,693. Those collected at Charleston, $96,014. At this rate it would take Galveston fifty-six years to pay back in revenue receipts what she has obtained from the Government, whereas Boston pays back every seventy-five days all she has received in seventy-five years.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, her customs receipts were about nine millions more than was received during 1899 at Charleston, Galveston, Savannah, New Orleans, Baltimore, San Francisco, Mobile, Los Angeles, and a dozen other large ports combined. Neither to the export trade nor the National Treasury do these three Southern harbors render service in any way comparable to those of Boston. Why, then, should the National Treasury supply to them five times as much for harbor improvements as to Boston? And why should the exporters of the West lend their sanction to such discrimination.

The harbor and land commissioners of Massachusetts, in their annual reports, have repeatedly urged the necessity of this undertaking, and members of the commission have laid the matter before committees of Congress in detail. Compare what is requested for Boston Harbor with what has been expended in the case of some of the ports of Great Britain. In the improvements at Plymouth $7,000,000 has been expended; at Holyhead, $6,500,000; at Portland, $5,000,000; on the Clyde, $30,000,000; on the Mersey, $82,000,000; on Manchester Canal, $80,000,000. The least of these sums is far in excess of what is now asked for Boston.

It is not a blind and costly experiment which you are invited to consider. Local and national interests here coincide in a great commercial opportunity. The goods delayed at the ledge in the outer channel of Boston Harbor are our own goods—the product of our own farms, forests, ranches, and plantations. Every cargo in the large vessels equals a loaded train more than a mile long, and a delay of six hours in its departure is as serious as a corresponding stoppage at some great railway center would be.

Delays and irregular service, partial cargoes and dangerous egress, smaller vessels and higher freight charges—these are the drawbacks which must be suffered if the necessary steps are not taken to remove this obstacle.

Picture the impatience of the great vessels to enter this port of refuge, and the vexatious, tantalizing, and dangerous delays which may be occasioned by the conditions of the tide, compelling the large carriers to toss about for hours, and perhaps unload at mid sea by means of lighters.

These are not the methods by which commerce is stimulated, nor can you promote export trade by discouraging rate reductions, particularly in agricultural products, which, from their great bulk and low price, are the most expensive of all to ship. Speed, cost, and safety, the three great elements of the transportation problem, are involved in this proposition. It is in the light of these three considerations that you should study it. There is no extravagance proposed; no ornamental and unnecessary outlay; nothing which bears the least semblance of political color. The measure is a business proposition, broad, simple, sound, and sane.

It is well within the truth to say that the freight charges upon cargoes leaving and entering Boston Harbor during the next twenty years will be $500,000,000. Out of that figure you can reckon the percentage of the amount which you are now asked to spend.

In voting this sum, you will render it easier for our farmers to compete abroad, and give for all time, a proper naval highway to the second harbor of America.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, my colleagues [Mr. THOMPSON and Mr. BURNETT] have so fully covered the entire field of rhetoric and logic in describing the pressing importance of completing the work of improvement, once happily begun, on the majestic water course which flows through their respective Congressional districts I find that little has been left for me to say upon this interesting subject.

The people whom I have the honor to represent here, living along the Alabama River, of which the Coosa is a tributary, are vitally interested in the uninterrupted progress of this beneficent governmental enterprise, inaugurated several years ago, and upon which $1,200,000 have already been expended. I would remain silent but for the fear that a failure on my part during the consideration of the pending measure briefly to reiterate some of the advantages of commanding superiority which the Coosa (for which no appropriation is made) possesses over many other rivers and streams for the betterment of which this bill makes ample provision might be construed into a lack of personal interest and zeal in the prosecution of this great project.

My colleagues have already referred to a report recently made to the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army by Captain Judson, lately in charge of this work. In the discussion of this question I shall have occasion, further on in my remarks, also to refer to this report, because manifestly this unfavorable and unjust report caused the distinguished chairman of this committee [Mr. BURTON], in answering a question propounded to him last Monday by my colleague [Mr. THOMPSON], to give expression upon the floor of this House to a disparaging opinion as to the practicability of the project to improve the Coosa River, and as a basis of his justification for declaring that "the committee regard the continuance of that improvement as wasteful to the very last degree."

I indulge no extravagant flight, either of romance or fancy, for which common sense would have a right to reprove me when I take occasion thus publicly to declare that the evidences of vast wealth, in multiform and variegated shapes, consisting of the products of the field and forest, of unlimited mineral resources, of coal and iron, of lead and copper, of marble and limestone, of mica and ocher in boundless quantities, as well as abundant gold in undeveloped mines, to be found in diversified and lavish profusion and in close proximity to the Coosa River, extending from Rome, Ga., to Wetumpka, Ala., constitute this Arcadian region, one of the fairest and most favored sections of this great continent.

Captain Hoxie, a gentleman of preeminent ability, the Army engineer to whose skill this work of improvement was first intrusted, adopted as a part of his report to General Casey (made on the 24th day of November, 1888) a statement of facts and deductions therefrom contained in a memorial addressed to Congress by the Coosa River Improvement Convention, which assembled at Montgomery, Ala., March 15, 1887, the summary of which was as follows:

The Coosa River presents the cheapest and most certain water route to the Gulf of Mexico of the coal, iron, cotton, and cereals of a vast extent of country.

The removal of the obstructions which cut in half this river, now navigable for hundreds of miles below and above such obstructions, is a national duty, in view of the commerce it would pour into the Gulf of Mexico. The opening of the Coosa would enable the Government to move munitions of war from the interior to the seaboard safely and expeditiously.

It would place the navigable waters of the Coosa so close to the navigable waters of the Tennessee that water communication between the two streams must certainly follow, and thus afford the Tennessee River and its vast tributaries an outlet to the Gulf by way of the Bay of Mobile.

He was succeeded by Captains Price and Mahan, in the order named. Both of these officers were men of recognized learning and culture. They made a thorough examination and survey of this wondrous stream, of its capabilities and magnificent possibilities, and neither of them hesitated, in terms of high praise, to recommend a continuance of its improvement and as a subject eminently worthy of Congressional consideration.

Next in the line of succession, according to my best recollection, came Captain Flagler, the immediate predecessor of Captain Judson. Before the River and Harbors Committee, in May, 1900, he testified very clearly that a channel of 4 feet uniform depth in this river (which has been denounced by the chairman of this committee as impracticable and as a useless expenditure of the public money) could easily be maintained "when once obtained," and that, in this respect, its channelization was the best he had ever seen on any river in this whole country, that it was "a very permanent river," and that below Rome it was free from the snags and logs that are generally to be found in most Southern streams.

He estimated that with an annual outlay of $1,000,000 these contemplated improvements could be completed in six or seven years, and he strongly recommended the work to be done under contract and carried on continuously at and from four different points along the river, so that there might be "nothing dilatory about it." He demonstrated also that three barges attached to a steamboat, each carrying 400 tons of coal, and the boat itself holding 300 tons, as a part of its cargo, altogether aggregating 1,500 tons, readily obtainable in the Coosa Valley, could easily be transported through these locks in a 4-foot channel and be delivered at Mobile at $1.75 per ton, as against $5, the price per ton charged for this commodity at the Gulf ports for purposes of foreign export.

Assuming his premises to be correct, his conclusion follows irresistibly, "that if coal can be brought down from the Coosa Valley at $1.75, it can certainly be sold at a figure that will increase the national export of coal tremendously." In September, 1900, Captain Flagler was succeeded by Captain Judson, who at that time certainly concurred in the roseate but emphatic views of his predecessor. A few months later, in November, 1900, when certain gentlemen, constituting the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, visited Georgia and Alabama for the purpose of inspecting the Coosa River, Captain Judson himself, while enjoying the hospitalities of the communities adjacent to the Coosa and interested in the completion of this great work upon which the Government had already placed its generous and munificent hand, seated in a sumptuous apartment of the steamer Leona, declared to them unhesitatingly that the Coosa was an unusually favorable stream for improvement—more favorable, indeed, than even "the Mississippi, Red River, Arkansas, and other streams." [Applause.]

The descriptive adjectives then and there employed by him were of an extravagant character. Not to put too fine a point upon his language, he was highly eulogistic, to say the least of it, in his presentation of the splendid possibilities of this grand and noble river—the third most important stream, as you have been told, in the whole Southland. Subsequently, in July, 1901, he made an official report, showing that it would be both wise and profitable for the Government to continue these improvements. Now, it is not my purpose in the slightest degree to animadvert upon this amiable and worthy gentleman in anywise or manner whatever. For him, individually and officially, I entertain sentiments of warm personal esteem. He certainly can not ever complain of any illtreatment, unkindness, or discourtesy at the hand of any Southerner while residing temporarily in the hospitable city of Montgomery, where he indulged the pleasures of business and social intercourse among our best and most cultured citizens.

In view of his recent change of heart, however, we can not restrain an expression of astonishment, tinctured with a feeling akin to indignation, that in his recent report to the Chief Engineer of the Army he should, without rhyme or reason, have recommended an abandonment of all further work on the Coosa River according to the plans and specifications originally adopted for that laudable purpose.

The bill reported by the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the last Congress carried an appropriation of $195,000 for the Coosa River. We all know the tragic fate of that measure. It was talked to death by the retiring Senator from Montana. The untimely demise of this meritorious bill rendered it advisable to call Captain Judson elsewhere—away from his pleasant quarters of indolence and ease. Simultaneously with his change of domicile came a change of opinion, as shown by his report, heretofore alluded to.

Captain Judson does not claim to have made any survey or thorough examination of this river, and in his report he is compelled to admit that his predecessors, without a single exception, regarded the Coosa as preeminently worthy of improvement along its entire route. The Army officers, who preceded him in the charge of this work, were all gentlemen of learning and practical experience. Their recommendations are discarded without a word of explanation. His military brethren courted the fate which attends science and genius. Alas! alas! to their opinions is attached not even a slender claim of respectability. They have been seen and heard, but are now forgotten. They came like the shadows, only to depart.

Their suggestions are as unreliable as ropes of sand. Captain Judson, realizing that his report would put him in an inconsistent attitude, lamely attempts to justify himself by declaring that his change of opinion is due to "a close study and consideration given to the problem of the channelization of the Coosa." It is an old Welch proverb, I believe, which says: "The teeth that bite hardest are those that are out of sight." Captain Judson has gone away from the community where he was the recipient of so many kindnesses and courtesies, and therefore feels less reluctance now than he might under other circumstances to strike the death blow to this cherished enterprise.

I think I can, without doing the slightest injustice to him, give a good, if not sufficient, reason for his change of mind and heart touching this proposition. The great water power in the Tallapoosa River, above Tallassee, Ala., within the past few years has been utilized for electric-light purposes and in the operation of immense machinery. Unquestionably it has proven of enormous value. Generally, when you touch a man's interest you touch his patriotism. Men are ambitious to serve themselves.

It is a fact well known in Montgomery and elsewhere in the State that certain persons, for purposes of their own self-aggrandizement, desirious of turning to profitable account the marvelous water power of the Coosa River for a distance of 100 miles above Wetumpka, sufficient to turn the grandest machinery in the world, and recognizing the difficulty of attracting and controlling capital for this purpose so long as the river remains a navigable stream by legislative enactment, have not hesitated on every occasion, in season and out of season, to recommend a discontinuance of all further governmental improvement, advancing the argument that railroad carriage, by reason of its rapid transit and dispatch, has practically superseded water transportation, and, therefore, this great river, dug by the hand of God himself, could be put to more advantageous service in turning the wheels of machinery than in transporting the country's commerce. The argument is an unfair one, because it omits the fact that the capabilities of this stream are so potential that it could easily and profitably do both of these things without let or hindrance the one to the other.

The heart is a casket whose spring we can not always find; but we are sometimes able by a peculiar divination to become familiar with the thoughts of men and to read the secrets of the human breast. It is an old saying that men are known by the company they keep. We are all creatures of circumstance and passion. Human purposes, in the most trivial as well as in the most important affairs of life, are often controlled by one's surroundings and associations. Straws tell which way the wind blows. He simply became inoculated by these influences. I think it is a fair inference from Captain Judson's report that he was aware of this movement, of the fact that certain enterprising gentlemen and corporations in the South are anxious to develop the superb water power of the Coosa for the reasons I have heretofore in these remarks endeavored to detail, because we find him in that report employing the following significant language, exactly along that line:

Another consideration is as follows: The Coosa River, with a low-water discharge variously estimated at from 2,000 to 5,000 cubic feet per second, and with a fall averaging approximately 3 feet per mile for over 100 miles, would afford for development of extensive water powers the finest opportunity in all the Southern States were it not regarded as a navigable stream for (approximately) 100 miles above Wetumpka. Low dams for purposes of navigation are not economical for development of power.

I dismiss the subject by saying it grieves me to believe that Captain Judson gave the word of promise to our ears, but broke it to our hopes.

Now, in conclusion, I desire to have read as a part of my remarks the following extract of the Coosa River Improvement Convention, above referred to, in order to demonstrate the public necessity and convenience that may be subserved by the continued improvements of the Coosa River, and as particularly valuable and important to the nine counties in Alabama lying immediately upon this stream and cut off from all water communication with the Alabama River, to wit, Elmore, Chilton, Coosa, Shelby, Talladega, St. Clair, Calhoun, Etowah, and Cherokee:

If the people of these counties had cheap and uninterrupted river navigation the growth of cotton, tobacco, and the cereals would be vastly increased. Over one-third of their lands is open and in cultivation. The remaining two-thirds is covered with a virgin forest, capable of supplying Mobile with timber for exportation long after the forests adjacent to the Gulf have been denuded. These forests extend over 1,000,000 acres and contain not less than 3,000 feet to the acre, or a total of 3,000,000,000 feet of lumber, whose gross value may be placed at $30,000,000. The total value of fields and forests is $43,000,000.

The annual present value of farm products is not under $6,000,000. The counties immediately upon the Coosa River at present have iron furnaces whose capacity is not less than 175,000 tons per annum, and the value of whose output is $2,500,000 per annum. They have in process of erection other furnaces which will turn out 1,000 tons per day, giving an annual output valued at over $3,000,000. The furnaces now in operation and in process of erection represent a capital of $2,000,000 and offer employment to 2,000 men, representing a population of 10,000 people. The combined valuation of fields, forests, and present capital in furnaces and mines of these nine Alabama counties will reach $50,000,000.

In addition to these products the Coosa River counties are rich in other mineral products. Lead and copper are found at various points along the river. Marble and limestone are abundant. Talladega marble is noted as rivaling in beauty and purity the most celebrated marble of Italy. Gold is found in Coosa County and elsewhere. At one time the gold mines of that section attracted a large population. The purest kaolin is found in Calhoun and Coosa. Mica appears in Chilton. Red and yellow ocher is found in Elmore. Slate and granite and sandstone are abundant in Talladega, Calhoun, and Shelby. Plumbago exists in Chilton, Coosa, and adjoining counties. Tin has been discovered in Clay and Coosa counties. Emory, asbestus, fire clay, flagging stone, manganese, marls, millstones, phosphates, pyrites, zinc, and other material have been found by the State geologist, Dr. Eugene Smith, very generally distributed throughout this mineral region.

As to the importance of improving that part of the Coosa which lies in the State of Georgia, and of presenting the wondrous advantages of that country situated between Lookout Mountain on the northwest and the gold belt on the southeast, including the fertile valleys traversed by the several tributary rivers and creeks which help to form the mighty Coosa, I leave to the distinguished Representatives from that State, who, I am sure, with the eloquence of truth, will thrill the hardest heart that may beat in the breast of any member of this House who will have the fairness and candor to listen and to learn. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, general debate on this bill is closed by order of the House, and the bill will now be read by sections.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Sullivan Falls, Maine: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, after line 6, insert:

"Said board shall also make an examination of Point Judith Pond with a view to ascertaining whether it is desirable to enlarge the entrance to said pond from the ocean, and if such enlargement is, upon examination, found to be desirable, an estimate of the cost thereof shall be made. The expense of such examination, as well as of the survey, if made, shall be paid from the unexpended balance remaining to the credit of the former entrance to Point Judith Pond."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is to meet a very perplexing situation. Last year we inserted in the bill a provision covering back into the Treasury the amount remaining on hand for the entrance of Point Judith Pond. Representations have been made by citizens in that locality that a possible improvement could be made which would be of very considerable value, and they desire that the money on hand be diverted for that purpose; that is, to make an opening in a different place from the one that formerly existed. The committee thought the best solution of the matter, in view of the fact that a board of engineers will make several examinations in that neighborhood, was to include with their other duties an examination of the entrance to this pond. I will say further that there are some adverse reports upon the old improvement of a former entrance which are quite decisive in their terms. The committee hesitated somewhat about inserting it, but it seemed only fair, in view of the unexpended balance, to make the examination. If there are no further remarks upon the amendment, I ask for a vote.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. In reference to the recommendation of the committee in the paragraph that has just been read, that improvements shall be made in the harbors of refuge at Block Island and Great Salt Pond, Block Island, R. I., and also that a board of engineers shall be appointed by the Secretary of War who shall make an examination of these harbors and also of the harbor of refuge at Point Judith and of Vineyard and Nantucket sounds and the east shore of Cape Cod, with a view to reporting upon the relative merits of each of said harbors or localities for harbors of refuge, and what construction or improvement, if any, is desirable in each, and the cost of such construction or improvement as may seem desirable, I desire to say that there is no more important location on the entire Atlantic coast where improvements in the interests of commerce, relative to both the coastwise and foreign trade, is more imperatively demanded. There is no place on the coast where so many vessels are constantly passing and repassing between New York and Boston and intervening ports, and where it is eminently essential that there should be established harbors of refuge.

This measure has been considered by committees in the past, and they have thought it was wise that some such action should be taken. The proposition to which I have called attention is rather more extensive than those heretofore presented during previous sessions of Congress. It is not in the interest of any State, it is not in the interest of any individual, but it is in the interest and for the advantage of the entire commerce of this country, both foreign and domestic.

There is now but one harbor of refuge of any importance through the entire section of Vineyard and Nantucket sounds, and from the end of Cape Cod at Provincetown along the entire eastern and southern coast of Cape Cod there is but the single harbor of Vineyard Haven. Mr. Chairman, if you will recall the great storm in November, 1898, wherein there was great loss of life and property, this harbor was crowed full of vessels, which were compelled to take refuge there during that great northeast storm.

Had it been the privilege of the committee reporting this bill to have visited this locality there would have been no necessity to urge them to insert a provision embodying the requirements alluded to. Especially could they have had the opportunity to have witnessed the terrific hurricanes which visit this perilous coast, endangering the lives and property of those who travel this great highway of commerce during two-thirds of the year, they would not have had the slightest hesitation in ordering the survey which will certainly foreshadow the improvements which are demanded in this locality hereafter. Some doubt of the necessity for this improvement existed in the minds of the committee reporting this bill, and for the information of the members now considering this paragraph, and for general information, I desire to call attention to one location for a harbor of refuge on the eastern coast of Cape Cod, between Provincetown, at the north end of Cape Cod, and Monomoy Point, at the extreme southern end of the same, at Pleasant Bay, in the town of Orleans. This has been especially recommended by resolutions adopted by the legislature of the State of Massachusetts and filed with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the year 1900.

In justification of the necessity for this harbor, I cite the following facts obtained from the officers of the Life-Saving Service relative to wrecks and casualties that have occurred within the limited space referred to on this coast since July 1, 1895, and not including the recent storm, being within the period of the last six years and eight months: Number of wrecks and casualties, 205; amount of property involved, including vessels and cargoes, $3,770,355; property loss, $574,710; number of lives lost, 55, and number of vessels totally lost, 58. These statistics are appalling in every feature.

In the great storm of November, 1898, the steamer Portland is supposed to have foundered off this coast, and all on board were lost.

On Monday last, at about the hour of the assembling of Congress, a terrific storm occurred at Monomoy Point and, while all seemed peaceful and harmonious here, vessels lying stranded off this dangerous coast were in the direst peril and danger, and an attempt was made by the keeper and crew of the Monomoy Life-Saving Station to rescue men in danger of perishing because of the terrible storm raging there. Had there been a harbor of refuge at Pleasant Bay, the great barges stranded off the coast might have found a place of safety, and thus valuable property and the lives of noble men might have been saved. The heroic men comprising the keeper and six surfmen, in response to the call of distress from the stranded barges, entered the seething waters to attempt the rescue of six persons whose lives were in peril. Although these men were accustomed to the dangers of the sea and were undaunted by the hardships that awaited them, they took their lives in their hands to save the lives of their fellow-men. Heroic as is the work of the soldier as he enters the field of battle and perils his life to maintain his country's honor, what can compare with the sacrifice and heroism of these men who entered upon their dangerous undertaking, risking their lives to save the lives of others?

Still, previous Congresses have hesitated to provide for the protection of the families of the men who gave up their lives and their dearest possessions in the service of the Government, whose honor they maintained by their heroic devotion to duty. May we not hope that before the expiration of the present session of Congress some of the bills now pending which make suitable provision for the care of the afflicted families of the men who lose their lives or are permanently disabled in this important service will be enacted into law? Another evidence of the importance of this location is the fact that the first light-house which engages the attention of vessels from foreign ports entering this country is Cape Cod or Highland Light. This light has recently been improved by substituting a powerful flashing light for the fixed white light which had heretofore designated this station. The legislation securing this improvement was first presented in Congress by myself, and it was enacted on the recommendation of the Boston Chamber of Commerce and in response to the desires of the maritime interests of the nation.

There are other natural harbors lying along Nantucket and Vineyard sounds, including Nantucket, Edgartown, Hyannis, and Vineyard Haven, which are subject to improvement and to which attention is also called. These should receive the attention of the Board of Engineers, under the direction of the Secretary of War, and it is my earnest hope that in the interests of the vast amount of commerce which passes along this great water highway the investigation will be most thorough and complete, and that the recommendations which this examining board shall render the succeeding sessions of Congress will be adopted and suitable harbors of refuge for the protection of life and property will be provided for this important thoroughfare.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Gowanus Creek Channel, New York: Completing improvement, $20,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9 insert as a new paragraph, after the word "dollars," in line 16, the following:

"Improving Buttermilk Channel, New York Harbor, New York, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 122, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, so as to provide a channel 40 feet deep and 1,200 feet wide, $300,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be required to prosecute said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,500,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is in the exact language of the bill which passed the House at the last session of Congress. It provides for the deepening and widening of Buttermilk Channel, one of three channels in the harbor of New York which connect the Narrows with the East River. This item was in the last river and harbor bill reported to Congress. It is difficult to understand why it is not in the present bill. At the last session there was no dissension in the committee as to the merit and necessity of this improvement; on the contrary, the committee was convinced that the improvement should be authorized and made at once.

Unavoidably I was detained from the House when the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors made his opening speech upon this bill, and thus prevented from interrogating him about the omission of the item proposed in the pending amendment. In a careful reading of the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], however, I have noticed that he stated that some 20 or 30 "unimportant streams" had been omitted from the bill this year. While it has been impossible for me to examine the many items in the bill, I believe it safe to say that no project of similar extent and importance to that for the improvement of Buttermilk Channel, provided in the bill that failed in the last session of Congress, has been excluded from the pending bill.

To those familiar with the conditions at the harbor of New York the action of the committee is incomprehensible. The merit of this improvement is not questioned; its necessity is conceded. What excuse is there, then, for neglecting to provide for so important a project?

Since 1880 a number of independent projects for the improvement of the harbor of New York have been initiated and completed. To appreciate more thoroughly what has been done, a general outline of the harbor, its channels, and the improvements made will probably be beneficial. From the Battery, at the lower end of the island of Manhattan, out through the Narrows to the lower bay, a distance of about 9 miles, there is a natural channel. It is fairly broad and unobstructed, with 45 feet or more water at mean low tide. The lower bay is separated from the deep water of the ocean by a bar from 2 to 5 miles in width. This bar extends from Sandy Hook to the west end of Coney Island, a distance of 7 miles. The natural channels that cross this bar, separated from one another by sand shoals, in their order from the north or Coney Island shore, are thus described in the report of the United States Army engineers:

(1) The Coney Island channel, straight, narrow, with a general depth of 20 feet, except at the west end, where the available depth is but 10 feet. South of this channel lies a shoal known as East Bank, with least depth of 6 feet.

(2) The Fourteen-foot channel, a curving channel with considerable depths in the west part, but with only 15 feet depth at the eastern end. To the south lies a shoal with 5½ feet least depth.

(3) The East channel, a broad, nearly straight, channel, of 30 feet depth or more in the western part, separated from deep water on the east by a bar having only 19 feet depth. South of this channel lies Romer shoal, with 3 feet least depth.

(4) The Swash channel, with 22 feet depth in a narrow channel. To the south lies a shoal called Flynns Knoll, with least depth of 11 feet.

(5) The Bayside channel, formerly called Main channel, a broad channel passing close to the north shore of Sandy Hook, with natural depth of 28 feet.

The Swash and Bayside channels, with the southern part of the Main Ship Channel, which is on the west side of the bar, form nearly an equilateral triangle, the two first named intersecting in a deep hole of considerable area and more than halfway across the bar. Outside this hole the bar is crossed by two channels, the north, called Gedney Channel, about 1½ miles long, to deep water, and the south, called South Channel, somewhat longer than the Gedney, and extending almost in continuation of the Swash Channel. Gedney and South channels both had natural depths of 24 feet, and thus an available low-water depth of 23.3 feet from the ocean to the lower wharves of New York City, a distance of 21 miles, was afforded by natural channels. Under the various projects adopted since 1880 a channel 1,000 feet wide and 30 feet deep at mean low water has been made and completed.

Buttermilk Channel, with the Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels, skirts the shore of Brooklyn, as already stated, and connects the Narrows with the East River, The Main Channel from the Narrows to the East River passes to the west and northwest of Governors Island. The three channels just mentioned go the other side of it. Prior to 1896, under two projects, the Buttermilk Channel and the Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels were improved. In 1896 the projects were consolidated, and the improvement then authorized, the deepening of the channels to 26 feet at mean low water and of varying widths, was completed in 1899.

In 1899 the House committee included in the bill of that year an appropriation of $4,500,000 for the deepening of the East, now known as Ambrose, Channel to 40 feet at mean low water, and the widening of the same to 2,000 feet. This was to be a deep, straight channel to the ocean. The Senate, however, reduced the appropriation to $4,000,000 and adopted a project to make Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels 1,200 feet wide and 40 feet deep at mean low water. The bill passed in that shape. It is difficult to understand the reasons that prompted Congress to eliminate Buttermilk Channel at that time. Under the projects previously adopted and completed, a through channel, with a depth of 26 feet at mean low water, had been made from the Narrows to the East River along the westerly shore of Brooklyn. All the wharves and warehouses were located on Buttermilk Channel.

The accommodations for docking along Red Hook and Bay Ridge channels are very meager, and without corresponding depth of water in Buttermilk Channel the benefits resulting from the expenditure of the $2,500,000 appropriated to deepen the Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels will be merely local. If any benefit commensurate with the amount to be expended is to be had, it is absolutely necessary that Buttermilk Channel be given the same depth at mean low water as the Red Hook and Bay Ridge channels.

A better idea of the importance of Buttermilk Channel can be formed by considering for a moment some statistics. It is true that figures are usually uninteresting, but often they are instructive and impressive. In 1899 statistics of the freight and its value as well as the number of vessels that were loaded and unloaded along the wharves of Buttermilk Channel were compiled. I submit them, confident that this committee will be amazed at their statement, especially when it is remembered that this channel is not more than 2½ miles in length:

[a] No record.

It may be said, however—indeed, I have heard it asserted with tiresome frequency—that New York has had more than its share of the sums heretofore appropriated for harbor improvements. Careful investigation has convinced me that there is no justification for such statements. In 1899 the late Mr. Ambrose, in a statement submitted to the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, pointed out that of the $296,000,000 appropriated for the improvement of rivers and harbors, $4,047,000 had been authorized for the improvement of New York Harbor. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], in a statement of the amounts appropriated for rivers and harbors, Post-Office Department, and five other branches of the public service from 1879 to 1902, inclusive, shows that the amount appropriated for rivers and harbors is $301,874,130.06. Since the statement of Mr. Ambrose was prepared, $6,500,000 has been set aside for New York Harbor (although only about $2,000,000 has been appropriated), in all $10,547,000, or about 3 per cent of the total appropriations.

The total exports of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1901, were valued at $1,487,764,991. Of that sum $529,592,978 worth were shipped from the port of New York. The imports of the United States for the same year were $823,172,165, of which $527,259,906 arrived at New York. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LAWRENCE] yesterday read the following summary tables of commerce for the year ending June 30, 1901, prepared by the chief of the bureau of statistics of the Treasury Department, to show the rank to which the great ports of the country are entitled as shown by the value of their aggregate export and import trade:

Port.	Imports.	Exports.	Total.
New York	$527,259,906	$529,592,978	$1,056,852,884
Boston	61,452,370	143,708,232	205,160,602
New Orleans	20,462,307	152,776,599	173,238,906
Philadelphia	48,045,443	79,354,025	127,397,468
Baltimore	18,898,475	106,239,081	125,138,556
Galveston	953,801	101,857,300	102,811,101
San Francisco	35,161,753	34,596,792	69,756,545
Savannah	645,067	46,738,967	47,384,034
Newport News	4,090,451	32,567,912	36,658,363

These figures show that the total value of the exports and imports of the port that ranks next to New York, Boston, is only about 20 per cent of the value of those of New York, while the combined value of the imports and exports of Boston, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Galveston, San Francisco, Savannah, and Newport News, the eight ports that rank next after New York, is not within 20 per cent of the value of the imports and exports of New York.

These figures are not cited in derogation of other ports than New York. No complaint against appropriations for the improvement of these harbors is made by me. I call attention to these figures in order to emphasize the enormous trade of New York and to contrast its value with the sums set aside for the improvement of its harbor.

The reports of the Army engineers show, too, that since the improvements of the harbor were begun, in 1886, the value of the foreign trade has increased $337,186,346. The entire cost of the improvements to date is less than two-thirds of 1 per cent of the increase in annual value of the foreign commerce of the port since the improvements were begun, and less than one-sixth of 1 per cent of the value of the present foreign commerce each year.

In view of these figures, Mr. Chairman, I repeat that it is remarkable that the committee did not include in this bill an appropriation for the improvement of Buttermilk Channel.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent to continue my remarks.

Mr. SULZER. I ask that my colleague's time be extended for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have been told, and I expect to hear it repeated, that the commercial interests of New York have evinced no interest in this improvement; that they are indifferent to it; that the matter has not been pressed. This is a remarkable assertion, yet it has been made. Nevertheless, the commercial interests of New York expressed themselves emphatically in favor of this project, and knowledge of their action was brought to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in no uncertain way. The Buttermilk Channel improvement has been indorsed by the municipal council of the city of New York, the New York Cotton Exchange, the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, the Maritime Association of the Port of New York, the New York Produce Exchange, the Manufacturers' Association of New York, and the New York Coffee Exchange.

These organizations are, to say the least, fairly representative of the commercial interests of New York. It is true that large delegations did not appear before the committee during the present session to urge this appropriation. It is difficult to believe that the committee would have cared to have given time for such a purpose. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors consists of 17 members. Fifteen of the present committee were members of it during the last Congress, and heard convincing arguments of the importance and necessity of this project. Without a dissenting voice the committee recommended the appropriation contained in the amendment just offered by me. Can anyone seriously urge that, Barkis like, the committee was willing, but wished to be coaxed to make this appropriation?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent for ten minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks for ten minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I called attention, in the last session, when the bill was under consideration, to the fact that the chairman of the committee on harbors and shipping of the Chamber of Commerce and the president of the pilot commissioners of the port of New York were asked by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to designate which of two projects pending before the committee was more important, the improvement of Buttermilk Channel or the removal of the well-known obstacle to navigation in New York Harbor, the Diamond Reef, said:

> I do not hesitate to say that the latter (referring to the Buttermilk Channel improvement) should receive immediate attention, even if it necessitates the temporary deferring of the Diamond Reef works. The latter is a well-known danger, and while its removal is demanded, temporary extension of time thereon will not be attended with serious delay. The other, Buttermilk Channel, is now peremptorily demanded.

When the bill was under consideration in the House last year, my colleague from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER] in speaking to this project used the following language:

> Of what use would be the proposed new channel 2,000 feet wide and 40 feet deep if vessels were unable to reach the wharves after entering the bay? If a new outer channel is needed to admit the great boats of twelve, thirteen, and fifteen thousand tons burden, other interior channels are needed to take them to the upper harbor.

The committee at the last session was convinced that this was a proper project. No pretense is made that the committee was then in error. The importance of this project was emphasized several years since, when, by reason of a great fire on the Jersey shore, the North German Lloyd Company was compelled to seek dockage on the Brooklyn water front. After a number of ineffectual efforts to float their vessels when loaded through Buttermilk Channel they were compelled to abandon their docks and seek new wharves on the Jersey shore. The press of to-day, Mr. Chairman, contains an account of another great fire on that shore. I do not know its extent. It may be as extensive as the recent fire which horrified the country. It calls attention to the needs of the harbor. Traffic is congesting in the Lower Hudson. The committee points out that over 15,000,000 tons of freight is carried yearly on the Hudson River. Most of it comes to the lower part of the city. Lack of sufficient water in such places as Buttermilk Channel compels all vessels drawing over 24 feet to dock in that congested district. The remedy, the imperative need of the harbor, is more water along the Brooklyn front.

I have no opposition to make to this bill. I believe it proper to make liberal expenditures in order to improve the harbors and great rivers of the country, which are the highways of commerce. Money so spent is well expended, since it contributes to the prosperity of the people. Yet, Mr. Chairman, I must protest in the name of the great commercial interests of the city of New York against the discrimination—the unjust discrimination, in my opinion—that has been made against the gateway of the New World. In a bill that authorizes the expenditure of $24,014,107 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and $36,674,160 thereafter, New York Harbor should in fairness be given more than $100,000 for a subsidiary channel, and $25,000 more for other minor improvements.

New York is entitled to more liberal treatment; it should receive more consideration. For whose benefit are the channels in the harbor of New York improved? Certainly residents of New York receive some benefit; but do not forget that New York is merely a gateway—the great land terminus of the country—to which the products of every section of the country are sent for shipment abroad. The development and maintenance of its magnificent harbor is a national, not a local, improvement. It is for the benefit of the commerce of the whole country. Gentlemen from the interior continually clamor for cheaper freights. How can lower freights be expected if facilities at the great ports of the country are denied?

New York with its superb natural facilities needs but little. Some improvements, however, demand immediate attention. None is more pressing than the deepening of Buttermilk Channel. Its wharves and warehouses constitute the most magnificent system in the entire harbor. Lack of water cripples the efficiency of the plant in existence for years. Six and one-half millions have been authorized to permit vessels of the greatest draft and tonnage to come within sight of this system. Do not deny the money that will enable them to reach the docks. Permit them to take advantage of facilities at hand, and make effective the appropriations already made by Congress for the Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels.

I appeal to the chairman of the committee to make no objection to this amendment. It is identical with the provision inserted in the river and harbor bill of the last session. New York needs this appropriation; she deserves it. The commercial interests of the country deserve it. The committee concedes its propriety and necessity. Then why refuse it? [Applause.]

Mr. REEVES. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has not said and can not say more than any member of this committee would say in praise of the great harbor of New York; but notwithstanding that fact, there are some other reasons why it is unwise, as we think, to make this appropriation at this time. The truth is, in my judgment—and I think in that opinion many, if not all, of the members of this committee concur—that it would have been better to have improved the Buttermilk Channel than to have improved the Bay Ridge Channel, in New York Harbor; but, notwithstanding the opinion of members of the committee on that subject, that was not what the people of New York City asked for and wanted. Three years ago they pressed upon us, with a determination that could not be withstood, their desire for the improvement of Bay Ridge Channel to the exclusion of Buttermilk Channel, and we ultimately gave them what they wanted—the improvement of the Bay Ridge Channel.

Last year when we prepared the bill that failed of passage in the Senate, still recognizing the commercial advantages of the Buttermilk Channel the committee of the House again offered the improvement of this channel, but when it came to the Senate the interests of New York made their presentations there, with the result that the Senate cut down the appropriation that the House committee had authorized, of $300,000 in cash and a million and a half of authorization, reducing the amount to $112,500, accepting the opinion of the maritime interests of the city of New York as given to that committee, that they were not interested at this time in the improvement of the Buttermilk Channel.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. REEVES. Yes; if it is brief.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentlemank now that the Senate committee had no hearings at the last session and that the Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels were provided for, not by the House committee, but by the Senate committee?

Mr. REEVES. I do not know whether the Committee on Commerce gave hearings or not. The gentleman suggested that the House committee did give hearings last winter. In that he is mistaken. We were in favor of the improvement of this channel because we thought it a valuable one, but when we learned that the commercial interests of New York were not requiring this, but were requiring the other, we acquiesced in that state of affairs, and this winter in the preparation of this bill we felt that with the vast amount of demand for river and harbor improvement we would not crowd upon the city of New York an improvement that cost $1,800,0000, unless there was at least somebody representing the commercial interests of the city to say to us that they wanted it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. REEVES. Now, I can not yield to the gentleman. I have only five minutes, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can get all the time he wants.

Mr. REEVES. I should rather not be interrupted for the moment. The gentleman had fifteen minutes, and that ought to be sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I just wished to correct the gentleman's statement. He is mistaken in the statement that he made.

Mr. REEVES. I do not care for your correction. I am not speaking outside of my own personal knowledge. I want to say to the gentleman that the committee has provided, if my memory serves me right, $2,400,000 for the improvement of Bay Ridge Channel, that is now in process of improvement in New York Harbor.

Mr. BURTON. Two million five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. REEVES. The chairman corrects me by saying it is $2,500,000 instead of $2,400,000. In addition to that, we are providing for a channel leading out to deep water at a cost, in round numbers, of $4,000,000, and we do not think it is fair to other parts of the country to go any further in that direction at this time in New York Harbor. We do not think it is fair treatment of the other commercial interests of the country to put any more money in New York Harbor at this particular time, and we shall ask the committee to sustain that action.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I only want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that during the last Congress the Buttermilk Channel project was indorsed by resolutions which were filed with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors from the municipal council of the city of New York, the New York Cotton Exchange, the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, the Maritime Association of the port of New York, the New York Produce Exchange, the Manufacturers' Association of New York, and the Coffee Exchange of New York. Practically every commercial body in the city of New York passed formal resolutions in favor of the Buttermilk Channel, and copies of those resolutions were filed with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, it is very singular that these resolutions were not forwarded until the committee had practically made up the bill and agreed on every item in it. I favored this improvement last winter, but when this winter came I found the very persons who had been most strenuous in its advocacy did not want it placed on the bill. I may say that I courted advocacy for this improvement. I asked persons why it was that we heard nothing about Buttermilk Channel. I spoke to at least half a dozen who were here who would naturally be interested.

In the early portion of the session I spoke with the gentleman from Greater New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], and he said, "Why, yes; it ought to be done." But I do not at this time recollect any other member of this House or any man engaged in business in New York who spoke until recently in behalf of this improvement. On the other hand, several gentlemen who were here for weeks last winter advocating it said that it was not now important. I do not think you can expect the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to go groping around to find some place to put money. [Laughter.] I have always regarded this as an important improvement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know the gentleman does not wish to do me an injustice. This channel runs along the borders of my district. I wish the gentleman to recollect that I went to the gentleman myself, and not that he came to me, about this item of the bill.

Mr. BURTON. Possibly I had some conversation with the gentleman on other than one occasion. The gentleman is in favor of the improvement, and cordially in favor of it; and he is the only member of the House who, as I recollect, spoke in favor of it.

One gentleman who advocated it last winter said the reason why it was not now required was because the boats that had moved from Hoboken to the Brooklyn water front after the fire had now moved back, and also that the Brooklyn Warehouse Company, if that is the name by which it is called, had reorganized, and that they found that, with their available capital, they were not able to dredge the space between their piers to a greater depth than 26 feet, a depth which the channel has now. It seems to me that the people of the city of New York, in the influences brought to bear upon Congress, have made for the present a deliberate choice between Buttermilk Channel and that at Bay Ridge. In 1899 we placed upon the bill in the House an appropriation and authorization of $4,500,000 for the deep channel to the sea.

The House recommended only 35 feet, stating their reasons in the report of the committee, which were these: That the local engineer said that in any event he would dig to 35 feet first and later dig the remaining 5 feet to 40 feet, and that it would cost no more to first dig the 35 feet and then the additional 5 feet to 40 feet than to dig 40 feet in the first instance. In that form the bill went from this House to the Senate, where they amended it, cutting down our authorization and appropriation of $4,500,000 to $4,000,000, but providing that the channel should be 40 feet deep.

By a lucky stroke, for that is what it was, a contractor was found who offered for $4,000,000 to dredge to 40 feet. So the 5 feet more provided for by the Senate was contracted for with $510,000 (I think the original amount was $4,510,000, instead of $4,500,000) less than the estimate for 35 feet, which was the basis of the provision in the House bill. There was another amendment which was put on in the Senate, to the effect that $2,500,000 should be appropriated or authorized for Bay Ridge channel. This makes $6,500,000 for that harbor. Now, it seems to me that we ought not to be pressed to provide for another interior channel in that locality in the very next bill, after having appropriated or authorized $2,500,000 in 1899 for Bay Ridge.

I want to call attention to one feature of the gentleman's proposition. What use is there in dredging an interior channel 40 feet deep in the harbor of New York when the 40 feet deep channel to the sea is at least two years, and more likely three or four, or possibly five years, away? Why should you dig up there at the wharf 40 feet when no boat drawing 40 feet can go out to the sea? There is an absurdity on the face of that proposition. In view of all the circumstances, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this amendment should be voted down, and let this channel have recognition at a later time.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, as the member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, from New York, I desire to say to my colleague [Mr. FITZGERALD] that early in the session I corresponded with the gentleman in New York who a year ago had interested himself in Buttermilk Channel, advising him of the hearings before the committee, and suggesting the wisdom of bringing his friends to restate the Buttermilk Channel proposition. He replied that they would want nothing for Buttermilk Channel.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the gentleman mention the name of this person from New York.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I did not mention it, and I do not care to mention it, because it is immaterial.

Mr. SULZER. Then you should not refer to it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Within a week he visited this city and stated that they did not care to press the matter, giving the reasons which have been elaborately set forth by the chairman of the committee. I want to add that my colleague [Mr. FITZGERALD] spoke to me about the matter, showed his interest in it, and was desirous that something should be done. I stated the facts to him fully, and should have been glad to meet his desire if, under the circumstances, the committee had thought it desirable. He certainly did his part in the work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to ask if the gentleman he refers to was an official of the city of New York or an official of any commercial body?

Mr. ALEXANDER. He was the gentleman who presented the matter to us last winter and who accompanied the several delegations from New York. He was present before the committee at all hearings in regard to Buttermilk Channel.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman know at that time this man had a special interest in the matter, and at this session he has none?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not know about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 27, noes 73.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows.

Improving Breton Bay and Patuxent River, Maryland, in accordance with the reports submitted in House Documents numbered respectively 209, the larger project therein described being intended, and 170, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, $9,000.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, lines 20 and 21, strike out "the larger project therein described being intended," (with the comma) and insert after the words "first session," in line 22, the following: "the larger projects therein described being intended," (with the comma).

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I will say that for each of these projects there are two estimates. As originally drawn the bill designated the larger one only for the former of the two. It should apply to each, and this amendment is intended to adopt the larger projects.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Improving Brunswick Harbor, outer bar, and inner harbor, Georgia: Continuing improvement, $140,000, of which not exceeding $40,000 may be expended on the outer bar in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 355, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session. The improvement of the inner harbor shall be made in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 40, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session. Of the amount herein appropriated, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used to maintain the present depth of water in Academy Creek to the old Altamaha Canal.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to introduce two amendments to that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 17, strike out the words "three hundred and fifty-five" and insert the words "one hundred and seventy-nine."

Strike out the word "first," in line 14, and insert the word "second."

After line 14 insert (striking out the period and inserting a comma) "the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, apply the amount expended on the outer bar upon either of the routes described in said report."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, the reason for that is that there are two reports—one a preliminary and one a final report. It seemed best to designate the early or preliminary report. There are also two routes over the outer bar, for one of which the expense is $40,820 and the other a trifle under $65,000. It seems best to give the Secretary of War discretion to expend this amount on either of these two routes. These are the reasons for these two amendments. I ask unanimous consent that they may be voted on in gross.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the two amendments will be voted on together. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The amendments were considered, and agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

C. P. Goodyear, his heirs and assigns, shall be paid for 50 feet excess of width over the contract width of 24 feet depth at mean high tide on the outer bar of Brunswick, Ga., obtained, as shown by the report of H. L. Marinden, the officer detailed to make survey of such work, made to the Secretary of War on the 4th day of December, 1899, in the same proportion as he was paid for 100 feet widths of such depths, namely, $20,000; and that for the 50 feet excess of width over contract width of 25 feet depth at mean high tide, shown by said report, he or they shall be paid in the same proportion as he was paid for 100 feet width of 25 feet depth, namely, $25,000.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I think a word of explanation is due the committee upon this paragraph. The two amounts, one of $20,000 and the one of $25,000, aggregate $45,000. This is a reminiscence of one of the most bitter controversies ever had before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. When I first was a member, in 1896, this controversy commenced, and it has continued ever since. I should say that this appropriation is not based upon any legal claim, but upon an equitable claim. Some years ago an estimate was made by the Government engineer in charge of that district, who at that time was Capt. Oberlin M. Carter, that it would cost $2,718,815 to secure a channel across this bar. This plan contemplated the building of two parallel jetties.

In view of the great expense Congress did not think it best to undertake the improvement, as the benefit would not be commensurate with the cost. C. P. Goodyear, an attorney, who had gone from New England to Brunswick, having confidence in the future of that port, offered to undertake, by dredging alone, without the construction of the jetties, to obtain a suitable channel across the bar. It was also a part of the method which he intended to adopt that dynamite should be used in the dredging. A contingent arrangement was made and included in divers river and harbor acts, by which he was to attempt to secure the channel sought, and if he did not obtain certain results he was to receive no pay. He did obtain these results, and has received $220,000, as against $2,718,815, which it was assumed that this channel would cost. As a result, the port of Brunswick has experienced a growth equal to that of any port on the Atlantic, Gulf, or the Pacific coasts.

In doing this work Mr. Goodyear obtained a channel materially in excess of that which he agreed to obtain for the $220,000. His contract was to have a channel 24 feet deep, 200 feet wide, and over the central portion of this channel 25 feet deep and 100 feet wide. What he did obtain was a navigable channel 24 feet deep with a minimum width of 256 feet—56 feet more than his contract called for—and a mean width of 464 feet. In the central portion he obtained a navigable channel 25 feet deep, with a minimum width of 150 feet, against 100 feet, which he had agreed to obtain, and a mean width of 305 feet. This additional channel width which he obtained is part of a larger project for the improvement of that channel—that is to say, whatever width he obtained in excess of what he agreed to obtain is a part, and an essential part, of this larger project, which otherwise would have to be dredged out by the Government.

It may be said, also, that contrary to the opinion of Captain Carter at that time to the effect that jetties were required, Mr. Goodyear proved that the work could be done, and much more economically done, by dredging alone. The Government engineers can not be held responsible for Captain Carter's action or recommendation in this matter. They have since united in the opinion that here and elsewhere the better course in such cases is to use the dredge and not rely on the much more expensive system of constructing jetties.

So that the equitable claim of Mr. Goodyear is that he has obtained part of a channel that would have to be obtained by the Government, and that he tried an experiment which was decried by the local engineer at the time, but which has since proved altogether successful.

It may be further said that in the accomplishment of the work on this channel Mr. Goodyear expended, as is shown to the satisfaction of the committee, an amount very much in excess of $220,000.

With this explanation, which I think is due to the committee, we desire that this provision shall receive the consideration of the Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE], who is more familiar than I am with this transaction, would perhaps like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that no amendment has been offered.

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There is very little to be added to the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The Government of the United States has received as much for the amount appropriated in this item as it will receive from almost any other provision of this bill. Mr. Goodyear, for whom the appropriation is made, was not an engineer. In 1890 he was a practicing attorney at Brunswick. He was interested, however, in the improvement of his city. The question of the improvement of the harbor was being considered. He was appointed chairman of a committee of public-spirited citizens selected to examine into the question of the means and methods of securing the needed improvement.

As has been said, Congress passed provision requiring an examination and an estimate for such improvement. The estimates made in pursuance of that provision were something over $2,700,000. This large amount arrested the attention of Congress. Captain Goodyear believed so large an appropriation unnecessary. He thought the entire plan unwise. In the course of numerous investigations and experiments, which as a public-spirited citizen he had made, he had discovered that there was a shorter channel, formerly used, but which had been stopped up. He believed that this channel could be reopened at a comparatively small cost, and he proposed that this be done. The engineering officers did not receive his suggestion very favorably. Finally, in order to attest his good faith, he offered to undertake the improvement on the plan of "no cure, no pay." The Government entered into a contract with him in which his pay was to depend upon his success. There were various contracts entered into from time to time. He believed that contracts would probably be given to him to secure the entire improvement. The Government, however, eventually stopped the work under the contract with Captain Goodyear; but when an account of stock was taken as to what had been done, it was discovered that Captain Goodyear had secured a greater depth and width of channel than his contract provided for.

The Government now proposes to utilize the work done by him. It is proposed to carry out the improvement and extend it, taking advantage of the improvements made by Captain Goodyear. The committee simply proposes to pay him for work that he has done—to repay him for the amount he has expended—not for all that he has done, but to the extent that the Government now proposes to utilize his work.

It was shown before the committee that when Captain Goodyear commenced these improvements in the interest of the public, he was a fairly prosperous attorney with some means to his credit; that he devoted his time and means to this improvement, and is now a bankrupt. As the Government proposes now to take advantage of what was accomplished through his time and labor and means, it ought at least to pay him the minimum value of the work which it is proposed to utilize.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Black River (Lorain), Ohio: For repairs and maintenance, $6,000.

Mr. SKILES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire of the distinguished chairman [Mr. BURTON] as to whether there is a continuing contract at Black River (Lorain), the amount of the same, if there is, what part has been expended, and the condition of the improvements at the present time?

Mr. BURTON. There is; and I will say to the gentleman that where a continuing contract is authorized for a locality, it is not customary to make any considerable appropriation year by year for maintenance, because the contract made, known as a continuing contract, includes maintenance to the end of the time required for completing the work. As an illustration, some years ago a continuing contract was made for the Patapsco River below Baltimore. The work will not be finished until October of this year. Until that date all the work of maintenance is done by the contractor who has that continuing contract.

In this case there was an amount authorized of $600,000 by the act of 1899, and there has been of that already appropriated $125,000. The estimates for the coming year are $300,000. The whole or a larger part of that will no doubt be appropriated for Lorain Harbor in the sundry civil bill. This amount of $6,000 was included in this bill as a precautionary measure, because some information was contained in the report of the engineers to the effect that other work outside of that in the continuing contract might require attention. Six thousand dollars is the full amount recommended by the Chief of Engineers for this project.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman withdraws the pro forma amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the chairman of this committee [Mr. BURTON] would intentionally do any member of this House an injustice in anything that he would say in discussing this bill or any other bill, so far as that is concerned. The gentleman knows that more than once on the floor of this House I have spoken of him in complimentary terms, and he knows that he has my best wishes; but I feel that what the gentleman has said has in effect done me an injustice, and it consists in this:

The gentleman alluded to a bill that I had introduced in the House (H. R. 3167) in his remarks and read a portion of it. I have the report of what the gentleman said here, but I will not stop to read it. He said in his speech, however, that the bill I introduced was for the completion of Lock No. 1 and at Harpeth. I shall read the bill to show that the gentleman did not exactly understand the bill. The bill reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to complete the construction of the locks and dams on the Cumberland River below Nashville, Tenn., as early as practicable and open the same to deep-water navigation, and for this purpose the sum of $55,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the completion of the excavations for the approaches to Lock No. 1 and the necessary bank protection about said lock and dam; and the sum of $90,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the completion of Lock A at Harpeth Shoals; that the work at both locks be prosecuted at once to early completion, but that the work on the approaches and dams of Lock No. 1 be completed before the water from Lock A is backed up to interfere with said work.

Mr. Chairman, the official report of the engineer suggests that this Lock 1 be completed before the work is completed at Harpeth Shoals to prevent the water from backing up from Harpeth Shoals over the locality where Lock 1 is being located; but you will notice that the $55,000 was to pay for the "completion of the excavations for the approaches to Lock No. 1 and the necessary bank protection about such lock and dam." This was for "excavations and bank protection."

Mr. Chairman, having in my mind some doubt as to whether or not I had the proper amounts in the bill which I had introduced, and, indeed, whether or not the distinguished chairman had it in his mind as to exactly what amount of money should be appropriated for completing the Lock A at Harpeth Shoals and Lock No. 1, I did myself the honor of calling upon the distinguished gentleman and asking him not what they were going to put in the bill for the Cumberland, because that would have been impertinent and he would not have answered me, but, in a general way, what he thought would be necessary to complete those two locks, believing then, as the case has proved to be, that the committee would report an appropriation for Lock A and Lock No. 1, and no more.

The chairman of the committee [Mr. BURTON] replied that he had a letter from the engineer stating what amounts were necessary to complete Locks A and No. 1; that he would look it up by the next day and for me to call then, which I did, and he said he had failed to find the letter and that he would write to the engineer at once for the desired information and asked me to call again, which I did, but he still had not received a reply. The third time I called he had received a reply.

This is the first time, Mr. Chairman, that I have ever seen the gentleman from Ohio unable to answer promptly and clearly any question touching upon the river and harbor bill, but in this case he failed. Surely I may be excused for not knowing myself, not being a member of that committee. We discussed at the first meeting the probability that the price of labor and material had risen in the last year or two and the appropriation would have to be larger than heretofore; hence we both agreed that we should hear from the engineer before final action in the matter.

The letter received from the engineer I hold in my hand and will read, as follows:

WASHINGTON, February 14, 1902.

Hon. T. E. BURTON,
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
United States House of Representatives.

SIR: In compliance with your verbal request I give herewith copy of a telegram sent you December 13, 1900:

"Replying to your letter of December 8, I have to say that if work is done by contract $175,000 will be required for completion of lock and dam at Harpeth Shoals and $100,000 for Lock and Dam No. 1, both on Cumberland River. The work can probably be done cheaper if carried on by day labor and use of Government plant. Funds for these works are practically exhausted.

"JOHN M. WILSON,
"Chief of Engineers."

Map of river showing location of Harpeth Shoals and Lock No. 1 faces page 2156, part 3, Annual Report of 1890.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. L. GILLESPIE,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

Last session, believing that the committee would not make an appropriation except for Harpeth and Lock No. 1, I drew the bill last Congress, which I introduced, for such amounts as I was informed were needed. Taking the official estimates made to do the work at Locks A and No. 1, subtracting the amounts that had heretofore been appropriated, would give me and did give me, I thought, the amounts for the respective improvements that were needed for the time being and until a succeeding Congress could make a new appropriation, and I introduced a bill based upon such a calculation.

None of these dams, I dare say, could or would be completed at the price at which they were originally estimated. The price of labor and material varies and has varied, and for other reasons the appropriations have to be varied accordingly, and they have been, I believe, and will continue to be. Hence it was perfectly right and proper for the distinguished and learned chairman of this committee to have the engineer to state officially, as of this day and time, the amount necessary to complete these two improvements.

But the gentleman knows, and well knows, that when the Cumberland River Improvement Company and myself addressed this honorable committee a few weeks ago, that we all insisted on an appropriation sufficient to complete Lock A, at Harpeth, and Locks Nos. 1 to 7, inclusive, and, in addition, to locate Lock B on the Lower Cumberland and purchase a site for the same.

We did not stop at $55,000 for Lock 1 nor at $90,000 for Lock A, at Harpeth Shoals, and this honorable committee gave the Nashville committee and myself twice as much time to discuss the matter as had been previously assigned us.

So much, then, in defense of the proposition that my bills did not cover the entire situation. But this oversight is no excuse for abandoning the improvement of the Upper Cumberland at Locks Nos. 1 to 7, inclusive. Not at all. The project is entirely meritorious.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for five minutes additional. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, Major Wilson and his predecessors, I may add, in quite a number of previous Congresses have said, as I now say, this improvement should be made. But the distinguished chairman now says it should not be. The same engineers who say we should lock and dam Harpeth Shoal and Lock No. 1 have recommended the completion of the locks and dams from No. 2 to No. 7, not only to improve commerce, but for the Government to get a return for the investment already made, amounting to quite a large sum of money.

Mr. Chairman, the committee follows the recommendations of these engineers upon the Harpeth Shoals and upon Lock 1, but say they intend to abandon the locks from 2 to 7, also highly recommended by these engineers. And why? The distinguished chairman said it would take about $6,000,000 to improve the Cumberland River above Nashville. I did not ask for $6,000,000, nor have I ever asked for $6,000,000, nor has the distinguished committee, composed of M. T. Bryan, F. F. Pierce, A. R. Gohlson, A. P. Jackson, W. C. Collier, C. C. Slaughter, and Edward Buford, representing the Cumberland River Improvement Association, ever asked for $6,000,000 to complete the Upper Cumberland.

But what do they ask? They ask now for the completion of the improvement at Harpeth Shoals, which everybody confesses is the most objectionable obstruction on the Cumberland River, or more so than any other. They ask for the completion of Lock 1, which will be completed under this bill, and for the completion of Locks 2 to 7, on the Cumberland River. They do not ask now for the completion of the 22 locks above Nashville that would cost about $6,000,000. All we ask now on the Upper Cumberland is to complete the improvement of Locks 1 to 7, which will cost about one million and three-quarters of dollars.

So if the gentleman had stated what I desire and what our people desire and think we are entitled to have, he would have said that I wanted the locks and dams already in the river completed. Then he would have stated the proposition exactly as I stated it in my speech. Then I do not believe the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. BURTON] would have been so condemnatory in his language.

I have not asked this Congress to give $6,000,000 to finish Locks 1 to 22.

What does the engineer, Mr. Adams, in his report of 1899, say?

It seems impossible to urge the cost that has first been indicated with too much vehemence, being apparently the only way of securing a return for the expenditures already incurred and may hereafter be incurred within a reasonable time and for a reasonable additional outlay. I do not hesitate, therefore—to ask for the entire sum that will be required to carry the lower-river scheme of improvement and the lower portion of the upper-river scheme of improvement to completion at an early day.

I do not hesitate—

He says—

to ask for the entire sum that will be required—

To complete the locks and dams on the Lower Cumberland, that the committee have wisely undertaken to complete, because, he says, of the investment already made, and because of the increased commerce and the recompense and the return that will come to the people. He says we should at once proceed to appropriate money for the completion of locks and dams from lock No. 2 to No. 7, and proceed on down the Cumberland.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I assure the gentleman from Tennessee of my sincere good will, and appreciate his own friendly opinion as manifested now and in the past. I do not say this formally merely, but sincerely and earnestly. But I do not want him to be sensitive about what I said. I should not have due regard for the welfare of the House if in the dreary waste of figures that belong to such a bill as this, I should neglect to mention a humorous incident like this.

The gentleman from Tennessee has twice introduced a bill for the work on two locks and dams there, once in the Fifty-sixth Congress and once in this. The aggregate amount which he asked for these two locks and dams was $145,000—$50,000 for one and $95,000 for another, or $55,000 and $90,000, I have forgotten which. As I stated in my remarks, the committee "did him a blessing against his will." They put $275,000 in the bill last winter and in the pending one. This was done, as the gentleman has said, in pursuance of a telegram, a copy of which is in the letter which he has read. This telegram was sent to us by General Wilson a year ago, and it is copied bodily in the letter of this winter, which he has read. The gentleman has been very strenuous in looking after that measure both last winter and this. However, he introduced a bill again this winter, asking for only $145,000.

There is an explanation for this better than any given by the gentleman himself. It is evident that his secretary or some one merely copied bodily that bill of last winter and introduced it again, so that it might accomplish the same results that the other one was intended to perform, overlooking the fact that in the last bill $275,000 or $285,000 had been inserted by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. But again I want to assure the gentleman—and this word may go to his constituents—that he has been active and careful in looking after their interests in this measure and in the whole Cumberland River.

I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just a word, Mr. Chairman.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12346, being the river and harbor appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

JANITOR FOR COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. BULL. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 125.

Resolved, That the Chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills is hereby authorized to appoint a janitor to said committee room, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, at the rate of $60 per month, during the present Congress, until otherwise provided for by law.

At the end of line 4, after the word "the," insert the words "sessions of the."

At the end of the resolution insert the following:

"Provided, That the person appointed hereunder shall also perform janitor service in the enrolling room of the House."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if the resolution is reported by the committee?

Mr. BULL. It is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No statement was made that the committee had considered it.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all members who, either in the general debate or in the debate under the five-minute rule, speak upon the river and harbor bill may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen speaking upon the river and harbor appropriation bill, either in general debate or under the five-minute rule, have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] are pending. Does the Senator desire the vote to be taken upon them as one amendment?

Mr. BACON. Yes; I am willing for the vote to be taken in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia submits an amendment, which will be read to the Senate as one amendment.

Mr. BACON. Before the amendment is read I desire to say that if the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is adopted the latter part of my amendment would be unnecessary. It might be well for the Senate first to act on the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas, because if that is adopted I should not offer any except the first amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas is a substitute, amendments to perfect the text of the bill must be first acted upon.

Mr. BACON. Certainly, other amendments must first be acted upon before the substitute can be offered as such, according to parliamentary rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

After the words "United States," in the first section, in line 6, page 1 of the bill, insert the following words: "because of his official position, or for the purpose of destroying the Government or impairing the execution of its constitutional powers."

Strike out from the first section the following words: "Or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the President may devolve under the Constitution and laws."

Insert after the word "shall," in section 3, line 1, page 2, the words "for the reason or for the purpose hereinbefore specified."

In section 3 strike out the words "or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the President may devolve under the Constitution and laws."

Insert after the word "shall," line 15, page 2, section 5, the words "for the reason or for the purpose hereinbefore specified."

Strike out from section 5, "or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the office of President of the United States may devolve under the Constitution and laws."

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I desire, as briefly as I can, to submit some remarks upon the pending bill.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow the Chair to have stated the precise pending question, so that the Senate may understand what is first to be acted on?

Mr. RAWLINS. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments offered by the Senator from Georgia which have just been read to the Senate are pending.

Mr. HOAR. That is pending now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is pending now.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, this is very important and, in some respects, far-reaching legislation. The purpose of all laws of a penal character is to secure the public peace and safety. No legislation ought to be considered or enacted in the spirit of revenge. I do not mean to imply by this suggestion that those who are proposing and advocating the passage of this bill have any other purpose than to secure and provide for the safety of those who are charged under the Constitution and laws of the United States with the performance of duties pertaining to the welfare of all the people of the nation.

Mr. President, the horror with which the country received the news of the assassination of the late honored President of the United States has not entirely subsided, and we are all conscious, more or less, of the embarrassment of discussing or making criticism of any measure which may tend to prevent the repetition of such a crime. Still the Senate has the duty of considering this legislation, and it is bound to consider and act upon it with a view to obtaining the most perfect measure and one that will subserve the most beneficial results with reference to the mischief which is intended to be provided against.

The remarks which I shall make, and the suggestions which I shall convey for the consideration of the Senate, will be with a view to the perfection of the measure, as it seems to me, in order that it may better, according to my opinion, accomplish the desired results. The first section of the bill provides—

That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States, etc., willfully and maliciously kill or cause the death of the President or Vice-President, etc., or willfully and maliciously cause the death of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, shall be punished with death.

In ordinary criminal statutes providing for the punishment of murder we find certain elements which are not provided for in this bill. Any person who willfully and maliciously kills another according to the ordinary definition, without legal excuse or justification, is amenable to the penalty which is provided. This section contains no recognition of the ordinary qualification of such a statute, "without legal excuse or justification."

It is not to be supposed, and yet it is within the range of possibility, when we judge of human frailty and human nature, which as much pertains to the people who may hold these offices as to other human beings, that in necessary self-defense a person, in order to save his own life, may be put under the horrid necessity of taking the life of an assailant who may for the time being occupy one of these high offices.

It is not within the range of contemplation, I confess, but it is possible that a person holding one of these high offices may be guilty of an offense which under the administration of the criminal law providing for the punishment of murder would be subject to capital punishment, and in the execution of a judgment to that effect the person taking the life of the President would act under legal justification.

I suppose, as a matter of course, that the Senator who introduced this bill and who advocates its passage expects that these ordinary limitations upon the definitions of offense would be applied, and yet the penal statutes providing for the punishment of murder in every State in the Union and in the law of Great Britain and of all the continental governments will be found to contain this express limitation, namely, that the offense must be without legal excuse or justification, and I see not why that clause is not inserted in the bill.

While the bill denounces the severest penalties against the acts which are herein specified, it falls far short of affording that complete protection to the President, if his protection is to depend alone upon Federal law, which ought to be provided. The second section of this proposed act provides—

> That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, attempt to commit either of the offenses mentioned in either of the foregoing sections shall be punished with death.

The legal definition of assault is a demonstration coupled with a present ability to afflict a physical harm. A person may assault the President of the United States, a person may commit an assault and battery upon the President of the United States, a person may assault the President with intent to maim him or to inflict upon him great bodily harm which may disable him from the performance of the duties of his office, but without the specific intent to kill him, and such a person, if the punishment is to depend upon the provisions of Federal law, arraigned for such an offense against the President must go free because this bill does not provide for his punishment.

Unfortunately, it seems to me, in this second section a punishment is denounced which may be out of all proportion to the degree of offense involved in the act which may be committed. The phrase is to "attempt" to kill the President or any of the persons named in the first section. What legal definition have we been furnished of the words "attempt to kill?" The word "assault" is a word of well-defined legal signification. An assault is a demonstration coupled with a present ability to do the intended harm—that is, to take the life of the President.

An attempt may fall far short of that. I have carefully reviewed the decisions relating to the question of attempt as it is an indictable offense under the common law. It was the lowest punishable or indictable offense in the common law. What is this offense known as an attempt? It is distinguished from the crime of an assault, which is a recognized and well-defined offense under the common law. It is distinguished from the crime of battery, which is also equally well defined and determined according to the principles of the common law. But what may amount to an attempt to commit an act is a metaphysical, uncertain question, which is not defined and is not definable by any standard which has found general recognition in the courts of this or any other country.

Mr. President, we may contemplate an aggravated case; we may say that a man who makes up his mind to take the life of a President or any other person, without legal excuse or justification, does the act which in the nature of things, but for an inadvertence or an inaccurate aim of the blow, would have resulted in the commission of that offense; that here are all the elements of perversity and malignity which in the nature of things constitute the crime at which the statute and the penalty are aimed. And yet, while we can in one sense view it in that light, and, in a spirit of revenge, at once declare that such a condition, such an attempt, and such an act ought to be punishable in the highest degree, it is a little strange that up to this time in the history of our country no State—at least, no State in recent years—has ever made such an act coupled with such an attempt a capital crime punishable with death. I think I am safe in saying that in no European country—not in Great Britain, from which source we have drawn our common law and the spirit, to a certain extent, of our institutions—do we find upon the statute books provisions making such an act a capital offense.

The reason for that, I think, is found in experience. The object of course is to protect the life of the President and the persons who are designated in the statute. When a case is brought before a court and jury and the prosecution has produced its evidence in many cases there will be a certain degree of uncertainty as to the reality and character of the attempt with which the act was accompanied which is to constitute the crime. The jury will be confronted with this feature. The case on the part of the prosecution generally leaves a degree of uncertainty as to the specific attempt which has not resulted in death, the act accompanying which has not resulted in the consummation of the offense defined in the first section of this proposed act.

It is an act which ought to be punished, but the jury will have in their minds a doubt, and may readily entertain a doubt. They will be informed by the court that they must find every material ingredient of the offense to have been shown by the prosecution beyond a reasonable doubt, and the result will be that it will be impossible to obtain a conviction. If you have a fair jury and a humane jury, which we are to presume to be the case, you will find it impossible to obtain a conviction of any crime under the provisions of the second section. Such is the ordinary experience of the history and administration of the criminal law in all countries. You must not make your penalty out of proportion to the act and expect a jury to convict and bring about the injustice of punishing a man in a degree far beyond what they may conceive he may possibly merit.

Instead of this section tending to promote the safety and welfare of the President, in my judgment, it will have the opposite tendency. No person will be convicted under it. When a person who ought to be punished in some degree proportioned to the offense which he has committed is brought face to face with 12 men and they are called upon to pass upon the life or the death of the defendant, in the face of the appeals which will be made to them in the defense to which he is entitled as provided in our Constitution, he will be acquitted.

Those who propose this legislation will find in the end that it does not subserve the purpose for which it is designed. It is well enough in the face of the great sorrow which has come to this nation, in a spirit of frenzy and desire to obtain revenge, to denounce unusual punishment, and when it comes to the calm administration of the statute we ought to be guided somewhat by the experience which is derivable from the history of the administration of the criminal law in all civilized countries.

But, Mr. President, an attempt to commit a crime is not synonymous with the word "assault," which means a demonstration coupled with a present ability to accomplish the thing. An attempt which involves only a certain degree of overt act, approximating in some degree the accomplishment of the intended result and accompanied by the intent which is characterized in the statute, I say has to be coupled with a present ability to do the harm he intended, where after proceeding to a certain point, upon reflection and upon the restoration of the reason which is to guide the action, the attempt and the purpose may be abandoned. There may be a repentance of the purpose. When you invite a jury to convict such a man of a capital offense you will invite it in vain unless the jury be packed, unless it be imbued with a spirit of revenge such as ought not to pertain to the fair administration of justice.

But, Mr. President, there is always a possibility of mistake as to the intent of a person. People make idle and unintended declarations. Acts frequently do not imply that which the ordinary mind would infer from their nature as constituting a demonstration of the real purpose of the person who may commit such an act, and as the criminal law is now administered in all civilized countries, those things have been taken into account, and they have only proceeded to the extreme penalty, namely, the penalty of capital punishment, when the purpose and intent has been so far demonstrated as to have been actually carried into execution. An assault with intent to commit murder is a misdemeanor, and is punishable by fine and imprisonment under the law in all the States.

Why is it that all the wise men in this country in all our sovereign States, in the light of the history of the administration of the criminal law, have failed to come up to the full measure of the standard of justice provided for in this legislation? What new light has dawned upon us at this juncture in the history and progress of civilization that we now ascertain that we may set up a bloody code of Draco? If a man is charged with a given intent, if he takes but one step which we may infer may be for the purpose of its execution, he shall be punished in the highest possible degree, and his life shall be taken.

Mr. President, it is impossible to know the intent so as to be able to ascertain it beyond the possibility of mistake. One man may infer one intent and another man may infer another intent; but we must make out a specific intent to kill. A man is presumed to intend the natural and necessary consequences of his act, not the natural and probable consequences of his act, but if he only attempts and does not assault, and it is not coupled with the present ability to do the harm, we should not punish him; but if he makes the assault, if he does it with the intent to do the harm but fails to do it, we may not yet know, if it is not accomplished, whether that degree of culpability pertain to him which would make the offense capital.

Mr. President, these are considerations which legislatures in all countries have deemed of importance and weight; but while we are undertaking to protect these representatives of the authority of the people of the United States under the Constitution, why not punish an actual assault upon the President? Why not provide for the punishment of battery upon the President? Why not provide for the punishment of an assault with intent to maim the President or to do him great bodily harm? Why omit these well-recognized offenses against the person of the President, and being against the person, against the authority of the President as the representative of the American people under the duties devolving upon him by our Constitution?

The third section of the bill provides:

SEC. 3. That any person who shall * * * aid, abet, advise, or counsel the killing of the President * * * shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding twenty years.

There is a difficulty about that when it comes to the administration of it. Will the Senator from Massachusetts, will any Senator, point out in the criminal legislation of any State a provision analogous to that? I distinguish between the accessories before and after the fact of a crime committed otherwise denounced by law. The President may be, and these other officers may be, proceeding in perfect safety; no attempt, no physical demonstration of any sort, has been made involving the safety of the person of the President in the slightest degree; no corpus delicti, if I may be permitted to use a term which is only applicable in the case of homicide, where before you can convict of crime you must find that some person has been killed; but the imputation is made that somebody has counseled somebody else, has aided somebody else, has abetted somebody else, or has advised or counseled somebody else to kill the President who has not killed the President, who has not assaulted the President, who has made no demonstration to carry into effect the counsel which he may claim to have received.

When you bring that case before a jury you will find the same difficulty that will be found to pertain to a certain degree in the attempt to administer the second section of this proposed law. If the charge is made that some person has advised another to kill the President, was it made in earnest or in jest? Was it made only as our distinguished Brigadier-General Funston made it at a banquet, on the inspiration of the moment, when he advised that such men as the proponent of this bill ought to be hanged? It may be made in jest and distorted into seriousness by the maliciousness and evil intent of an informer or spy. Will it be made in order that there may be set a snare in every joy of life, where men in convivial and unguarded moments, in the spirit of humor and inspiration of other kinds, intimate that some august personage ought to be disposed of or gotten out of the way?

We hear upon the hustings, we hear at the banquet table, and we hear on various occasions intimations that "counsel, aid, and abet," in the sense of mere words, and are we to arraign all those people at the bar of justice and put them upon trial for conviction under the penalty of imprisonment for not to exceed twenty years? If we are to punish all those who advise in any way by any possibility of construction an assault on or the taking of the life of any of the persons named in this bill, why not include others in the category?

Mr. President, I simply invite attention to these things; and I have not much else to say. It seems to me they are considerations to which the Senate and the other House ought to devote some attention with a view to perfecting this measure. The only additional thing I care to say in respect to this subject is that we have had three Presidents, dear to the hearts of the American people, assassinated. There is a universal desire that some means be afforded that such a calamity in the future may be guarded against. I fully appreciate and sympathize with that desire, and I do not wish to impose any obstacle in the way of its accomplishment. If this statute had been in force at the time of the assassination of President Lincoln, would it have prevented it? If this legislation had been in force at the time of the assassination of President Garfield, would it have prevented it? If this proposed law had been upon the statute book at the time the cruel and cowardly blow was struck at the life of President McKinley, would it have prevented it?

The patriotism of the people of the United States has never failed. President McKinley was made President by a majority of the suffrages of the American people. When that result was declared, he was the President of all the people of the United States without regard to faction or party; and it is true that when the blow was struck against his life it was a blow struck against all the American people; and we were all horrified at the terrible crime. Yet, Mr. President, that blow could not have been struck anywhere within the limits of the jurisdiction of Congress, in the absence of this statute, without swift punishment being meted out to the man who struck it. The President would be as safe in the hands of the judiciary and the prosecuting officers in New York as he would be in the hands of any Federal administrator of the law seeking to impose just punishment for a crime of that character. There is no State in the American Union whose people would not have seen to it that the culprit who committed that foul deed did meet his just deserts, and he did meet those deserts.

Mr. President, it is urged that now, in the frenzy and horror and in the presence of a great crime and tragedy, involving all the people of this country, we place an imputation by the enactment of this legislation that somewhere in some State or in some Territory in the American Union the people would not arise to the exigency of that occasion and see that just punishment was meted out to any man anywhere who would strike a blow against the President whom the American people had chosen to exercise that office.

I can not conceive, Mr. President, that we are to place any imputation upon the character of any of our people anywhere on the idea that merited and just punishment would not be swiftly meted out to the man who should commit so foul a deed. You can trust the existing laws, which have never failed in the course of the history of our country and are not likely to fail anywhere for the punishment of any such offense.

What can we do but take life? What has been done but that the life of man who committed the foul deed in the past has been taken? If it is the example of the punishment we are seeking to provide, that example has already been set, and if persons who have the purpose in their heart of hearts to commit such a crime against the people of this country are to be deterred by reason of punishment, the deterrent is already in existence, and it stands as an eternal and universal menance to the cowardly assassin who would strike down the President of the United States.

But if we are to wrest this jurisdiction from the States, if we are to provide this legislation and undertake, as the representatives of the Federal Government, distinct from the States, to take care of the officers who are thus provided for, why should we stop short? Why should we not provide for the punishment of an assault upon the President, a battery upon the President, and an assault with intent to maim the President or to inflict bodily harm upon the President so as to disable him from performing the functions and duties of his high office? We fall short; we do not do what the States and Territories everywhere have done, because if an assault is committed upon the President anywhere the man who commits that assault will be punished.

Some Senators have risen here and spoken as if they thought this was a time and occasion in which to coin political capital out of the blood of our martyred President. They would in their frenzy drive us from the deliberate and careful consideration of this important question by raising the implication, perchance, that somebody in the United States was in sympathy with one who would strike down the President of all the people of this country. Mr. President, if anyone makes such an imputation I resent it. To suppose that any Senator would be deterred from making any just and reasonable and proper criticism of this bill on that account is to suppose that we have not the courage and the desire to perform any duty incumbent upon us, that we may endeavor to perfect this measure if it is to be passed, in order that it may achieve the best possible results for the safety of the President and the peace of the United States.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I desire to submit some of the impressions which I have received from a somewhat inadequate consideration of the very important questions presented by this measure. It is a measure of very great importance because it is a novel piece of legislation, and is, I think, in some respects without precedent in the legislation of this country. It is also very important because of the grave character of the subject that is treated, and it becomes us to discuss it and consider it in a manner in keeping with the gravity of the subject.

Mr. President, the point that has presented itself to my mind as being the one that deserves the most careful consideration on our part arises from the question of power in Congress to enact such legislation as this, the question whether we have the right to constitute it a crime against the United States to commit a personal assault upon the President of the United States at all times, under all conditions, and in all places within the jurisdiction of the United States.

There is no question that it is in the power of Congress to protect its officers in the performance of their duty. That principle has been enunciated and discussed by the courts of this country time and time again; and it were idle for us to waste time in discussing a question that has been so thoroughly and completely settled by the decisions of the highest judicial tribunals of the land. But our courts, Mr. President, have not gone to the extent of saying that the possession of a Federal commission throws a pallium over the holder thereof, so that under all circumstances, under all conditions, and in all places he shall have the right to resort to the Federal courts to protect him, irrespective of the fact that he may be at the same time charged with an offense against the laws of the State in which the offense is committed.

The case of Neagle, in 135 United States Reports, which has been referred to here by different Senators, turned entirely, so far as the majority of the court were concerned, upon the contention on the part of that majority that Neagle in slaying Judge Terry was performing a duty imposed upon him by law. From the very earliest case down to the present time, Mr. President, it will be found that where the Federal courts have stepped in and assumed jurisdiction, exclusive of the jurisdiction of the States, of offenses committed within the jurisdiction of the State it has been upon the ground that the offense was committed against a Federal officer in the performance of his duty as such officer. I do not think that any instance can be cited where it has been held that the mere fact that a man holds a commission as a Federal officer gives to the Federal courts jurisdiction of offenses against that individual.

If that is so, Mr. President, then I take it that it is a most important point for us to consider the proposition in this bill to make an offense against the person of the President of the United States committed anywhere within the broad domain of the United States under the jurisdiction of any of the separate States under all circumstances an offense against the President in his character as President and as in the performance of his duty as President.

I confess, Mr. President, this point has given me a great deal of trouble, and I have devoted to it such consideration as the limited time that I have had has permitted me to give to it, and I have reached the conclusion, which I shall now endeavor to demonstrate, that in the case of the President and Vice-President there is an exception to all officers holding commissions under the United States.

It has been said here that the President is always and at all times President, but I have heard no reason assigned therefor. Taking up the Constitution, Mr. President, and referring to those provisions of that instrument which relate to the President and his duties, we find that the first section of the second article is as follows:

> The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice-President, chosen for the same term, be elected, as follows:

"The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America." The first article, using very much the same language, declares that:

> All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States.

The third article refers to the judiciary, the third branch of the Government, the third repository of part of the sovereign power of the people of the United States, and to that judiciary is given the judicial power of the United States; that is:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

Under the executive power thus conferred, vested as it is in the President and in the President alone, all the executive functions of the Government of the United States are performed. The State Department, in all its various ramifications extending all over the world to its consuls and ministers, is simply carrying out the power which is vested in that one individual; the Treasury Department, with all its agencies extending all over the United States in its customs-collection districts and internal-revenue districts, is constantly exercising the power which is conferred on and vested in the President; the Interior Department and all the other departments of the Government are simply exercising power which is vested in the President and is in him; and I hold, Mr. President, that when the President ceases to exist at that very instant all executive power, all right to exercise a single one of the executive functions of those great departments, likewise terminates.

Now, Mr. President, in connection with this, I would invite the attention of the Senate to the language of the eighteenth paragraph of section 8 of the first article of the Constitution:

> The Congress shall have power * * * to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

I take it there will be no dispute that under that clause of the Constitution Congress has the power to enact all laws that are necessary and proper to enable the President to carry out the law, which he is required under another clause of the Constitution to do—to see that the laws are executed—and to surround him with such protection against interference of any character from any quarter as will enable those laws to be carried out without one instant's interruption. In that line the framers of the Constitution, when they considered the subject of the Legislature, incorporated into the Constitution the provision that "Senators and Representatives shall * * * in all cases except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective Houses and in going to and returning from the same."

That was done not from any idea of the peculiar sanctity of the personality of Members and Senators, but from the necessity that was felt by the framers that when they were engaged in the high function of making laws for the entire country matters of minor importance should not be allowed to interfere with them in the performance of that duty.

But the legislative function is conferred upon Congress. It is not at all a continuing duty. It is not a duty that is going on day after day, hour after hour, minute after minute, as is the case with the Executive function. Congress adjourns, as the judiciary does, from time to time, and there are long intervals between the times when Representatives and Senators are acting in their official capacities and the times when they are acting simply in the character of private citizens.

I am mindful of the fact that under the tenth amendment to the Constitution—> the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

And that section is just as much entitled to consideration as any other section of the Constitution. For that reason I hold that it is not in the power of Congress to throw the mantle of its jurisdictional protection around an official of the United States simply because he is an official of the United States.

It is not necessary, nor would it be proper, in view of the fact that the States have an immense reserve of police power in themselves, which is essential for them to have, that order and good government may be preserved within their limits. The right which the States have to their own autonomy and to have that autonomy unimpaired by the interference of any power, unless it is an interference by the United States in a case that is necessary or proper, is a fundamental right of the States, and one entitled to as much protection and consideration as any other.

I did not intend and I do not now intend to go into a lengthy discussion of this point, but I desire to have it distinctly understood that my view of so much of this measure as relates to the protection of the President and Vice-President is that we have a right to pass any legislation that is necessary or proper to protect their persons wherever they may be within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States. I base that upon the nature of the President's duties, the all-pervading power that is vested in him, which never ceases night or day, which is in operation at Porto Rico at one moment of the twenty-four hours and in the Philippine Islands at the same time; that is always in active existence, and that derives its origin and source from the well-spring that is vested in him—the well-spring of the Executive power of the United States.

I contend that there is no other official so situated except the Vice-President, who is required to stand ready at any time to assume the Presidential function and is performing his constitutional duty as long as he is ready and willing to assume that function. Therefore I can not give my indorsement to that portion of the pending bill which declares that any officer of the United States upon whom the powers and duties of the President may devolve is likewise to be placed under the jurisdiction of the United States and that the jurisdiction shall be taken from the State courts in cases of personal violence as to such officer.

The substitute offered by the Senator from Texas changes that provision, so as to make it apply to the officer, not who may have the duties devolve upon him, but to the officer who actually as a fact stands next in succession to the Presidency. The language of the substitute offered by the Senator from Texas is as follows:

> SECTION 1. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, willfully and maliciously kill the President of the United States or the official next in succession to the Presidency under the Constitution and laws of the United States—

That includes the Vice-President, and in such a situation as exists to-day, where the President has passed away and the Vice-President is performing the duties of President, is in fact President, the officer named in the act of 1886 as the first on the list who, in case of the death of the Vice-President, shall succeed to the Presidency, is protected under this provision. I think there is reason for it. I think it simply places that official in the same position of waiting, being in readiness to perform a function devolved on him by the Constitution if that function shall be devolved upon him, exactly as it is in the case of the Vice-President when the President is alive.

I can support such a provision, and I wish the Senator from Massachusetts would consent to have that feature of the proposition offered by the Senator from Texas incorporated in his bill in lieu of that provision which refers to these officers, all of whom are designated, seven in number, if I am not mistaken, and who may possibly, in the event of something that is hardly within human probability, succeed to the Presidency.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps I may be permitted to say now that I can not for one consent to that change. The committee intended to have the protection coextensive with the law, passed under the constitutional power of Congress, providing for the succession.

For instance, there has been in English history the celebrated Thistlewood case, which was a scheme to slay the entire English cabinet, who were assembled at one supper; and it was one of the most dangerous conspiracies. It was detected, I think, within an hour—a very short time, at any rate—of the time for carrying it into effect. That was during the regency, I believe, before George IV became King. At any rate, it was somewhere very early in this century,

I will not interrupt the Senator except to state now that it seemed to us that the reasonable limit of protection would be to have it correspond with what Congress had considered the reasonable limit of provision for the succession.

Mr. MALLORY. I will say in response to that suggestion that there was on one occasion a gunpowder plot to blow up the Houses of Parliament, and that gunpowder plot may be revived, so far as Congress is concerned.

Mr. HOAR. It does not succeed to the Executive power. That is what we are dealing with now.

Mr. MALLORY. There is just as much reason, I think, to apprehend that there will be a gunpowder plot to blow up both Houses of Congress and the Capitol building and to legislate against it as to anticipate that there will be a plot to destroy the lives not only of the President and the Vice-President, but of seven of his Cabinet officers, all at one and the same moment. But I do not think it is necessary, even if I believed it was proper, under our constitutional power. I do not see any necessity for it, unless it is contemplated that the powers of darkness can be so arrayed against our institutions that as soon as one of these gentlemen steps into the position of President he can be obliterated and the next one in a few moments thereafter likewise obliterated until the whole seven are destroyed.

The substitute offered by the Senator from Texas provides for an automatic arrangement whereby if the President of the United States to-day were to pass away, the Secretary of State would become the President, and the Secretary of the Treasury would occupy the position corresponding to that of Vice-President under ordinary conditions. Consequently there would be no hiatus until the entire seven gentlemen representing all the Cabinet, I believe, except the Secretary of Agriculture, should have been destroyed or obliterated.

There are other features of the bill to which I take exception, and to which I found it difficult to reconcile myself. But I appreciate the importance of some legislation of this character and I have been very anxious to vote for it. If it could be so changed as to relieve us from the suspicion of undertaking to place a Federal officer entirely subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, in the jurisdiction of the States, simply because he is a Federal officer, I think I would be able to bring myself to vote for the bill introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts, notwithstanding my objection to some of its other features.

I object, Mr. President, to the seventh section of the measure. I do not think it is necessary in the shape in which it is, and I think it would be a great mistake for Congress to adopt it as anything like a preventive of efforts to assassinate the President. I would object on general principles that it is antagonistic to our traditions, to our habits of thought, and to our customs that the President should surround himself with a body of janizaries or a sort of Pretorian guard, and never go anywhere unless he is accompanied by men in uniform and men with sabers as is done by the monarchs of the continent of Europe or as the King of Great Britain does with his household cavalry around him. I do not think it is in keeping with our system and with the ideas which prevail among the people of this country that the Chief Magistrate, who is a civil official, should be surrounded with all the pomp and ceremony of an autocrat.

For that reason I drew up an amendment to the seventh section. I do not think that even my amendment is necessary, because I believe that the provisions which that amendment makes can be secured without any legislation on our part. But in hopes that the idea might commend itself to the judgment of enough Senators to induce them to adopt it, I have written it out and may at the proper time offer it as a possible improvement on that set forth in the seventh section of the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The object of this section is not pomp.

Mr. MALLORY. I know that.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator object to the President being surrounded by sufficient people to protect him against assassination because that involves perhaps a little pomp?

Mr. MALLORY. If the Senator will listen to my amendment he will see that I do not.

Mr. SPOONER. I have listened to the Senator's observations. I have not heard his amendment. I should be very glad to hear his amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. No; some of my objection is to this display of military show.

Mr. SPOONER. Nothing requires the guards to be in uniform.

Mr. MALLORY. The objection to that in connection with a civil official is one I think that suggests itself to every American citizen. We are not in the habit of witnessing it. Our courts are not conducted with the display and show that courts are conducted with in monarchical countries.

Mr. SPOONER. The courts are not the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States.

Mr. MALLORY. No; I will admit that the President is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, but his principal function is that of a civil official. It is true that he is Commander in Chief, and there have been Presidents of the United States perfectly competent to take command of the Army, but it never has happened so far as I know, notwithstanding our wars, that the President has actually assumed the position of Commander in Chief in the field.

My amendment is simply a substitute for section 7, and is as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to employ such number of competent, experienced, and discreet men in the Secret Service Division of his Department as he may deem necessary to guard and protect the person of the President of the United States and to prevent the consummation of designs and conspiracies against his personal security, and to cause them to be so employed and disposed as at all times to assure as effectually as possible the security of the person of the President.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator will permit me. The President has had that for years——

Mr. MALLORY. I know he has.

Mr. SPOONER. And it has been inefficacious.

Mr. MALLORY. He has had it for years, and that is the reason why I say my amendment is not necessary; but I think it will inure a great deal more to the protection of the President against such assassins as the one who recently slew President McKinley than the proposition which is contained in the seventh section of the pending bill, for the simple reason——

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], whom I have heard is responsible at least in part for that provision, is entirely right about it. That is only a difference of opinion.

Mr. MALLORY. Of course. I admit that the Senator from Wisconsin is a gentleman whose opinion has great weight——

Mr. SPOONER. I did not mean that.

Mr. MALLORY. It has great weight with me. I defer a great deal to the Senator from Wisconsin. I defer a great deal to the views of the Senator from Alabama, than whom there is no one for whom I have higher respect.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, in the first place, no one among the public knows whether anyone surrounds the President. They are detectives. Some one may be guarding him or may not. If it were known to the world at large that wherever the President went or wherever he met a large assemblage of people he was surrounded by armed men whose duty it was by law to protect him, does not the Senator think there would be much less likelihood of an assault upon him?

Mr. MALLORY. Not against such enemies of the human race as the leaders of anarchy generally are. They dedicate themselves to the mission.

Mr. SPOONER. If there is in the Army a soldier of average intelligence, or a half dozen, who would have permitted, under the circumstances which surrounded President McKinley, a man to come with his hand obscured and a weapon in his hand and fire twice at him, is too big a fool to be in the Army or anywhere else.

Mr. MALLORY. I am not denying that, Mr. President, but the history——

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I understand there were detectives accompanying the President. It was so reported in the papers. They were there with him for the purpose of guarding him and protecting him against such assaults. I understand that detectives were there when he was fired upon. Is that not true?

Mr. SPOONER. And they did not protect him. We are trying to provide some method that will be efficacious.

Mr. CARMACK. A skilled detective chosen for the purpose would be effective, if anyone would be.

Mr. SPOONER. We had better give it up, then.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not think we ought to give it up. I think we ought to adopt that method which is best calculated both to punish the individual after the crime is committed and to prevent the commission of the crime. I do not believe surrounding the President or any other chief magistrate with a bodyguard armed cap-a-pie, ready at all times to shoot down an assassin, will be as efficient in preventing the recurrence of the assassination of leading men of the countries of the world as the methods which are suggested in my amendment. There have been a great many assassinations of the crowned heads of Europe——

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. As I have been mentioned as the author of the seventh section, I will state again my reason for it, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. MALLORY. I shall be very glad to hear it. I have not heard it yet.

Mr. PETTUS. It will be very short.

We have had three Presidents assassinated and another one attempted to be assassinated. In the case of the three Presidents they were assassinated in public by the approach of the assassin under such circumstances as would had given an Army officer ample notice that they ought not to be allowed to approach, particularly in the last case, as was referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin. There the President was approached by a man occupying a very suspicious position. The President was guarded, it is true, at the time, as I am informed, by men who were detailed, without authority of law, for that purpose, by men who are employed according to law for the purpose of detecting bad things going on in the Government—thieves, and men who embezzle the public funds. That is what they were employed for. That is their occupation according to law. In my opinion it is beneath the dignity of the Presidential office, in the first place, to have the President guarded in that way by that class of men.

But I sought no display, and the section says that it shall be done with as little display as possible. But I desire to have the President's person in charge of men, particularly commissioned Army officers and soldiers enlisted in the regular service of the Government, so that if anyone neglected to strike a blow when it was needed or if anyone neglected to watch when watching was his duty, he would be forever disgraced in the eyes of the whole country. In my opinion, if we had had a properly detailed guard from the Army of the United States, officered by Army officers of the United States, whether they were in citizen's dress or soldier's uniform, neither one of the Presidents of the United States who died under the assassin's blow would have been killed in that way.

Now, I do not pretend that you can guard the President of the United States from all harm, but the object is to do it as effectually as the ingenuity of man can devise. I know of no people on earth that I am more willing to address to that sort of duty than the officers of the Regular Army of the United States and the enlisted men directly under their control. Why? In the first place, they are honorable men. In the second place, their vocation is watching and fighting. In the third place, they will be forever disgraced in the eye of all mankind if they suffer any neglect or stop at any exposure of their person in the defense of the life of the President. It is not for display; it is not for parade; it is for safety, as far as human ingenuity can devise.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I do not question for one moment that if we surround the President of the United States by a bodyguard of officers and soldiers and place him in the middle of a hollow square all the time, there would be more difficulty in getting at him and in doing him any serious bodily harm than there would be if the President were to hold public receptions and offer no obstacle to approach to him by any individual who desired so to do; but I take it that no President of the United States will care to have himself surrounded by such a bodyguard. I am quite satisfied that the present Executive of the United States would not care to have such an accompaniment to all of his movements. Therefore, so far as the ability of any set of men, whether officers of the Army or men of the Army or any other men, to protect the life of the President is concerned, it is to a large extent necessarily dependent upon the circumstances that surround the particular case.

The Emperor of Russia is surrounded all the time, not merely by a bodyguard, but by thousands of guards. He moves nowhere without having a shield of men between him and the public and does not permit anyone to approach within reaching distance of him. Yet an Emperor of Russia has been assassinated. It is the same with other European nations. They have all had the experience that notwithstanding they have surrounded their monarchs with the most careful attention in the way of military guards, from time to time the assassin who had made up his mind to achieve his object at any cost, who had determined to sacrifice his life in the execution of his purpose, has been able to carry it out.

I contend, Mr. President, that, in the first place, you will find it an extremely difficult thing to get any President of the United States to go out into the country where he is supposed to meet the people of the country whom he represents and have himself entirely shut off from contact with them by the interposition of a guard of soldiers. It is far better, in my judgment, to strengthen and authorize by law the instrumentality which heretofore has been acting probably without strict warrant of law, to select trained and disciplined and competent men, and discreet men, for that purpose; and I take it that honorable, brave, and reliable men can be found for that duty just as well as they can for other duty.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask the Senator from Florida if he has studied the seventh section and has seen that it is specially designed that there shall be no display, that there shall be none of the pomp of a bodyguard?

Mr. MALLORY. I am not harping on that now, Mr. President.

Mr. PETTUS. The Secretary of War is specially authorized to dress this guard of soldiers as he deems best. He can put them in citizen's garb just as well as he can dress them in the uniform of a soldier. The matter as to how they shall be dressed and what the number shall be is left to the discretion of the Secretary of War. The idea that it will be necessary to have a guard all around the President, that he shall be placed in a hollow square, is entirely foreign to that section.

The object is to have an efficient guard, and an efficient guard, as against an assassin, can be composed of a very few men. Does not the Senator know that there was nobody but that colored man at Buffalo who struck one blow in defense of the President? If there had been soldiers there, with an officer in command of them, the assassin would never have gotten there. We ought to honor that colored man for the courage he displayed.

Mr. MALLORY. I doubt very much, Mr. President, if there had been soldiers or anybody else there, that under the peculiar conditions of that occurrence anyone could have prevented the fatal shot from being fired. If a President goes among the people and allows crowds to approach in close proximity to his person he can not be protected at all times, at every instant of the ceremony that may be going on, from a possible shot from an assassin.

The advantage which the proposition which I have presented has to my mind, particularly over that which is advocated by the Senator from Alabama, is that it not merely proposes to have a guard for the President while the President is moving about, to prevent him from being assailed by an assassin then, but it also provides a trained corps of efficient men, whose business it is to keep posted as to the movements of anarchists or men suspected of being anarchists in this country, to observe their movements, and in the event that conspiracies are hatched to post themselves as to those conspiracies and obtain facts enough to justify the arrest of the individuals who are conspiring. In that way it is a preventive measure, and as a preventive measure I think it is far preferable to the mere surrounding of the President with a bodyguard to keep the people from getting within speaking distance of him.

But, Mr. President, while I object to that provision, that would not deter me from voting for the bill as proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts. As I have already said, I would be willing to accept one or two other provisions that are contained therein, though I do not approve of them; but I can not bring myself to the point of voting for a measure which, in my judgment, if it does not directly, does impliedly assert as a substantive proposition that it is in the power of Congress to vest jurisdiction in the United States courts in all cases of assault upon the person of anyone holding a commission under the United States Government. There is no authority for it in the Constitution.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will allow me, who has claimed that?

Mr. MALLORY. I contend that part of this bill does that very thing—that portion which proposes to throw the shield of its protection over the officers of the Cabinet, down to the Secretary of the Interior—the seven. Whether it does or not, it seems to me that there is very strong ground for that contention, and that hereafter the argument may be very properly made that by this enactment we did place Federal officials, without reference to whether they were in the performance of their duty or not, under the jurisdiction of the United States courts at all times and in all places.

For that reason, Mr. President, I can not support the measure in the shape in which it is. I sincerely trust that the proposition embodied in the substitute offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] may commend itself to the judgment of the Senate. I should like very much to see a unanimous vote upon a measure which proposes to protect the life of the President and Vice-President of the United States against the hand of the assassin in the future. I would be willing, I say, to sink many of the objections that I have to this bill and vote for it were it not that I feel and believe that in it is an assertion of the principle that an individual, because he happens to hold a commission of the United States, in a case in which there is an assault upon him, is exempt from the jurisdiction of the State courts, and is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the United States courts, though the offense is committed within the body of a county of a State.

In a case cited yesterday by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], the case of the United States v. Kirby (in 7 Wallace), the court took occasion to lay down a proposition bearing upon this point to some extent. The organ of the court says:

> No officer or employee of the United States is placed by his position or the services he is called to perform above responsibility to the legal tribunals of the country and to the ordinary processes for his arrest and detention when accused of felony in the forms prescribed by the Constitution and laws.

It may very readily happen that a Federal officer in a personal altercation may violate a municipal ordinance, but if it is to be recognized as law that the courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of criminal cases affecting Federal officials simply because they are Federal officials, and whether they are performing any duty or not, there will be more trouble, more disturbance, more heart burning, more injury to the public weal arising from such a doctrine than Congress can cure in a half century of legislation.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that we have any such power. I do believe that we have ample power to give jurisdiction to the United States courts over all cases in which a Federal officer is interfered with in the performance of his duty. There is no dispute about that; it is not necessary to discuss it; it is settled. But it is not settled, and I do not think it ever will be settled, that the single fact that a man is a Federal officer, but not performing any duty as such, gives him exemption in cases of that character from the jurisdiction of the State courts when the State courts have jurisdiction over all other citizens in like cases.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I am ready, if I had the wit and sarcasm of the late Mr. Ingalls, to make a rather violent and disrespectful speech. I will try to refrain from it.

I am astonished to see Senators of ability and common sense spending considerable time in defining a word like "attempt," for example, here. I am astonished to hear them misrepresent the bill and misunderstand the Constitution of the United States or the nature of the Government.

This definition of treason in the Constitution is superfluous. It is surplusage. There is no need of it at all. Every word concerning treason or even in the law we are about to pass might be thrown away and the power would remain then in the people of the United States to protect all their officers and their courts.

One of the judges of the Supreme Court said:

> We hold it to be an incontrovertible principle that the Government of the United States may, by means of physical force, exercised through its official agents, execute on every foot of American soil the powers and functions that belong to it. This necessarily involves the power to command obedience to its laws, and hence the power to keep the peace to that extent.

Again—

> The Government must execute its powers, or it is no government. It must execute them on the land as well as on the sea, on things as well as on persons. And, to do this, it must necessarily have power to command obedience, preserve order, and keep the peace.

The people of California understood these things better than some of us. In defining the duties of the sheriff, who corresponds to the United States marshal, they provided that—

> The sheriff must—
> First. Preserve the peace.
> Second. Arrest and take before the nearest magistrate for examination all persons who attempt to commit or have committed a public offense.
> Third. Prevent and suppress all affrays, breaches of the peace, riots, and insurrections which may come to his knowledge.

And the penal code of California declares, section 197, that homicide is justifiable when committed by any person "when resisting any attempt to murder any person or to commit a felony or to do some great bodily injury upon any person," or "when committed in defense of habitation, property, or person against one who manifestly intends or endeavors by violence or surprise to commit a felony."

Anybody would have been absolutely justified, of course, in shooting down that assassin at Buffalo. My friend from Massachusetts would have had a perfect right to kill the man when he was about to commit that murder.

I do not see why a person should object to a military guard, which, if there is any common sense in the country left, would consist perhaps of only one single stalwart fellow, a brave soldier. Suppose there should be two, three, or four. The criticism is as to his splendid uniform. Probably he would not have it. What is the objection to having him there? Is it the expense of two or three dollars? I do not think so.

We are told that guards such as are proposed in this law would not have prevented either of the assassinations of Presidents. Well, suppose it would not, shall we be acquitted if we do not take means to prevent such a crime, and prevent it by the simple measure of authorizing the Secretary of War to detail half a dozen, perhaps 20 if necessary, a company if necessary, a regiment if necessary, to protect the President?

The anarchists seem to be not well understood by everybody. Their purpose is to kill the whole line in succession of supreme rulers of any nation; to kill the President and Vice-President, and to kill the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of State, and so on all the way down. That is what they would like to do. They would glory in doing it.

It is very well that the Congress of the United States has been wise enough to provide a succession of officers to take the place if one should be assassinated.

I am out of patience. I do not see why we hesitate five minutes or any longer than to call the roll, for I suppose somebody will want to have the roll called on this measure as he would on the Ten Commandments. I do not see why we should wait five minutes to pass this bill. We can not improve it. I have seen no force whatever in any criticism made of it. The best speech I have heard across the aisle here is the one made by the old veteran Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], who seemed to give common sense and a love of justice to it, and he is full of those things.

I am ready for a vote. I do not want to wait another minute. I have an utter abhorrence of anarchists. I would give a thousand dollars to get a good shot at an anarchist about to commit his particular allotted murder.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, two legal propositions have been advanced by the opponents of this bill which seem to me to be of a most astonishing character. Minor objections have been made, but they go mainly to the details of the bill.

The two fundamental objections which have been made comes from the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] and from the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. The Senator from Georgia argues that because in that paragraph of the Constitution defining the crime of treason and providing for the punishment of it, treason has been limited to one or two cases, that therefore we have not the power to punish other crimes that were known as treason under the English statute and under the common law.

That argument proves entirely too much and leads to an absurdity. It leads to this logical consequence, that we are powerless to punish any crime against the United States unless express authority is given in the Constitution. The argument amounts to this, that because you have omitted from the definition of treason many crimes that were crimes at common law or under the English statutes, therefore you can not punish those cases as you could under the common law, or punish them as capital offenses.

There are only three instances in the Constitution where authority is given in express terms to Congress to legislate in criminal cases. One is in the case of treason, the other is for counterfeiting the coin and securities of the United States, and the third is for punishing piracy and felony on the high seas. Save and except those three provisions of the Constitution no direct legislative authority is given to Congress to legislate in respect to crimes, to define crimes, or to provide for their punishment.

But if we look at our legislative history we will find that our statutes are full of criminal laws and provisions covering a multitude of other offenses never covered in those three provisions of the Constitution. We have a Post-Office Department. The Constitution authorizes the Congress to establish a Post-Office Department, but nothing is said in the Constitution about providing for prosecutions for violations of the postal laws of the country. That is implied in the power to establish a Post-Office Department. We have a right to enact such criminal laws as will protect the integrity and vitality of that Department.

We have criminal statutes making it a penal offense to commit trespasses upon the public lands of the United States. The United States Government has control over its public lands, and we make a trespass upon public lands a criminal offense and punish it as such.

The Constitution in express terms simply says that Congress may provide laws for punishing counterfeiting of the securities and the coin of the United States, but we have any number of statutes upon our statute books providing punishment for counterfeiting in other cases, as for counterfeiting legal documents of various kinds. We have a whole title in the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the punishment of "crimes against the operations of the Government of the United States."

If we can protect the property of the United States, if we can protect its timber, protect its postal system, protect its currency, protect its judicial records, and pass general criminal legislation relating to the protection of property, manifestly we have the same power to legislate when it concerns a grave matter like that of the murder of the Chief Magistrate.

That brings me to the principle involved in the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. He would make the crime of killing the President—if I understand correctly—hinge upon the fact that the murderer did it with the intent to interfere with the operations of the Government of the United States and that he killed him on that account. That is not the gist of the offense. Of course, he must kill him with malice and willfully. There must be an intent in the language of the law to kill. But outside of that the gist of the criminal offense is that it deprives the people of the United States of the services of its Chief Magistrate.

As was well said by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] yesterday, the President of the United States, unlike almost any other officer of our Government, is constantly on duty. He is constantly at his post. He is not like Senators or members of the House. The Constitution has made a distinction in our case. We have an immunity from arrest in certain cases and from the service of civil process, but it only lasts while we are here in session and in going and coming. The distinction is recognized; but a distinction does not exist in the case of the President. The offense of killing the President consists in the fact that the Government is deprived of the services of its Chief Magistrate. He is always at his post, and it is like killing a soldier on his post. Whoever kills the President, no matter what his intent may be, whether he intends to do it to interrupt or embarrass the Government of the United States or not, the effect of the act is to interfere with the operations of the Government of the United States by depriving it of its Chief Magistrate.

Why do we punish murder in any case? We do not punish murder for the purpose of revenge. Murder is an offense because it is the highest kind of breach of the peace. Murder, if permitted to be untrammeled, amounts to the greatest kind of a breach and disturbance of society, and because of that fact we punish murder, but not for revenge.

The killing of the Chief Magistrate of this country or those entitled to the succession is not only an offense, as is the case at common law, depriving society of one of its citizens, but it is emphatically an offense against the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, to argue that this great Government of ours, while it can protect its property, while it can protect its marshals, its sheriffs, and all its other officers, while it can prevent depredations on its public lands or in its mines—while it can do all these things—it is yet helpless when it comes to the matter of protecting the life of its Chief Magistrate, is to advance a proposition which, seems to me, leads not only to an absurdity, but leads to the conclusion that this Government of ours is the most helpless government on the face of the earth.

Then, look at the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] from another standpoint, and that is the standpoint suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If I understand the Senator's argument correctly, it is that if a man kills the President of the United States, the jury must determine—according to the spirit of that amendment—whether that killing was done with the intent to interfere with the Government of the United States, or whether it was done because the man who was assaulted was President—not as an individual—which amounts to the same thing.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have listened with a great deal of interest to what the Senator has had to say on the subject of the President being always on duty, and that therefore the constitutional objection which was urged by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] did not exist. I want to ask the Senator whether he can say or will say the same thing about all the members of the Cabinet?

Mr. NELSON. I can not answer the Senator categorically, but I will answer him by giving an illustration. The members of the Cabinet are not always on duty, but they are always in line of succession, and I would call the Senator's attention to one fact. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] this afternoon referred to an incident in English history where it was planned to kill the entire English cabinet, and I would remind the Senator from Colorado that we have had an instance where it was attempted on one great occasion to utterly cripple the entire executive department of this Government and dismantle it. That was at the time that President Lincoln was assassinated. Another assassin attempted to kill Vice-President Johnson, and another assassin attempted to kill the Secretary of State, Mr. Seward. There you have an instance of a systematic attempt to utterly dismantle the executive department of the Government.

What has happened in English history, as cited by my friend the Senator from Massachusetts, and what happened in our own history at the time of the assassination of President Lincoln, may happen in the future. There may on some future occasion be a conspiracy among anarchists to dismantle the executive department of the Government of the United States for the purpose of wrecking it. Those conspirators may combine, as was done in the case of President Lincoln, one set of them to kill the President, another the Vice-President, and another the different members of the Cabinet who are in the line of succession. Such a case may occur, as such a case has occurred, and it is important that we should have this legislation. I do not put it on the ground that these men are constantly in the exercise of the duties of their office, but I put it on the ground that all these officers are in the line of succession and are liable at any time, in case of an emergency, to be called upon to perform the duties of acting President of the United States.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. It is important that the distinction should be made, and the very able argument of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] was devoted to establishing the proposition that the President was always on duty, and therefore providing for the case of his assassination was equivalent to or in the same line of legislation as that providing against the killing of United States marshals in the performance of their duty, or against the killing of United States surveyors in the discharge of their public duty. It was along that line that the able Senator from Wisconsin discriminated in favor of so much of the bill as relates to the killing of the President.

Now, I understand the Senator from Minnesota, in so far as members of the Cabinet are concerned, to place the constitutionality of this proposed legislation upon the ground that they are in line of succession for the office of President. Is not every boy in the United States in line of succession to the office of President?

Mr. NELSON. No more than every citizen of Colorado is in the line of succession for the Senatorship from that State.

Mr. PATTERSON. In the same way, I mean.

Mr. NELSON. In one sense, in a very remote sense, but that illustrates the ethereal nature of the argument against this bill. In a remote sense, all who are born in this country are in the line of succession to the Presidency, but it is a very remote matter, and never can be a practical question.

I justify the passage of this bill, Mr. President, on the ground that the President of the United States is the head of our executive department, and that to deprive the Government of the head of the executive department is at any time a grievous offense against the Government of the United States. I put it on the further ground that this Government of the United States has the same inherent power to protect the life of its President that it has to protect Federal property. I put it on the further ground that this Government of the United States is one independent of and existing outside of and beyond the several States of this Union, and that there ought to be a law on our Federal statute book to protect every incumbent of the Presidential office.

It is a sad thing to think of the fact that we have no law on our statute book protecting the life of the President, the life of the head of our executive department, and that we are at the mercy of the legislatures and the laws of 45 States and half a dozen Territories. There may be places within the boundaries of the United States, and I think there are probably within the Territorial possessions of the United States to-day, where there is no local legislation on this subject; where, if the President were murdered, there would be no legal method by which the murderer could be punished.

Such a condition is intolerable, and our great Government, like every other great government on the face of the earth, ought to be armed and equipped with proper power to punish every miscreant who attempts to destroy the incumbent of the executive department of the Government. Our Government has existed for over a hundred years without such a law, but it is only in recent times that we have been confronted with the necessity which is now apparent to everybody. It is only within the memory of the present generation that we have had three Presidents of the United States murdered by the hands of assassins, and the time is now ripe, and it seems evident to me that it is our clear and bounden duty, to equip the Government of the United States with as ample power to protect its Chief Magistrate against criminal assaults and assassination as we are equipped with means to protect the property of the United States, and that to deny this power to our Government is but to attempt to cripple its life and integrity, and deprive it of that power which is vital to the existence and to the life of every government on earth.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, from the debates on both sides of the Chamber in this discussion, one can hardly be relieved from the assumption that there is something of the character of partisanry. I am sorry to note that this seems to be the case. I do not believe, however, that it is intended to be so on the part of any Senator.

This bill is entitled "A bill for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes." That is the clear title of the bill, and with the memory of this most gross outrage—this terrible crime—still vivid in our recollection, while the tears of grief are yet undried on the cheeks of nearly every American citizen, this bill, with this title, comes with exceeding force, and no Senator can vote against the bill or any portion thereof if it fairly interprets its own title without subjecting himself to the criticism at least that he is not awake to the necessity of some proper legislation to protect the President of the United States.

Mr. President, the people are asking for legislation; they are asking for that character of legislation which shall be a due and proper protection for the President. They, however, are demanding just legislation; and, to my mind, no legislation can be considered just, from an American standpoint, which operates with inequality upon any citizen or class of citizens in the United States; and so much of this bill as in effect so operates is not only against my conscience, but is far from being in harmony with my best judgment and the necessity for that character of legislation.

I had hoped that it would be my pleasurable duty at this session to vote for a measure which should emanate from the Judiciary Committee, and receive its approval, which should be aimed directly at the root of all this great evil.

I had hoped to vote for a measure which should not only be aimed at anarchy and anarchistic gatherings, but one which would send an armed force, or the executive force of the nation, into every one of these hell holes of iniquitous teaching in the United States—one potent enough to absolutely destroy any gathering intended to germinate these anarchistic doctrines; to go into any assemblage and break up and destroy any attempt to propagate their theories of destruction against the Government of the United States or against any government. I had hoped that this would be the case. But does this bill do that? Is there anything in the bill itself which is aimed directly at the root of this evil—at anarchy alone? No, Mr. President. It is simply changing an offense from a State to a Federal offense, and in a single instance is increasing the punishment for only one certain character of offense. Only two things are particularly important in this bill, the increased punishment being one.

I call attention to section 1 of this bill, which provides that any person who shall be guilty of murdering the President or anyone of those on whom the office of President might devolve in case of his death shall be punished by death. We have not changed any law whatever in this respect. That is the law of every State in the United States to-day. We have added nothing to its potency; and yet, Mr. President, I agree with that section in this bill. I have no objection whatever to making the offense a Federal offense and not one against the laws of the particular State in which the offense may have been committed. There is one provision, however, in that section which I can not say that I am entirely in harmony with.

I will speak for one moment upon the question of constitutionality. It is with a great deal of pleasure that I have listened to the extended arguments which have been made upon the Constitution of the United States. I have gained much information from them. But, Mr. President, no matter whether one is educated in the school of strict construction as to the powers that pertain to the States in the Constitution, or the powers which regulate the relations of the Government to the several States, here is one feature that can not be overlooked. When the makers of the Constitution had completed their work they brought into existence a nation. That nation is presumed to have all the ordinary functions of a complete sovereignty. So far, I say, as the relations between the States and the National Government may be concerned, the Constitution in many instances limited the authority of the States, but it nowhere limited the authority of the United States, that complete sovereignty in respect to those functions which pertain particularly to the self-preservation and the perpetuity of the nation.

Therefore any law which has that in view—any proposed legislation looking to that end—may be legal, though we may find no word or no syllable or no line in the Constitution that will give the particular authority. It is one of the implied authorities, and must be presumed unless we can find the inhibition in the instrument itself. So I do not doubt the right to pass legislation of this character. It has never occurred to me, Mr. President, if we have authority to pass special legislation for the protection of a United States marshal in the performance of his duties, that we have not equal power to protect the life of the President of the United States, who is always on duty and who always has functions to perform.

But, Mr. President, assuming now that it is constitutional, we come to the second section, and it is the provisions of that section which I can not harmonize with my idea of justice. The second section provides—

> That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, attempt to commit either of the offenses mentioned in the foregoing section shall be punished with death.

How does that section alone protect the life of the President of the United States? In order that the Secretary of the Interior may become the President of the United States eight lives must be taken before he can occupy that position and become eligible. We determine a law by applying it to a particular condition and seeing its effect.

It has been stated, Mr. President, by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] that this legislation has been demanded by the people of the United States; that it is legislation which every man in the United States is demanding to-day. I deny that proposition. The people of the United States are demanding proper and just legislation for the protection of the President of the United States. Let me give one example, for instance, and present it to any intelligent citizen of the United States to-day, and see whether he is in accord with the natural effect of legislation of that character.

I will take the average American citizen. Here is a good father, a good citizen; his only son has been assaulted; the bullet of an assassin has passed entirely through his body. This father, with all parental love, has hovered over that son in his condition between life and death for many days. At last the critical period is passed and the danger is over; the boy survives the assault that was made upon him, though possibly he may be a cripple, physically or mentally. The punishment for that particular offense may be five years or it may be twenty years in any penitentiary in the United States. On the same day some person who thinks he has been affronted by the Secretary of the Interior raises a gun for the purpose of aiming at him. He has taken the first step to carry his intent into effect, and, therefore, it is an attempt. Some one sees the act, and his hand is immediately stayed. The man who aimed that gun immediately goes to the gallows; that man must suffer the punishment of death. Now, Mr. President, when I present that case to the average American citizen and ask him if he considers it a just law, I differ from the Senator from Illinois, and I will say that ninety-nine men out of a hundred will say that it is unjust, and, not only that, but it has not even the merit of a necessity, so far as I understand this bill.

Mr. President, I am in favor of this bill if there be eliminated from it those things which I consider absolutely objectionable, one of which is making a man, by reason of his official position alone, a different character of American citizen, surrounding him with different laws for his protection, not merely as to the President of the United States, but as to one who by the most remote possibility on earth may become the Chief Executive of the nation. The chances in favor of every one of these eight persons being simultaneously wiped from off the face of the earth are about as remote as the chances of the earth suddenly dropping into the sun; and considering it in its absolutely remote condition, and remembering that a hundred thousand offenses against any one of these Secretaries may be committed in the shape of assaults with intent to kill, where one would be effective in changing the order or obliterating entirely the line of succession or devolution, as you may call it, even admitting that, it is so far fetched, so remote, that it can hardly be conceived that any law is required to meet such a case. But the law itself when it is placed upon the statute book becomes a living principle, a principle that says for the first time in the history of the Government of the United States, "We have found some person that we may place upon a different level from the balance of humanity simply because of his official position."

I would vote for this measure did it limit the assualt with intent to kill to the President or, in the case of his death, of another person occupying that position, to the particular person that the office of President would devolve upon, because, as I say, the chances are almost a million to nothing that the other condition could not possibly arise. If, however, it did arise, as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, by the destruction of all of these individuals, then the law would take effect, even although it covered one who should succeed, because all would be covered by it. But, Mr. President, I am opposed to it, as I have stated, upon that line entirely.

Then again, as I say, I do not believe that the people of the United States are expecting legislation of that character for the protection of the President. It may be that I am mistaken, but I do not believe the love of liberty and absolute equality of citizenship has so far been lost from the breast of the average American citizen, that he has so far wandered from at least my ideal of what the standard of Americrn citizenship is, that he would say that this is a just and fair law.

But, Mr. President, where can you stop here on principle? I know the Senator from Massachusetts says that this is aimed at those who would destroy sovereignty; but it does not stop there. Its effect is aimed against those who would destroy individuality, no matter whether it pertains to sovereignty or not; and it is being urged upon that ground alone.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will permit me, I never said that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then I do not understand the position of the Senator from Massachusetts, unless it is to be done for the protection of the United States, which is sovereign, by the protection of the President and those other officials upon whom the office of the Presidency would naturally devolve. No matter what he may have stated in exact words, that certainly is the meaning, or else there would be no basis whatever for a proposition of this kind to stand on. Now, if that be true, where will we stop? The judges of the Supreme Court as well have much to do with the natural functions of the Government.

Mr. President, in the United States every State is a necessary factor, and every governor of a State who may call a special session of the legislature to elect a United States Senator becomes one of the necessary functionaries through whom we may enforce the laws of the United States and provide for the law officers. So we can not consistently stop anywhere in a bill of this character if we go outside of the President himself.

Section 7 purposes to surround the President of the United States with a military guard of some character. I do not know just what it does intend, but I want to say that the only safeguard to the President of the United States is the love and affection of the people of the United States. That is the greatest safeguard in the world. How are you going to protect him simply by surrounding him with a military force or a whole regiment? Let him ride in his carriage from the White House down Pennsylvania avenue to the Capitol upon inauguration day, and will surrounding him by an army protect him? There might be a hundred Winchesters aimed from a hundred windows, and death migh result, although he had an army at his back. If there is any individual so lost to the sense of honor and justice and humanity that he is willing to give his life as a sacrifice for the consolation of destroying the President of the United States, there is no power on earth that is going to prevent him.

But this bill operates in a different manner. To have a law of this character upon our statute books will create the very incentive—the prejudice against the governing power of the United States. I do not believe it would ever be operative. I do not believe there is a man in the United States so noble of character that he would accept the Presidency of the United States who would go up the street under any circumstances with a bodyguard surrounding him. So its actual operation will be but little. But the moment you place the President or anybody else upon a different plane from the balance of humanity, the moment you surround him with bayonets, you are placing him where you have created a fortress over and beyond which the affections of the American people will not reach.

Every Senator present knows that anarchy is not a fungus which had its natural growth in the United States. It grew in the very shadow of the bayonets of the Old World and of the walls and fortresses which guarded monarchy there. It has been brought over here as a product of the old country. It is not indigenous to our soil. So we gain nothing there. I had hoped we would have a bill which would reach that class of individuals, and I believe with the proper character of amendment it could be done.

I have briefly explained why I can not support this bill just as it is. It may be possible that my education has been such that the idea of American citizenship and its equality is so firmly rooted in my whole nature that I am prejudiced against anything which seems to deviate from that principle. Be that as it may, I could not support a bill which provides that an attempt, even the slightest attempt, against the life of one individual shall be punished with death, while a much grosser offense against another person may be punished by a slight imprisonment. I can not vote for a bill which says that for the mere act of raising a gun toward the Secretary of the Interior a man must go to the gallows, while another may put a bullet clear through the body of the Secretary of Agriculture and at the same time may get a punishment of from five to twenty years in the penitentiary.

Mr. CARMACK obtained the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I should like, if the Senator from Tennessee will pardon me, to put into the RECORD, at the suggestion of another Senator, a brief message of President Grant, with the accompanying memorandum, sent to the House of Representatives in answer to an inquiry as to his habit of absence from the seat of Government, in which he states that the Presidential character is never laid aside.

Mr. McCOMAS. Have it read.

Mr. HOAR. It would take twenty minutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was in the Forty-fourth Congress, was it not?

Mr. HOAR. May 4, 1876. I do not think it is necessary to read it. It makes about two columns and a half and would take ten or fifteen minutes to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULBERSON in the chair). Without objection, the request of the Senator from Massachusetts will be complied with, and the papers will be inserted in the RECORD.

The papers referred to are as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I have given very attentive consideration to a resolution of the House of Representatives passed on the 3d day of April, requesting the President of the United States to inform the House whether any executive offices, acts, or duties, and, if any, what, have within a specified period been performed at a distance from the seat of government established by law, etc.

I have never hesitated and shall not hesitate to communicate to Congress, and to either branch thereof, all the information which the Constitution makes it the duty of the President to give or which my judgment may suggest to me or a request from either House may indicate to me will be useful in the discharge of the appropriate duties confided to them. I fail, however, to find in the Constitution of the United States the authority given to the House of Representatives (one branch of the Congress in which is vested the legislative power of the Government) to require of the Executive, an independent branch of the Government—coordinate with the Senate and House of Representatives—an account of his discharge of his appropriate and purely executive offices, acts, and duties, either as to when, where, or how performed.

What the House of Representatives may require as a right in its demand upon the Executive for information is limited to what is necessary for the proper discharge of its powers of legislation or of impeachment.

The inquiry in the resolution of the House as to where executive acts have, within the last seven years, been performed, and at what distance from any particular spot, or for how long a period at any one time, etc., does not necessarily belong to the province of legislation. It does not profess to be asked for that object.

If this information be sought through an inquiry of the President as to his executive acts in view or in aid of the power of impeachment vested in the House, it is asked in derogation of an inherent natural right, recognized in this country by a constitutional guaranty which protects every citizen, the President as well as the humblest in the land, from being made a witness against himself.

During the time that I have had the honor to occupy the position of President of this Government, it has been, and while I continue to occupy that position it will continue to be, my earnest endeavor to recognize and to respect the several trusts and duties and powers of the coordinate branches of the Government, not encroaching upon them nor allowing encroachments upon the proper powers of the office which the people of the United States have confided to me, but aiming to preserve in their proper relations the several powers and functions of each of the coordinate branches of the Government agreeably to the Constitution and in accordance with the solemn oath which I have taken to "preserve, protect, and defend" that instrument.

In maintenance of the rights secured by the Constitution to the executive branch of the Government, I am compelled to decline any specific or detailed answer to the request of the House for information as to "any executive offices, acts, or duties, and, if any, what, have been performed at a distance from the seat of Government established by law and for how long a period at any one time and in what part of the United States."

If, however, the House of Representatives desires to know whether during the period of upward of seven years during which I have held the office of President of the United States I have been absent from the seat of Government and whether during that period I have performed or have neglected to perform the duties of my office, I freely inform the House that from the time of my entrance upon my office I have been in the habit, as were all of my predecessors (with the exception of one who lived only one month after assuming the duties of his office and one whose continued presence in Washington was necessary from the existence at the time of a powerful rebellion), of absenting myself at times from the seat of Government; and that during such absences I did not neglect or forego the obligations or the duties of my office, but continued to discharge all of the executive offices, acts, and duties which were required of me as the President of the United States.

I am not aware that a failure occurred in any one instance of my exercising the functions and powers of my office in every case requiring their discharge or of my exercising all necessary Executive acts in whatever part of the United States I may at the time have been. Fortunately, the rapidity of travel and of mail communication and the facility of almost instantaneous correspondence with the offices at the seat of government which the telegraph affords to the President in whatever section of the Union he may be enable him in these days to maintain as constant and almost as quick intercourse with the departments at Washington as may be maintained while he remains in the Capital.

The necessity of the performance of Executive acts by the President of the United States exists and is devolved upon him, wherever he may be within the United States during his term of office, by the Constitution of the United States.

His civil powers are no more limited or capable of limitation as to the place where they shall be exercised than are those which he might be required to discharge in his capacity of Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, which latter powers, it is evident, he might be called upon to exercise possibly even without the limits of the United States. Had the efforts of those recently in rebellion against the Government been successful in driving a late President of the United States from Washington, it is manifest that he must have discharged his functions, both civil and military, elsewhere than in the place named by law as the seat of government.

No act of Congress can limit, suspend, or confine this constitutional duty. I am not aware of the existence of any act of Congress which assumes thus to limit or restrict the exercise of the functions of the Executive. Were there such acts, I should nevertheless recognize the superior authority of the Constitution and should exercise the powers required thereby of the President.

The act to which reference is made in the resolution of the House relates to the establishing of the seat of government and the providing of suitable buildings and removal thereto of the offices attached to the Government, etc. It was not understood at its date and by General Washington to confine the President in the discharge of his duties and powers to actual presence at the seat of government. On the 30th of March, 1791, shortly after the passage of the act referred to, General Washington issued an Executive proclamation having reference to the subject of this very act from Georgetown, a place remote from Philadelphia, which then was the seat of government, where the act referred to directed that "all offices attached to the seat of government" should for the time remain.

That none of his successors have entertained the idea that their executive offices could be performed only at the seat of government is evidenced by the hundreds upon hundreds of such acts performed by my predecessors, in unbroken line from Washington to Lincoln, a memorandum of the general nature and character of some of which acts is submitted herewith; and no question has ever been raised as to the validity of these acts or as to the right and propriety of the Executive to exercise the powers of his office in any part of the United States.

U. S. GRANT.

WASHINGTON, May 4, 1876.

Memorandum of absences of the Presidents of the United States from the national capital during each of the several Administrations, and of public and Executive acts performed during the time of such absences.

PRESIDENT WASHINGTON was frequently absent from the capital; he appears to have been thus absent at least one hundred and eighty-one days during his term.

During his several absences he discharged official and Executive duties, among them:

In March, 1791, he issued a proclamation, dated at Georgetown, in reference to running the boundary for the territory of the permanent seat of the Government.

From Mount Vernon he signed an official letter to the Emperor of Morocco, and from the same place the commission of Oliver Wolcott as Comptroller of the Treasury, and the proclamation respecting the whisky insurrection in Pennsylvania; also, various sea letters, the proclamation of the treaty of 1795 between the United States and Spain, the Executive order of August 4, 1792, relative to the duties on distilled spirits, etc.

When at Germantown he signed the commission of John Brackenridge as attorney of the United States for Kentucky, and that of engineer of the United States Mint.

He proposed to have Mr. Trujo officially presented, as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary from Spain, to him at Mount Vernon; but, although Mr. Trujo went there for the purpose, the ceremony of presentation was prevented by Mr. Trujo's having accidentally left his credentials.

PRESIDENT JOHN ADAMS.

President John Adams was absent from the capital during his term of four years, on various occasions, three hundred and eighty-five days.

He discharged official duties and performed the most solemn public acts at Quincy in the same manner as when at the seat of Government.

In 1797 (August 25) he forwarded to the Secretary of State a number of passports which he had signed at Quincy.

He issued at Quincy commissions to numerous officers of various grades, civil and military.

On the 28th of September, 1797, he forwarded to the Secretary of State a commission for a justice of the Supreme Court, signed in blank at Quincy, instructing the Secretary to fill it with the name of John Marshall if he would accept, and if not, Bushrod Washington. He issued a proclamation opening trade with certain ports of Santo Domingo, and signed warrants for the execution of two soldiers, and for a pardon.

PRESIDENT JEFFERSON was absent from the seat of government, during his two terms of office, seven hundred and ninety-six days, more than one-fourth of the whole official period.

During his absence he signed and issued from Monticello seventy-five commissions, one letter to the Emperor of Russia, and nine letters of credence to diplomatic agents of the United States accredited to other governments.

PRESIDENT MADISON

was absent from the seat of government during his two Presidential terms six hundred and thirty-seven days.

He signed and issued from Montpelier, during his absence from the capital, 71 commissions, 1 proclamation, and 9 letters of credence to ministers, accrediting them to foreign governments, and, as it appears, transacted generally all the necessary routine business incident to the Executive office.

PRESIDENT MONROE

was absent from the capital, during his Presidential service of eight years, seven hundred and eight days, independent of the year 1824, and the two months of 1825 for which period no data are found.

He transacted public business wherever he happened to be, sometimes at his farm in Virginia, again at his summer resort on the Chesapeake, and sometimes while traveling. He signed and issued from these several places away from the capital numerous commissions to civil officers of the Government, exequaturs to foreign consuls, letters of credence, two letters to sovereigns, and 37 pardons.

PRESIDENT JOHN Q. ADAMS was absent from the capital, during his Presidential term of four years, two hundred and twenty-two days.

During such absence he performed official and public acts, signing and issuing commissions, exequaturs, pardons, proclamations, etc.

Referring to his absence in August and September, 1827, Mr. Adams, in his memoirs, volume 8, page 75, says: "I left with him (the chief clerk) some blank signatures to be used when necessary for proclamations, remission of penalties, and commissions of consuls, taking of him a receipt for the number and kind of blanks left with him, with directions to return me, when I came back, all the signed blanks remaining unused, and to keep and give me an account of all those that shall have been disposed of. This has been my constant practice with the respect to signed blanks of this description. I do the same with regard to patents and land grants."

PRESIDENT JACKSON

was absent from the capital during his Presidential service of eight years five hundred and two days.

He also performed executive duties and public acts while absent.

He appears to have signed and issued while absent from the capital very many public papers, embracing commissions, letters of credence, exequaturs, pardons, and among them four Executive proclamations.

On the 26th of June, 1833, he addressed a letter from Boston to Mr. Duane, Secretary of the Treasury, giving his views at large on the removal of the "deposits" from the United States Bank and placing them in the State banks, directing that the change with all its arrangements should be, if possible, completed by the 15th September following, and recommended that Amos Kendall should be appointed an agent of the Treasury Department to make the necessary arrangements with the State banks. Soon after, September 23, a paper signed by the President and purporting to have been read to the Cabinet was published in the newspapers of the day. Early in the next session of Congress a resolution passed the Senate inquiring of the President whether the paper was genuine or not, and if it was published by his authority, and requesting that a copy be laid before that body.

The President replied, avowing the genuineness of the paper and that it was published by his authority, but declined to furnish a copy to the Senate, on the ground that it was purely executive business, and that the request of the Senate was an undue interference with the independence of the executive, a coordinate branch of the Government.

In January, 1837 (26th), he refused the privilege to a committee, under a resolution of the House of Representatives, to make a general investigation of the Executive Departments without specific charges, on the ground, among others, that the use of the books, papers, etc., of the departments for such purpose would interfere with the discharge of the public duties devolving upon the heads of the different departments, and necessarily disarrange and retard the public business.

PRESIDENT VAN BUREN

was absent from the capital during his Presidential term one hundred and thirty-one days.

He discharged executive duties and performed official and public acts during these absences.

Among the papers signed by President Van Buren during his absence from the seat of government are commissions, one of these being for a United States judge of a district court, pardons, etc.

PRESIDENT TYLER

was absent from the capital during his Presidential term one hundred and sixty-three days, and performed public acts and duties during such absences, signing public papers and documents to the number of twenty-eight, in which were included commissions, exequaturs, letters of credence, pardons, and one proclamation making public the treaty of 1842 between the United States and Ecuador.

PRESIDENT POLK

was absent from the capital during his Presidential term thirty-seven days, and appears to have signed but two official public papers during such absence.

PRESIDENT TAYLOR

was absent from the capital during the time he served as President thirty-one days, and while absent signed two commissions, three "full powers," two exequaturs, and the proclamation of August 11, 1849, relative to a threatened invasion of Cuba or some of the provinces of Mexico.

PRESIDENT FILLMORE

was absent from the capital during the time he served as President sixty days. During such absence he signed pardons, commissions, exequaturs, etc.

PRESIDENT PIERCE

was absent from the capital in all during his Presidential term fifty-seven days. The several periods of absence which make up this aggregate were each brief, and it does not appear that during these absences the President signed any public official documents except one pardon.

PRESIDENT BUCHANAN.

was absent from the capital during his Presidential term fifty-seven days, and the official papers which he is shown to have signed during such absence are three exequaturs and one letter of credence.

In addition to the public documents and papers executed by the several Presidents during their absences from the seat of goverment, constant official correspondence was maintained by each with the heads of the different Executive Departments.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I have no pretensions as a lawyer. I shall therefore make no attempt to contribute anything to the constitutional phases of this debate. Whatever knowledge of law I may once have had has become a great deal like my knowledge of Latin and Greek, a dim and fading memory. I simply know enough to steer clear of any debate on constitutional questions. Therefore I shall have nothing whatever to say upon the constitutional aspects of this question. I shall assume that Congress has complete constitutional power to enact such a law.

My objections to the bill do not go simply to the question of its constitutionality. I believe that the measure is bad in principle, and I think it is utterly and absolutely unnecessary. It has sometimes seemed to me that there is a disposition in this country to indulge a sort of superstitious worship of the penal code as a remedy for all the ills that afflict the body politic. Whenever any great or sudden calamity falls upon the country there is a general foot race to see who shall be first to the statute book with some new or more terrible penalty that shall make it forever impossible for such a calamity to happen again. Penal laws and a rigorous administration of the penal law are so vitally essential to well-ordered and well-governed society that men naturally fall into the habit of ascribing every evil that exists and every misfortune that may happen to some lack of severity either in the law or in the administration of the law.

When the news was flashed over the country that President McKinley had been assassinated, the press of the country was immediately deluged with all manner of proposed schemes of legislation, most of them utterly idle and futile, many of them utterly vicious and revolutionary in their character.

Mr. President, with all due respect—and a great deal of respect is due—to the distinguished author of this bill, I do not believe a more futile, a more unnecessary, a more utterly ineffective law ever encumbered the statute books of the country than the bill we now have under consideration. If it be the object of punishment not to wreak vengeance upon the criminal, but to prevent the recurrence of the crime, what possible good could this bill accomplish? What good would it have done if it had been already the law from the foundation of the Government? We have had three Presidents assassinated in the United States. Who can believe that if this bill had been the law of the country it would have saved the life of a single one of them, or would have had the slightest deterring effect upon the assassin?

The Senator from Massachusetts says the fact that we have had three Presidents assassinated indicates that there is some great and urgent necessity for more legislation. I say if you had had this bill upon the statute books from the very foundation of the Government it would not have saved the life of a single one of the three Presidents who were assassinated, and it would not have prevented a single assault that has been made upon the life of a President.

The bill proposes to take away from the States the jurisdiction they have in these matters and to confer it upon the General Government. What good will that do? Again, I ask, what good would it have done if the jurisdiction of these offenses had been always exclusively in the Federal Government?

Of the three Presidential assassinations in the United States, two of them took place right here in the city of Washington, within the shadow of this Capitol, within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Government. In the first case, the assassin made his escape from the city of Washington. After a long and arduous pursuit he was finally shot by his captors and died without being brought to trial. In the second case, the man was apprehended upon the spot, and after a long and tedious trial he was finally convicted and executed. The third case occurred within the State and jurisdiction of New York, and the man was promptly arrested, promptly tried, promptly convicted, and promptly executed. All the power of this great Government could not have killed him any quicker and could not have killed him any deader than did the State of New York.

Mr. President, as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] says, I am willing to go as far in the right direction as any living man to safeguard from violence the life of the President of the United States. I am willing to go as far within the limits of the Constitution and the principles of free government as any living man to stamp out that treason to all law and all government which flaunts itself under the name of anarchy. But it seems to me it is a very serious matter to assume, and to legislate upon the assumption, that the sovereign States of this Union—and I was delighted to hear the Senator from Massachusetts describe them as sovereign States—to assume that the great States of this Union have neither the will nor the power to protect any citizen, from the very highest to the very lowest, who may come within their borders.

Mr. President, there has been for many years a regrettable tendency to belittle the States, to enfeeble their power, to take from them their rightful jurisdiction and bestow it upon the courts of the United States. I say it is an unfortunate tendency, and in this case there is absolutely no necessity for it. So far as I am concerned, I will not assume, as I should have to assume in order to vote for this bill, that we can not trust in the power and patriotism of the States of this Union to protect the President of the United States.

Sir, whenever the President comes as an honored guest into the State of Tennessee, when he comes to visit the home of Polk and Johnson or to stand by the tomb of Old Hickory, I want him to feel that he is under the protection of Tennessee law and of Tennessee justice, and that he does not need to bring with him the shield of a Federal statute to protect him against the citizens of Tennessee. I do not want it proclaimed from the Capitol of this nation that the President of the United States can not sleep in peace and security under the roof of Tennessee without stationing a Federal sentry at the door. I say if the President of the United States comes within the borders of Tennessee—and the same is true of every other State in the Union—he will find ample security under her laws and the protection of her courts, and I do not want any legislation put upon the statute books on a contrary assumption.

Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts says that in times of great political excitement the President of the United States might not be safe and that his murderer might not be punished in certain parts of the country, and he referred to conditions which prevailed in some parts of the country at the time of the assassination of President Lincoln. That may have been true at that time, but I do not think we need to legislate upon the assumption that any such condition can ever exist again in this country. It is possible, sir, that at some time in the far future revolution may rise and madness and fury may take possession of the minds of the people; but if that time ever comes it is as likely to paralyze the arm and the power of the Federal courts as it is to paralyze the courts and the justice in any State in the Union. If such a time shall ever come, then all your penal statutes might as well have been written against wind and fire.

Mr. President, the Senator referred to section 7. He admitted that it was the only part of the bill which would have been at all effective in the past in protecting the lives of any of our Presidents. Leave out section 7, as the Senator from Massachusetts admits, and if the rest of the bill had always been the law Lincoln would still have been assassinated and Garfield would have been assassinated and McKinley would have been assassinated. Section 7 is the only part of the bill which, according to the Senator from Massachusetts himself, would have been at all effective and protective in the past.

Mr. HOAR. I did not say that.

Mr. CARMACK. I understood the Senator to say so. I asked the Senator whether if this bill had always been the law it would have saved the life of either one of our Presidents, and he proceeded to give me reasons based upon section 7.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I did not say the other sections of the bill would not have been effective and protective in the past. I said they would not have prevented these particular crimes.

Mr. CARMACK. As I understood the Senator, he said it would not have saved the life of either of the three Presidents.

Mr. HOAR. That is a very different proposition.

Mr. CARMACK. I so understand the Senator's statement. I said that, so far as concerned the three Presidents who were assassinated, if this bill had been the law it would not have saved the life of either one of them.

Section 7 provides:

> That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to select and detail from the Regular Army a sufficient number of officers and men to guard and protect the person of the President of the United States without any unnecessary display.

As I said yesterday to the Senator, I have no particular objection to that section. If it were proposed to be enacted separately I should have no particular objection to it, but at the same time I believe that if that were the law of the country it would be utterly ineffective; and I say now that if this bill does become a law section 7 will be a dead letter from the very time it goes upon the statute book.

How are you going to protect the life of the President or protect him from violence by a detail of Army officers? It means that the President would have to be surrounded all the time; that he could not move out of the White House for a quiet stroll without, as the Senator from Florida said, being put into the middle of a hollow square like he was being marched out to be executed. He could not go to church without being surrounded by a military guard. He could not go out for a horseback ride without being surrounded by a cavalcade of horse guards to protect his person. I have no objection whatever to that being done. I have no objection because of the display it might make. It might be done, perhaps, without any great pomp or display; but at the same time it would be necessary, in order to be effective, to surround the President with men in such a way that it would become irksome and absolutely intolerable to any ordinary man.

Mr. President, the gentleman now in the White House would not tolerate that sort of thing for a moment. If this were made obligatory upon him, he would climb out of one of the back windows of the White House and slip out of the back gate and dodge through an alley, if it were necessary, in order to get away from his escort. He would not consent that every time he took a stroll, every time he took a horseback ride, every time he went to the theater, there should be a lot of military guards surrounding him; that when he is sitting in the box of the theater some man must stand there with a bayonet to keep anybody with supposed evil intent from coming near his sacred person.

I say President Roosevelt would not tolerate that for a moment. It would be absolutely unendurable to him, and in order to make that section at all effective, to make it impossible for assassins to attack the President of the United States by reason of the guard you put around him, you would have to have him absolutely surrounded by guards all the time. He would have to travel like the Czar of Russia or the Sultan of Turkey. As a matter of fact, the President can now have all of such protection he would tolerate. President McKinley had guards and Federal detectives all about him when he was shot.

Some Senators seem to lay a good deal of stress upon the fact that none of the States of the Union make it a capital offense to attempt the life of a person, and that in order to protect the life of a President it is necessary to make it a capital offense to assault him with intent to kill. I have no objection particularly to such a penalty being visited upon the man who assaults the President with intent to kill, but it seems to me it is utter nonsense to suppose that it would have any effect whatever in deterring men from such crimes. To make it known to the assassin that "we will hang you just as quickly for attempting to kill as we will for killing" certainly will not deter the man who goes there with the intention of killing, of committing a capital offense, and expecting to be hanged for his deed.

I can understand, on the other hand, that even in the moment of pulling the trigger, a sudden sense of the awfulness of the crime and a dread of punishment might come upon the would-be assassin and deflect his aim. I can understand that under such circumstances, having fired one shot, with the dread of the death penalty coming upon him, he would not fire the second. But if you make it, as you do under this bill, a capital offense for a man to level his pistol, if the moment he draws his pistol and levels it at the President of the United States or any member of his Cabinet the crime becomes complete and the death penalty is fixed, then the man would have no other motive except to accomplish his purpose and to finish his deadly work.

Mr. President, it seemed to me there was a great deal of force in the remarks made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. Here you propose in this bill to make it a capital offense for a man to attack with intent to kill the Secretary of the Interior. Out of private malice, because of personal feeling, if he were to attack the Secretary of the Interior in my State under circumstances that would make the assault murder only in the second degree if it resulted in death, he would under this bill become guilty of a capital offense; that is, if he "willfully and maliciously" kill or cause the death, or attempt it, of the Secretary of the Interior.

As the Senator says, not in one case out of ten thousand would a man attack the Secretary of the Interior or any of the members of the Cabinet low in the order of succession with any idea of making an assault upon the Government. He might do it from motives of personal revenge, growing out of a private quarrel; and I say that, under the terms of this bill, if he were to do it, and the assault was only such an assault as would have constituted murder in the second degree or manslaughter if it had resulted in death, then such mere assault upon the Secretary of the Interior dooms that man to the gallows. I say there is absolutely no justification for taking these members of the Cabinet and placing them upon a higher level than you would an ordinary citizen when it comes to the protection of the law.

Suppose a man in Tennessee should "willfully and maliciously" assault the Secretary of the Interior with intent to kill, but should do him no harm whatever. Suppose at the same time a man should willfully and maliciously kill the governor of Tennessee. The man who killed the governor of Tennessee would go to the penitentiary, and the man who shot at the Secretary of the Interior and missed him would be hanged.

Now, if I believed that this bill was necessary or that it would accomplish any good object, I might swallow any constitutional scruples I might have and vote for it. But I do not believe it will do any good on the face of the earth. I do not believe it will accomplish any good object. I do not believe it will make the lives and persons of our Presidents and other officials one whit safer than they are to-day.

As the Senator said, we have got to go to the root of the evil and deal with the causes that bring about these assaults upon our Presidents and that are bringing about assaults upon crowned heads and the presidents of other republics all over the world. Unless we can do that, making more penalties and taking away from the States their rightful jurisdiction will be utterly vain, and your laws will not be worth the paper upon which they are printed.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, it may be safely assumed that the same detestation for assassination and abhorrence for nihilism and anarchy obtains in the breast of one Senator as well as that of another. So no profession of particular virtue in this regard amounts to anything except to voice the common sentiment of every Senator here.

We are now a little bit in a state of hysteria. There was an assassination of a most amiable and lovely character, a beloved President of the United States, when surrounded by vast throngs of his fellow-countrymen. No man could ascribe to the assassin any sort of personal resentment, because the victim had never offended anybody. The result was that a wail of sorrow swept over the whole nation and a righteous and fiery rain and hail of public wrath and indignation was showered upon everybody who in the slightest degree sympathized with anarchism or nihilism. Then this great pressure coming from the public behind us, it was deemed fit to enact some sort of legislation, whether to be deterrent, punitive, or vindictive this bill discloses, and this measure has been presented and set forth as the best labors of the Committee on the Judiciary on this point.

I object to the bill, in the first place, mainly because it establishes the inequality of men before the law. The equality of all men before the law is the very foundation stone not only of this but of all free republics, and any contrary doctrine simply is to liquefy the foundation and let the superstructure fall. Mr. Gladstone pointed out the great differences between the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of England by saying that in the great Republic the Constitution was founded upon the equality of all men, and that the constitution of the Empire was founded upon the inequality of men.

This bill is another indication in my mind of the tendency toward imperial government. For that reason, Mr. President, I never could vote for a bill which established that inequality. I speak not of any assault upon the right of a State to try for offenses committed within its jurisdiction, because I believe that we have the power to protect the President of the United States and his successors legally in office, if we choose to do so. The question is whether it is wise to do it, whether it is expedient to do it, and whether the bill will be effective of the results that are desired and proposed by the committee which brings it to this body.

Now let us see, Mr. President, as to the utility of this measure. It was well stated by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] that if the bill had been enacted from the beginning of the Government the results would have been the same; and if the seventh section, to which objection has been made here, and properly made, had also been on the statute books the same result would have followed. How could a detail of soldiery, whether in full uniform or in citizens' clothes, have saved Mr. McKinley? When he was surrounded by that vast crowd of people who asked the pleasure and honor of shaking him by the hand, and when he was receiving them, one by one, as fast as they could come hurrying each other in the approach to him, how could anybody have prevented that assassination? Neither battalions nor parks of artillery, nor detectives in citizens' clothes, nor anybody could have prevented it.

Would any fear of punishment have deterred the criminal? He knew that he must certainly die for that offense, and not only that, Mr. President, but he gloried in the notoriety and what he called the honor of having slain the ruler of a great people. He even denied that he had an accomplice, because he would monopolize the whole glory of that bloody achievement in his own person. Was he afraid of statutes, or of details of soldiery, or detectives, or any other power human or Divine? No; he intended to remove, as he called it, the ruler of a great people for the distinguished honor which it would give him among his associates. They were the public whose opinions he respected and honored and feared, and no other. This man felt that he was designed by fate to do this thing, and it is useless to say that any provision of a statute could have prevented the President's assassination by his hand.

When Mr. Lincoln, one of the greatest and most beloved of all the Presidents of this country, sat in a box in a theater surrounded by his friends and admirers and lovers, the box being above the stage floor of that theater, if the whole audience had been armed with rifles and revolvers and bayonets could they have saved him? Could anyone have foreseen that an actor, who had free access to the theater, who lived night after night behind the scenes, would step forward in one moment, enter that box and shoot the President? Who could foresee it? If they had been there, as I said, all over the audience and sitting in the box they could not have prevented it.

Then, when Mr. Garfield was assassinated he was going into a depot in this city to take passage to New York with his friend the Secretary of State. The passengers or citizens of the country were crowding to the door before and behind him, and one coming in behind leveled his pistol and shot the President to the floor. Who could have prevented that? Can you station military guards at the doors of the depot when the President chooses to pay a visit to some other place, who will search every citizen who comes in before or behind him or mingles in that vast depot? Can you anywhere exercise this espionage, which seems to be the only feature in the bill that makes it effective? Are we to get back to Chinese methods and be governed by espionage?

Now, Mr. President, I do not think that this bill is worth a single cent. I object to it, I said, on the first ground of its establishing inequality. This is a thin wedge, which, after a while, as we progress in the present tendency toward imperialism, will be driven in tap by tap until the whole body is dissevered, and then we will have the classes, which we have so long decried and so long have fought against. There will be legislation then for individuals.

Take another case. This is a proposition to punish a man with death who attempts to assault any one of those in succession to the Presidency. It may be a private brawl. It may be a strictly personal matter. Suppose that I would go down here—I will say some other gentleman, not myself, for I am pacific—suppose some hot-blooded man goes down there who respects himself and out of that respect would resent an insult anywhere, in the chancery of Heaven, if it was offered there. He gets to talking with a gentleman who would not succeed to the Presidency in a hundred millions of years, counting the probabilities of all those before him being removed or dying or resigning or anything of the sort. In the course of a business conversation hot words come from contradictions or misunderstandings, and then there is an assault made by either one of the parties—it matters not which—and in the melée one of them is killed. Then that man has to be hung. If he is not guilty he is to be hung. In other words, a Senator of the United States beginning a conversation with a Secretary who never will under any circumstances be President, and in an altercation with him of a purely personal character defends himself and inflicts an injury upon him, or assaults him, if you mean to have it that way, and the result is that he is to be tried in a Federal court and to be hung or executed in some way. One of the Senators on the other side went so far.

I wish to say now that I am delighted with the speech made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], which had in it the true ring of American republicanism and the love of the equality of all men—equality, fraternity, liberty.

One Senator, who I am sorry is not in his seat now, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], said the other day that this is such a tremendous affront, so serious and heinous an outrage against the sovereignty of the United States, that if any one of these official heads likely in the succession to become the Chief Executive should be assaulted or should assault another, the man ought to have such patriotism as to forbear, and he used the very strongest case that his imagination could conceive.

He said if even the sanctity of the household had been invaded by the President or one of his successors, he should have sufficient patriotism to forego his revenge or the satisfaction of his honor for at least the four years of the wrongdoer's term, or the eight years, if he is reelected. I have too much respect for that Senator to believe that he was talking seriously, and I will not accept his language as being serious. But, in my opinion, a man who, in a case of that sort, can wait four years will be very easily persuaded to wait four hundred years, and at the end of four hundred years he will compromise the case for a five-dollar bill. I do not want any such people in the United States as would for an instant delay in a matter of that kind.

Mr. President, I have as much respect for the office of President as any man in the Senate or anywhere else. I have as much respect for the incumbent of the office. I have seen a goodly number of Presidents inaugurated; I have had the pleasure of knowing them in business and socially; and I must say that I have never respected the man any more after he got in the chair than I did before. I do not think that any office on earth can ennoble any man, and I do not believe that any man with a proper self-respect can believe that any office can ennoble him or raise him in one single degree. I had as much respect for myself when I was a citizen without an office and never dreamed of holding one as I have to-day, or as I should have if I were twenty times the President of the United States or the autocrat of all the Russias.

This thing of bowing down before the fetich of a pseudo sovereign as the President of this country, according to the late administration of things—not the fault of the Executive, I will say—is something that is alarming to every man who loves the Republic. We are too reverential entirely. Time and again I have heard on this floor that we must not criticise the Supreme Court and that we must not criticise the President, although the papers and everybody else criticise the Senate and the House of Representatives, which is the great political department of this Government and its real sovereignty. It is the brain that devises the policies of the Government; it is the brain that protects and defends the Government. The Executive is merely the hand that executes the will of the brain and has just as much relation in its dignity as the brain does to the hand. The Supreme Court is simply the mind that resolves the meaning of the brain in its message to the hand.

It is the Executive that must do its bidding. The most dangerous thing that can happen to this Republic is when the Executive begins to think that he can think. He is simply to obey the orders that are given to him by the Congress of the United States, and the only time he can think is when the Constitution recognizes his right and makes it his duty to report upon the condition of the country in his messages to Congress.

Now, as for this detail of soldiery, I think that is absolutely ineffective. There is no way that you can make it effective. As was said by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], a thousand rifles from a thousand windows could shoot down the President in the midst of a cavalcade of cavalry, parks of artillery, or a whole brigade of infantry. You are not bound to reach the President at arm's length. The far-carrying rifle of to-day will shoot 3 miles, and nobody would ever hear the sound of the report. There are a thousand ways by which the President could be killed, and there is not a single way that will be prevented by these soldiers.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] thinks that soldiers will be effective. He says if the soldier could not have prevented this assassination he was too big a fool to be in the Army. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he thinks that the average soldier of the United States Army is any brighter, is any more resolute than a man in the detective force? Certainly if he is one-tenth as brainy and smart and quick and resolute as the detective, then the detective ought to be dismissed from his business, for he is not fit for it. It is an uncommon man, possessing every manly quality, that makes a detective. He has got to have the keenest wit, the most brilliant perception, and the most resolute and lion-like courage to be a detective. The very best men of that class have continually surrounded the Presidents of the United States in all their movements. They have surrounded them in an utterly unobtrusive and unostentatious manner, and they have been as effective as any other men could have been. But there has not been a single assassination to date that could have been prevented by any means that Congress or any human brain could have devised. These acts of violence must come.

We have here not only the punishment of hanging or execution for the murder, but for the attempt to murder. Not only must there be an intention criminally, but there must be an overt act. Now, this is Draconian system, as it was denominated by my distinguished friend from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. Here is a man at Paterson, N. J., said to be the foulest nest of anarchists in this country, who plotted the death of King Umberto, and if that man had conspired to take the life he could be hung here. But what becomes of the assassin of King Umberto? He was not executed. He is to-day a life prisoner for killing the King of Italy, but we would have hung the man in New Jersey who instigated, aided, or abetted that assassination. Yet Umberto was a most popular and able king. He was regarded by his subjects with as much affection as any other reigning sovereign in Europe.

There was a worse case than that. There are two regicides now in Europe serving life imprisonment for assassination. A man walked up to the Empress Elizabeth and drove a knife in her side when entering her carriage, a woman who was beloved by the people in all the Austro-Hungarian Empire for all the virtues that adorn the social and domestic life, perfectly harmless, an Empress unable to do anything substantive or affirmative, unable to do anything except acts of kindness and goodness, which she did, exposing herself at all times to all risks in absolute confidence in the affection of her subjects. She was smitten down by the assassin, and the assassin is serving a life term in prison. When they do not punish in those old countries the assassin himself with death, we propose to punish with death the man who aids and abets here in our country. I do not object to that. I am sorry that they did not hang both those assassins, and I am willing to hang those who abetted Umberto's assassin, so far as that is concerned, if proof can be made.

Mr. President, the bloodiest code is not the one that is best executed. On the contrary, it is generally a dead letter. You can make a code so severe that the public sentiment will revolt. I do not believe, however, that you can make it too severe, for death alone seems to be a sufficient punishment. I do not know that it will prevent. It may be punitive and it may be vindictive, but it satisfies outraged public sentiment and removes at least this miscreant from the face of the earth, and that is at least a little bit. I am willing to do that. If a measure can be devised to rid this country and the world of anarchists, I will vote for it. I should like to see them exterminated as vermin, as enemies of the human race, hostes humani generis. I want to do something that is effective.

It is not any honor particularly upon it; it does not show very exalted patriotism nor any great indignation at the assassination, nor any great sorrow for the death of the man assassinated, for us to go into extremes and put upon the statute books laws which will never be enforced. You can never get a jury that will hang a man who aided and abetted an attempt to murder. Of course the man who attempts to murder may be executed under this law, but in my opinion the whole business here will be ineffective. It will not promote in the slightest degree the object which we desire, which is the protection of the Chief Magistrate of this country and his statutory successors in office. If we can not do that, then we have done nothing except consumed a week of time.

I do not know any amendment that will make this bill suit me. I suppose I shall vote for the bill of the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. His substitute seems to be quite as effective and better, although I object to one clause in it. But there is a disposition to do something, and I suppose something will be done, not because it is going to effect anything, but it will please and satisfy a great many people who are not here, a great many good people throughout the land who believe that whenever they can get a statute passed the evil is remedied; and the country is full of such people. You can not find a crank in the United States on any subject but who can be persuaded that if he can get a law to carry out his idea the evil will be immediately swept out of existence. You can not make him believe that the law itself must be of such a form and character as to be operative. What he wants is to have it written in full on the statute books, and that is quite sufficient for him, and then he turns his attention to another fad, until he gets another statute, and so it goes on endlessly.

Mr. President, I think it was well said by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] that the present Executive would disdain and feel mortified and ashamed to be surrounded by any kind of guards, either in or out of uniform, on bicycles or on horses, on foot or in automobiles, or in any other way, to attend him in walks, in drives, going and coming to the theater, to the church, and so on. I do not believe any man who has not courage enough to take all the chances of the great office to which he aspires should ever be elected President of the United States. Of all things that ought never to be there it is the coward. He has no business to be in any office of responsibility, much less in any office of danger, because if he is there, there is more danger to result from cowardice toward the public than there is from assassination or any other form of evil to him; you can not trust him at all.

It is impossible then for us to frame any escort of any character that will in any degree affect the safety of the President of the United States wherever he may be. As I have shown, the difficulty is in searching people for weapons in a crowd like that at Buffalo, in the depot down here in Washington, and in the theater where Lincoln was killed. Here where the Federal power had complete jurisdiction and when both assassins knew that death would be the fate, these acts were committed, and they will never cease to be attempted and committed.

Mr. President, I have no disposition whatever to excuse in any manner any act that tends to the violation of the law. Then in much greater degree do I hold in abhorrence attempts on human life, and in still greater degree do I hold in abhorrence that crime of homicide which entails the greatest amount of difficulty, danger, and suffering to anybody. Have we found it necessary in the 45 States to have such a law as this passed to protect the governor? The governor is just as much essential to the full operation of the law and the administration of public justice as the President. Is not a State within its sphere just as sovereign? The governor of a State is also the commander of the armed forces of that State; and yet we have not on the statute books of any State of the 45 States composing this Union a single law that protects the governor of the State except equally with his fellow-citizens.

We have the instance of a governor shot down from a window in Kentucky, and the indignation, the sorrow, the grief, and the wrath of that people was stirred as deeply as it was when the beloved McKinley was shot down, yet there was no proposition from the legislature or the press or the people anywhere that Kentucky should put upon her statute book a law putting a citizen who happened for the time being to serve as her chief executive on a plane above his fellow-citizens. Equality of law was maintained as the greatest safeguard to everybody within the State of Kentucky, and the same law for all is the best safeguard for everybody within this great Republic.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I am constrained to vote against this bill, and I shall so vote though conscious of the fact that there are a great many people who will take it for granted—and it has been so stated by some people with a certain design, in my opinion—that those who oppose the passage of this bill may be considered as favoring anarchy and as indisposed to punish assassins and protect the President of the United States. It is not true, I do not care who says it; I know the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], the distinguished Senator who has charge of this bill, will pay no attention to anything of that sort, for it has been declared that he ought to have been hanged long ago for his declarations in regard to our policy in the Philippines.

Public clamor has nothing to do with my discharge of my duty. I know that some good people may condemn me because I do not vote for this bill, but I am here to vote my convictions of what is right and what is best, and I will take the responsibility of recording my vote in this instance against this bill.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, I feel great hesitancy in undertaking to say anything in reference to this bill after the very able discussion by the Senators who have preceded me, and I should not do so were it not for the fact that I am unable to support the bill in its present shape and that I desire to give some of the reasons which actuate me in my opposition to the bill.

I suppose this bill has grown out of the fact that some six months ago the President of the United States was shot down, and that there is, therefore, a desire to pass some law, more for the purpose of showing that we abhor the existence of the element that probably produced the assassination of the President than for any other reason.

I live in a State where there is not an anarchist and where an anarchist can not live. The soil of that State is not adapted to the production of anarchy; its climate is not congenial to the existence of anarchy. I live in a State where the people abhor anarchy and abhor anarchists to such an extent that there is not one there; there has not been one there, and one can not live in that State.

The people of the State of which I am a citizen would be as much in favor as the people of any other portion of the country of any law that would put down not only anarchists, but the doctrine of anarchy.

I live in a State where the death of the late President of the United States was mourned as greatly and as sincerely as it was in any other portion of the United States. I live in a State that had great respect and great admiration for him. Notwithstanding the fact that they are of a different political faith, they admired and respected the late President of the United States to a degree that amounted to affection.

I will say another thing. The people of the section of country from which I come suffered more, and have all along suffered more, from the assassination of President Lincoln than any other section of the United States. There was not anyone in all the State of Mississippi who did not condemn the assassination of President Lincoln and who did not have abhorrence of the man who was guilty of it or of any who incited or aided or abetted him in it.

I heard it said the other day by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that there were those in his section of the country who approved of the assassination of President Lincoln. There was not one in the State which I have the honor in part to represent in this Chamber who approved of it; there was not one who did not condemn it. They condemned it because they believe in law; they condemned it because they abhor the cowardice of the assassin; they condemned it because they condemn murder; they condemned it because there was a feeling through all that section of the country that a great calamity had befallen us, which was not so great upon the section of country from which he came.

I am not one of those who believe that either one of the three assassinations of our Presidents could have been prevented by a guard. I am not one of those who believe that either one of the assassinations could have been prevented by a law which would have authorized the Secretary of War to detail any number of men from the Army, in any kind of uniform, for the protection of the President of the United States, because, as I understand the law at the time of the assassination of President Lincoln, it was then in the power of the President of the United States, he being the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, to have detailed any number of men from the military force to have protected him against assassination, but inasmuch as the Government had existed for nearly a century, inasmuch as during all that time there had been no effort made to assassinate the Chief Executive of the country, the President did not feel, nor did the Secretary of War feel, that there was any necessity for the attendance upon him of a military escort for his protection. The President felt, as did the people of the country feel, that the innate affection of the people for the chief ruler of the country whom they had selected to preside over the destinies of the nation was sufficient to protect him against all personal violence.

So it would have been if there had been upon the statute book at that time a law authorizing the Secretary of War to have detailed a force to have gone with the President of the United States as a bodyguard. It would not likely have been done, or if the law had been as it is proposed in this bill, not only authorizing this to be done—which could have been done under the laws at that time existing, and under the Constitution as it then existed—but directing that it should have been done, it would have been regarded as of so little moment, it would have been thought there was so little danger of any harm coming to the President of the United States in the theater which he was attending at that time, that, in all human probability, there would have been a very inefficient guard attending him if the law had absolutely directed the Secretary of War to have detailed a guard.

So, in my judgment, the very bill that is now proposed to be enacted into a statute, if it had been a law upon the statute book at that time, would have been inefficient to have protected the President of the United States from assassination. It certainly would have been "a consummation devoutly to be wished" by all the people of the State of which I am one of the representatives in this Chamber, if it could have been done, that his life should have been spared to us for the next four years from that time, so that he might have served out the term for which he had been chosen and for which he had been inaugurated by the people of the United States.

So far as the constitutional question has been argued, I agree with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. I believe that he is correct, that the bill in its present shape impinges the Constitution of the United States. I believe that it can be so shaped that it will not be obnoxious to the Constitution of the United States. I believe the amendment of the Senator will go far to the accomplishment of that purpose, if it will not entirely accomplish that effect.

But I am opposed to this bill so far as it undertakes to make any distinction in favor of one man—I do not care what his position may be, whether he is President of the United States or whether he occupies any other position—and against the other citizens of the United States. I am opposed to inequality of right between citizens of the United States before the law.

I believe, as was so forcibly stated by my colleague [Mr. MONEY] a few moments ago, that our Government is founded upon the equality of all men before the law. It does not make any difference whether he be the humblest citizen in the whole country or whether he be the President of the United States, as citizens all men should be equal before the laws of the country; there should be no inequality between them.

Of course, the President of the United States being selected for the purpose of representing the people of the United States in the Executive office, having certain functions devolved upon him by reason of the fact that he has been so selected and inducted into office according to law and according to the Constitution, it is very proper that a law should be enacted to protect him in the discharge of the duties thus devolved upon him, because they are duties and functions devolved upon him for the benefit of all the people of the country.

I have no objection to any law that shall accomplish that end; but outside of that, in his capacity as a citizen of the United States, he should stand before the law just as does the humblest individual in the United States. That is what was intended, according to my interpretation of the Constitution of the United States, when that instrument was formed. I do not believe that the framers of the Constitution intended that there should be any difference between the President of the United States and the humblest citizen of the United States before the laws of the country.

When the framers of the Constitution began to consider the question of treason against the United States, remembering that the country from which they had just been severed by a long and bloody revolution made the killing of the sovereign, the King of the country, treason, it was proposed to make it treason to kill the President of the United States; but the framers of the Constitution said, "No; the sovereignty of the Government of Great Britain rests in the King; he is not only sovereign, but it is the doctrine there that he is incapable of doing any wrong whatever." The sovereignty of the Government of the United States does not rest in the President of the United States; the sovereignty is in the States of the Union united, making the United States, the Government of which gets whatever power it has from the States which created it, and of which it is an offspring. That being so, they studiously refrained from putting any provision in that instrument making it treason to kill the President of the United States, thereby showing that it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution to put him on an equality with all the other citizens of the country.

The President is not the sovereign of the country. Sovereignty rests in the seventy or eighty million people of the country. Every man in the United States is a sovereign just as much as every other man; but the people delegate to certain officials the performance of certain functions for the benefit of all the people of the country. They select men to represent them in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States. They select a man to represent them in the chief executive office of the United States. The power they exercise is defined and limited just as much so as there is a definition and limitation of the power of the humblest marshal or the humblest constable in the United States.

The President is hedged about by law, just as much as is any other officer in the country; and it is not true, in my humble judgment, as stated by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] that if the President were to die the executive powers of the country would be dead until his successor was installed in office. The marshal who holds his office holds it until he is removed, he is bound by the rules of law, and his duties are defined by law just as much as are those of the President of the United States. He is guided in what he has to do by the laws of the country just as much as is the President of the United States. The President of the United States can not direct a marshal outside of the law and outside of the Constitution in the performance of any particular function, but he must discharge the duties pertaining to his office according to the law and according to the Constitution, by which he is controlled just as much as is the President of the United States in discharging the duties incumbent upon him.

Now, there is this mistake, if I may be allowed to say so without offending anyone, which is made by the Senators who undertake to argue that this bill can properly be enacted because it is in the power of Congress to protect the President of the United States, and that this is not making the offense described treason. They assume that a crime is committed against the individual or against his property. That is not true as a proposition of law. A man is not punished for his offense against an individual citizen or the property of an individual citizen, but he is punished because he has offended the State, or because he has offended the United States Government, which is the State in the case of a trial in the Federal courts. It is an offense against the Government for which he is tried, the commission of an unlawful act. Whether it is a violation of the mail laws or whether it is any other violation of law the offense is against the Government of the United States.

The citizen for any injury that is inflicted upon him individually, whether it be physical violence or whether it be against his property, must seek redress in a civil action before the courts; but when the Government prosecutes it prosecutes for the killing of one of its citizens or for the infliction of a wrong upon one of its citizens because it is an offense against the Government. The Government of the United States lays down its laws for the protection of its citizens, and says: "This law protects you, and the violation of this law is an offense." If you strike one of your fellow-men, you have offended against the State because you have offended against its laws, and when you are indicted and punished it is because you have committed an offense against the State and not an offense against the individual. True it is that the law is for the purpose of protecting all individuals in their rights, in their liberties, and in their property; but it is the violation of the law which is intended to accomplish that purpose that constitutes the offense against the State and for which the man is tried.

If a man shoots down the President of the United States in the State of New York he has offended the State of New York, whose law says "you must not commit murder." That law is for the purpose of preventing murder, that a man may be safe in his life, that he may go where he pleases without let or hindrance and without being subjected to harm or damage or hurt, and the law says "if you violate that law a certain penalty is attached to the violation thereof." It does not make any difference who it is and it does not make any difference whom he shoots down, if he violates the law he has offended the State, and it is just as much an offense against the State to violate its law in the shooting down of the humblest citizen—it does not make any difference who it is—in the shooting down of a tramp upon the streets or upon the highways, as it is for the shooting down of the President of the United States. It is the violation of the law, and it is an offense against the State because it is a violation of the law.

But when we say "if you attempt to kill one man you are violating the laws of the country, but if you attempt to kill another you have done no harm," that is an inequality which in itself is violative of the very spirit of our Constitution; and we must take the spirit as well as the letter of the Constitution. Suppose it is claimed that this difference is made because one man is President of the United States. Then it must be because it is made treason to kill the President of the United States.

While I am on this branch of the subject I want to call attention to the Neagle case, not because I think it is necessary to argue the points contained in that case—and I do not feel myself at all able to throw any light on the constitutional question after the very learned and able discussion of it by the Senator from Georgia—but I am not going to let this opportunity pass without putting into the RECORD, not only the opinion of the majority of the court in that case, but the opinion of the court delivered by Mr. Chief Justice Waite in another case.

Let us see to what the Neagle case, carried to its legitimate deduction, will lead. There was a man detailed for the purpose of protecting one of the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, which I think was a very good thing to do, if the case was properly represented. By the ex parte testimony in that case—for it seems the defendant in that case did not introduce any testimony, and we only have the testimony of one side—the defendant seemed to rest upon the principle of law, which seems to me to be incontrovertible, and must have seemed so to counsel for the defendant in that case, that it made no difference whether the deputy marshal was engaged in a business which the United States laws required him to engage in or not, when the State law indicted him, not for doing that which the laws of the United States required him to do, but indicted him for a crime against the laws of California—the crime of murder; he was not indicted for protecting Justice Field; he was not indicted and not held for killing a man in defense of Justice Field; but he was held on the charge of the murder of a citizen of California, and it made no difference whether it was a citizen of California or a citizen of any other State; it made no difference whether he was a citizen of any State or not; he was indicted for violating the laws of California in the killing of a human being.

Mr. CARMACK. But in the jurisdiction of California.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. In the jurisdiction of California and against the peace of the Commonwealth of California. He was indicted and held for that offense. When the writ of habeas corpus was applied for to take him out of the authority of the sheriff of a county in that State, the sheriff said: "I hold him under a warrant of the State of California." The petitioner said: "I am held for performing an act which I am required to perform by the laws of the United States." There was the issue made. The sheriff said: "That is not true; he is held on a charge of murder, on a charge of violating the laws of the State of California, the highest crime against the State of California, except treason against the State—that of murder committed in the State." The case went to trial. The judge of the Federal court took away from the court and the jury in California the trial of that very question, and proceeded to try, on a writ of habeas corpus, the question whether or not the petitioner was guilty of a violation of the law of the State of California.

That ought to have been allowed to have been tried in California. If it was true that he was there present—it does not make any difference whether he was marshal, or deputy marshal, or whether he was an officer of the Government of the United States, or whether he was innocent of any charge at all—if he was present, and if there was a murderous assault being made upon a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, or upon any other citizen, for that matter, it was not only the right of Deputy Marshal Neagle, but it was his duty to prevent the commission of that felony upon a justice of the Supreme Court, and it would have been equally his duty to have prevented the commission of a felony upon any other citizen or any other man, and not only would it be his duty to do it, but, under the old common law, he would have been punishable if he were not to do so, and that would have been a good defense in the court of the State of California. What right had the United States court to assume that the court of California would not discharge its duties? Now, what does Chief Justice Waite say in the case of ex parte Crouch? He says:

> It is elementary learning that if a prisoner is in custody of a State court of competent jurisdiction, not illegally asserted, he can not be taken from that jurisdiction and discharged on habeas corpus issued by a court of the United States simply because he is not guilty of the offense for which he is held. All questions which may arise in the orderly course of the proceeding against him are to be determined by the court to whose jurisdiction he has been subjected, and no other court is authorized to interfere to prevent it. Here the right of the prisoner to a discharge depends alone on the sufficiency of his defense to the information under which he is held.

That applies exactly to the case of Neagle.

> Whether his defense is sufficient is for the court which tries him to determine. If in this determination errors are committed, they can only be corrected in an appropriate form of proceeding for that purpose. The office of a writ of habeas corpus is neither to correct such errors nor to take the prisoner away from the court which holds him for trial, for fear if he remains they may be committed. Authorities to this effect in our reports are numerous.

Then Chief Justice Waite refers to Ex parte Watkins (28 U. S.), Ex parte Lange (85 U. S.), Ex parte Parks (93 U. S.), Ex parte Siebold (100 U. S.), Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S.), Ex parte Rowland (104 U. S.), Ex parte Curtis (106 U. S.), and Ex parte Yarbrough (110 U. S.). To these authorities he refers for support of that doctrine.

This is an illustration of the reason why this bill ought not to be passed. There, in the case of Crouch, a case exactly similar to that of Neagle, the defendant was denied a discharge, but in the case of Neagle, the defendant was discharged because he had killed a man who was making an assault upon a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Now, as much as it is to be desired that a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States should be protected, as every other officer ought to be protected in the discharge of his official duty, still the trial of that question ought to be left to the court in California, and two of the judges, including the Chief Justice, so held.

Now, I have some other objections to this bill, but before I proceed to state them I wish to read what is attributed in the papers to General Funston:

> All of those men who have fallen since December, 1900, have been victims of a lot of misinformed and misguided people here in the United States. It is perfectly proper for us to have all sorts of opinions as to what we should do with the Philippine Islands, but, for heaven's sake, let us keep them to ourselves until every square inch of that territory recognizes the sovereignty of the United States.

Here is an effort to stifle not only public opinion, but to stifle freedom of speech and the freedom of the press. Further than that the report proceeds:

> He then told of 24 American soldiers who had joined the Filipinos and who were afterwards captured and executed as traitors, and then said:
> "There are many men in the United States who did more with their mouths and minds to aid the insurgents than did these poor men with the Krag-Jörgensen rifles. I would rather see those men hanged for treason than to see one of our soldiers dead on the field of battle."

He would rather see those men hanged for treason, giving the idea that he has of treason. But I have some other objections to this bill. It provides:

> That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, willfully and maliciously kill or cause the death of the President or Vice-President of the United States, or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the President may devolve under the Constitution and laws, or who shall willfully and maliciously cause the death of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, shall be punished with death.

The willful killing of a man is not murder. The malicious killing of a man is not murder. It must be willfully done with malice aforethought. Malice in the sense of the law is wrongful. It is that which is violative of law. Let me read the definitions of murder given by some of the law writers:

> Murder, as defined at common law, is where a person of sound memory and discretion unlawfully and feloniously kills any human being, in the peace of the sovereign, with malice prepense or aforethought, either express or implied. (Wharton's Criminal Law, sec. 303.)

Blackstone says:

> When a person of sound memory and discretion unlawfully killeth any reasonable creature in being, and under the King's peace, with malice aforethought, either express or implied. (4 Blackstone, 195.)

In the case of Sparf and Hansen v. The United States (156 U. S.) the court held this definition to be a good definition of murder:

> Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being in the peace of the State, with malice aforethought, express or implied. (Justice Gray, in Sparf and Hansen v. United States, 156 U. S., 111).

Now, in the State of Massachusetts this is the statutory definition of murder:

> Murder committed with deliberately premeditated malice aforethought, or in the commission of or attempt to commit a crime punishable with death or imprisonment for life, or committed with extreme atrocity or cruelty, is murder in the first degree. (Code 1882, sec. 1, p. 1134.)

That is the statutory definition of murder in Massachusetts. In this proposed act they say the willful and malicious killing. A malicious killing is not necessarily a murderous killing. "Malice" applies in the law not to hatred, but "malice" in the law is an act against the law wrongfully committed.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me? What is the difference between malicious killing and murderous killing?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I was going to do that before I got through. Malicious killing is an unlawful killing, but it does not necessarily follow that it is a murderous killing.

Mr. SPOONER. But a malicious killing is a malicious killing.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Yes, sir; that is just exactly what it is. It may be manslaughter or murder.

Mr. SPOONER. But where there is an excess of force it might be an unlawful killing and not a malicious killing.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. An unlawful killing is a malicious killing.

Mr. SPOONER. Not necessarily. That is only my judgment.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I understand.

Mr. BACON. I would suggest to both Senators that possibly their difference arises from the fact that there are statutes in certain States—I know there is in Tennessee, for instance—which make the distinction such as the Senator draws. It is not one which existed at common law.

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. McCOMAS. Homicide by negligence would not be a malicious killing.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. It might be. In my State a man was sent to the penitentiary for killing another with medicine when he was trying to doctor him.

Mr. McCOMAS. Take the case where Lord Coleridge delivered such a striking opinion, where the boys were in a cherry tree getting cherries and other boys were shooting at a target, and the bullet went high above the target and killed the boy off at a great distance in the cherry tree. That was held to be an unlawful killing. It was homicide by criminal negligence, but there was no malice.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. In a case where a man is violating the law, if his shooting per se is a violation of the law, and he kills a man, he is guilty of unlawful homicide, and the malice is in doing that which the law prohibits him from doing. That is malice in law. It does not require that a man should have enmity or hatred against another to constitute malice in law. It is the doing of that which the law prohibits him from doing.

Mr. McCOMAS. I do not want to divert the Senator in his argument, but take the case of Budenseick in New York, where in building tenement houses they used bad material for mortar and the tenements fell down and certain people therein died. Budenseick, it is true, under the statute, but the statute stated the common law of homicide by negligence, was convicted of manslaughter and sent to the penitentiary.

Take the case which occurred about a hundred years ago of an uncle and an aunt who loved a niece whom they had reared. They believed in the faith cure, and they called in no physician when the child had something like diphtheria. They prayed for the child, and she died. The English court convicted the uncle and the aunt, who loved the child, of criminal negligence, manslaughter. It was an unlawful homicide. There was no malice. In that case there were love and affection undoubtedly.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Does not the Senator draw the distinction between malice which is ill will and malice in law which is a violation of the law? A man has never been held guilty of unlawful homicide unless it is held that he has been guilty of some violation of law in some particular. Criminal negligence is a violation of law which implies malice. So far as the law is concerned, the malice is in doing that which the law prohibits or else in leaving undone that which the law requires to be done. That is the malice. It does not require hatred or ill will. A man is guilty of manslaughter. It is a malicious act, so far as the unlawfulness of it is concerned, to commit manslaughter, and he may commit it when he is administering medicine with the best of motives; but if he is administering medicine in a criminal way, without knowing anything about what he is doing, the law punishes such a crime as that, if death results, as unlawful homicide and not as murder, because there is no malice aforethought in it. There is a difference between malice and malice aforethought. Malice at the time and malice aforethought. That makes the distinction.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I understand the point of the Senator's discussion is whether the words "willful" and "malicious" are sufficient to describe the crime of murder.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Yes, sir; and I hold that they are not. They describe the crime of manslaughter, but not of murder.

Mr. CARMACK. I know in my State they are not sufficient under the statute to prescribe the crime of murder in the first degree.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. They are not so at common law.

Mr. CARMACK. That is what I supposed.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. It would be manslaughter at common law and not murder.

The objection I have to this bill is that it attaches the death penalty to manslaughter, and not only so, but it attaches the death penalty to an attempt to commit manslaughter. One of my objections to the bill is that you are undertaking to eradicate this anarchistic crime by harsh laws which will not reach the result, and which may do harm. It is not the harshness nor the cruelty of a punishment that deters men from committing crime. It is the certainty of punishment. You see men running out of a shower of rain to shelter, when they will stand unmoved when the lightning plays around them. Yet the shower of rain only wets them, whereas a bolt of lightning would kill. But there is a certainty of the man becoming wet if he stays in the shower of rain, and there is not one chance in a thousand that he will be hurt by lightning. It is the certainty of punishment that deters men from the commission of offenses denounced by the law.

As the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] well said, if this bill is calculated to do anything at all it is calculated to cause the man who has once started upon the enterprise of murder or of assassination to complete it, because it would make no difference with him if he knows the law—and if he does not know the law it would not make any difference with him—whether he killed the man or not, for if he started he would lay himself liable to the death penalty for the mere effort to do it, and he would go on, whereas the horror of the penalty attached to the crime might present itself to his mind, and he might desist if the proposed law was not on the statute book.

Now, you attach the death penalty to manslaughter of a sovereign who happens to be in this country, whereas for the same offense against a citizen of the country you would send a man to the penitentiary probably for a year.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. In the State of Wisconsin many years ago they abolished the death penalty, and if murder were committed upon an Indian reservation in the State, under the laws of the United States the punishment was death. What would the Senator do in such a case?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. That is not to be commended, I hope.

Mr. SPOONER. But it is a fact.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. That state of facts ought not to be repeated. It is not a fact which ought to be followed, I think.

Mr. SPOONER. It is an offense against another sovereign, which prescribes its own punishment.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Which—this?

Mr. SPOONER. No; the case which I put. Under the laws of Wisconsin, murder was punished by imprisonment for life by the State. If it were committed upon an Indian reservation, the other sovereignty, the United States, punished murder by hanging.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I think all murder ought to be punished by hanging, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. SPOONER. That is what I think.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. That is my idea about it; but I do not think the law ought to be made by the United States Congress to attach the death penalty to an attempt to commit manslaughter upon a sovereign of a foreign country, whereas if in the same jurisdiction an attempt were made to commit manslaughter on a citizen of the United States the criminal might be sent to the penitentiary for a year, or even in some of the States he might not be sent to the penitentiary at all, but might be punished by a fine.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator thinks that murder ought to be punished by hanging. If the President of the United States was killed in the State which I in part represent, the murderer would be sentenced to the penitentiary for life. Does the Senator think that under an act of Congress, wherever committed, the murderer of the President of the United States ought to be hanged?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I will say this with reference to it: I think if the President of the United States goes into the State of Wisconsin he ought to be protected by the laws of Wisconsin just like anybody else, and the killing of the President ought to be punished the same as the killing of anybody else.

If the Senator wants to know what I think ought to be done, I will state that I think the law ought to be made so that the man who commits murder in the State of Wisconsin should be hanged. That is my idea about it. But I am not the man to decide. It is for the people of Wisconsin to say what kind of a law they want on that subject.

Mr. SPOONER. I have profound respect for the Senator from Mississippi. What he suggests is one of the troubles here. The punishment which shall be inflicted by a State for the crime of murder ordinarily depends upon the legislation of the State. If it is a crime against the United States Government, it is for Congress to prescribe the penalty; and the question here is whether, when the President of the United States is murdered, we shall make it an offense against the United States punishable everywhere within the jurisdiction of the United States by hanging, or leave it to the penalty prescribed by the State in which he happens to be when he is assassinated.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. My idea is that when the President of the United States goes into the State of Wisconsin—the Senator's State—he ought to be willing, and he is willing, I am sure—any President would be—to look to the laws of the State to protect him, just exactly as they would protect any other citizen in the State of Wisconsin. That is my objection to this bill, that you would have the law in the State of Wisconsin protect the citizens of the State of Wisconsin differently from what it would the President, and would make it a higher penalty in Wisconsin to kill the President than to kill a citizen of Wisconsin. My idea is that when the President goes to Wisconsin he goes there as a citizen, and he is under the protection of the laws of Wisconsin, just like any citizen in Wisconsin is under the protection of the laws of that State, and if he should be murdered there the murderer ought to suffer the same penalty that would be inflicted upon him if he were to murder the humblest citizen. It is not a violation of the sacred person of the President that is to be punished, but the violation of the person of everyone who is within the jurisdiction of the State of Wisconsin. That is the offense against the law.

I wish to say another thing in reference to it. What difference could it make to the President, after he was killed, whether the man who killed him was sent to the penitentiary for life or whether he was hung? It could be of no benefit to the President of the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. No; of course it could not, but it might make some difference to him whether the punishment were such under the law of the State or under the laws of the United States, which I think it ought to be, and that is what this bill is for, to deter his assassination.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Surely. The legislature of the State of Wisconsin has passed laws which that legislature, the law-making power, believes sufficient to protect the life of any person a citizen of Wisconsin, and if it is good enough to protect the life of any other citizen it seems to me it ought to be good enough to protect the President of the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator contend that the protection of all the officers of the United States in the discharge of official functions within the States should be left to the laws of the States and the judiciary of the States?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I will answer the Senator very frankly. I believe it would be very safe to do that.

Mr. SPOONER. That is not my question.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Will the Senator allow me to get through the answer?

Mr. SPOONER. I ask pardon.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I think it would be very safe to do that, but I have said that I have no objection and do not oppose any law that will protect the President or any other officer of the United States in the discharge of his duty, and if the Senator had been in the Senate Chamber or had been paying attention to the humble remarks that I am making——

Mr. SPOONER. I did.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. The Senator will remember, then, that I said I had no objection to any law which would protect the President in the discharge of the duties that devolve upon him as President, or protect any other officer of the United States just as much so as the President in the discharge of the duties that devolve upon him in the office which he holds. The objection I have to the bill is that it makes a distinction between the man who occupies the Presidency as an individual and any other individual in the country. That is the objection I have to the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator mean that if the President is assaulted while signing a commission or approving a bill he is in the discharge of official duty and therefore the offense might be punished by hanging, but if while signing a bill he stops to take a drink of water he is not in the discharge of his official duty and the punishment should be provided by the laws of the State? It that what the Senator means?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. The Senator from Wisconsin is not only a great Senator, but he is a great constitutional lawyer——

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. And a great man, in my judgment; but I think he is refining to such an extent in this case that it shows he is driven from the position which he took. The President of the United States, in my judgment, when he is in Washington, is in the discharge of his official duties. He may discharge those official duties when he is out of the city of Washington, but if he were to go on a pleasure trip to the State of Wisconsin, and were there on a pleasure trip and not in the discharge of any of the functions of the office which he holds, then, in my judgment, he ought to be regarded like any citizen of Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. I have never known any President to be on a purely pleasure trip. I have never known a President to be on any trip where he did not carry the burden of the Executive duty, and where he was not liable to be called upon and was not in fact called upon at almost any hour to discharge, by telegraph or otherwise, important Executive duties.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I wish to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question. He may not have heard of any President being absent on a purely pleasure trip. Has he heard of a Vice-President being absent on a purely pleasure trip?

Mr. SPOONER. That is not what I said.

Mr. PATTERSON. He is placed in precisely the same category with the President.

Mr. SPOONER. Not at all. That is another question. The Vice-President is always either discharging his duties in the Senate or liable to be called to discharge the duties as President of the Senate or——

Mr. PATTERSON. Or hunting mountain lions in Colorado.

Mr. SPOONER. Let me answer the Senator's question. Or waiting for the time to come under the Constitution, if it unhappily comes, when the Presidential duties devolve upon him, and wherever he is, he is under the obligation of the duty put upon him by the Constitution.

Mr. PATTERSON. That may be said of every Federal official.

Mr. SPOONER. It is not quite true. It is true of the President. In a qualified sense, not in the absolute sense as to which it is true of the President, it is true of the Vice-President. But I say literally, and I have known a little something during the last few years of the Presidential function, I have not known any waking hour when it could be fairly said of the President that he was not in the discharge of executive duty. What does the Senator say about that?

Mr. PATTERSON. About what?

Mr. SPOONER. I have not known any waking hour when the President might not fairly be considered to be in the discharge of his executive duty.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am very much in sympathy with the view taken by the Senator from Wisconsin, but then I have known Presidents to be off for a week duck hunting.

Mr. SPOONER. Duck hunting?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; away from all communication with the capital, away from telegraph and from mail. But, nevertheless, so far as the President is concerned, I am very deeply in sympathy with the view that the Senator from Wisconsin has stated. I am willing to allow the fiction to stand that he is always performing his duty.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose the bill ought to be amended so as to read, "A bill to protect the President of the United States, except while he is duck hunting, or riding a horse, or sitting at a state dinner, or riding on the cars, or living in the Adirondacks, or seeking a little necessary recreation, and that you can shoot him at these or at any other times." Is that what the Senator means?

Mr. PATTERSON. No, sir; I am in sympathy with the fiction of the Senator from Wisconsin. I am willing, for the sake of having it certain that the slayer of a President shall suffer death, which he may not suffer by reason of the difference in the laws of the different States relating to homicide, to accept the fiction that the President is always on duty, whether sleeping or waking, hunting or in his office, attending a social function, or in the Presidential room of this building waiting to sign bills.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may be permitted to proceed with his speech.

Mr. SPOONER. I beg pardon of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. There is no begging of pardon necessary. The Senator has not offended at all.

I will now answer the question of the Senator from Wisconsin with reference to the President always being liable to be called on to sign a bill. That is true, and the same thing may be said in reference to a United States marshal. He is liable at any time to be called upon to serve process, but it is only while in the service of process, or going to serve process, or returning from the service of process that an interruption of him would be considered a violation of law.

It may be said also that a Senator or Representative in his working hours is performing some of the functions that pertain to his office, because he is generally thinking about some affair of State as well as the President. Still, I do not suppose because of the mere fact that he is thinking or considering something of that kind, he would be considered as being in the discharge of his official duty, unless in the sense that the lawyer charged his client $10 for thinking about his case at night.

I want to revert to what I said a while ago, because I may be misunderstood in reference to believing that all men who are guilty of murder ought to be hung. I had my doubt about whether I was in favor of capital punishment or not for a long time. That question gave me a great deal of trouble until about twelve years ago last month. A farmer's little girl in the State in which I live and in the county in which I was raised—a little girl 13 years old—went out one Sabbath morning about 9 o'clock behind the garden in the orchard to learn her Sunday-school lesson to recite that day in Sunday school. A negro laborer on the place went to where she was, shot her down, stood over her and put the pistol over her and shot her through five times—the balls were found in the ground—setting her clothes on fire.

After that I never had any doubts about whether capital punishment was right or not. I do not believe in a case of that kind there could be any less punishment than death adequate to the crime committed, not as a matter of vindictiveness or revenge, because however much our indignation may be aroused and however much we may be horrified at the commission of such an outrage and crime as that, nevertheless the law never ought to punish anybody out of a spirit of vindictiveness or revenge. All punishment ought to be deterrent. When the law says that for the commission of a certain crime a certain penalty will be attached, that penalty ought to be attached for the purpose of showing to those who are disposed to commit crime that if they commit the crime the penalty denounced in the statute book will be inflicted upon them. That is the object of it.

After that, as I said, I never had any doubt in my mind as to whether capital punishment was right or not. In the case of a little girl studying her Sunday-school lesson, innocent, unoffending, incapable of giving any offense because of her inability to do so, shot down by a brute, it does not make any difference who or what he was, willfully, in cold-blooded murder, I say in a case of that kind no penalty would deter such a crime as that except the death penalty. That is the reason why I say, as I said to the Senator from Wisconsin, that I believe that the penalty of murder ought to be upon the statute book of every State. But I believe just as much that it ought to be in the lawmaking power of that State to say what penalty shall be attached to any crime, and any man who goes into that State as a citizen ought to submit himself to the protection which the law gives the citizens of the State which he visits.

A word escaped me just now in reference to the President. I think that the President does sometimes go off on pleasure trips. I think it is proper for him to do so and that he ought to do so for recreation. The duties of the office of President are very arduous, the responsibilities are great, the strain upon the mental man is great, and there ought to be some way by which he can get off somewhere at some time for the purpose of recuperating his mental and physical strength. I do not think it is any reflection upon the Presidents to go off for the purpose of recuperating in any manner he sees proper, and when he does do so I do not feel that there is any great danger to the Government of the United States because of his absence.

Fortunately we have a form of Government here that does not depend upon any one man or any one official for its administration. It is administered by thousands of officers in the ramifications of government all through the country in a thousand ways, so that it does not make any difference, as far as the law is concerned, whether any officer is shot down, the law goes on; the country goes on; the Government goes on undisturbed, except that, as in the case of the President who was lately assassinated, and in the case of the other two Presidents who were very dear to the American people, it is a great sorrow and mourning that is entailed upon the American people of all races, of all conditions, of all political parties, and of all religions. But the Government goes on.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to call his attention to the fact in this connection that when President Harrison died it was certainly over a week, and I do not know how much longer, before President Tyler took the oath, and there was no interregnum, no break, in the proper exercise of the functions of Government?

Mr. MALLORY. Who was performing the functions of the Government?

Mr. BACON. All the departments proceeded with their regular functions, and there never was any break.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I suppose the same thing occurred when President Taylor died, though I do not know.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Georgia who performed the duties of the President in that time? He says there was no break. Will the Senator from Georgia, in giving this bit of history so interesting, state who performed the duties of President during that time?

Mr. BACON. I am not sure that it was any information to the Senator from Massachusetts. He knew the fact, I have no doubt, as to who was performing the duties. Of course that was not the question. The Senator from Mississippi was saying that the practical operation of our Government is such that there was no danger of an interregnum on account of the death of the President. I simply cited an extreme case—that Vice-President Tyler was in Virginia at the time. It was before the days of telegraphs and railroads, and, if I recollect aright, it was a week or more after the death of President Harrison before he assumed the functions of the office.

Mr. HOAR. And I understood the Senator to say that there was no break in the operations of the Government and that every department went on as usual. My question was, Who performed the great duties of President of the United States for that period if there was not a break?

Mr. BACON. If I do not unduly interrupt the Senator from Mississippi——

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Go ahead.

Mr. BACON. I will simply state that the practical result was that the officers of the executive department went forward in the discharge of their duties in the same way that they would have done if President Harrison had been alive. I am not speaking of what was the technical legal status, but of what was the practical operation. I will say that practically there was no interruption.

Mr. HOAR. But did not——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Did not every official whom the President had a right to appoint and who died in the interval leave an office without a successor for a week? Did not every criminal who might have been entitled to be pardoned for any good reason during that week have a week longer to serve? Did not every foreign minister accorded an audience with the President with reference to negotiating a treaty or making an application to the President or to be recognized in his functions have to wait a week, and so on?

Mr. BACON. Yes, Mr. President; that was all true. I am simply speaking of what was the practical operation. It is equally true whenever the President is absent from his office and for any reason—by reason, among others, of geographical location—the connection is sundered between him and his office, and it affects his office.

Mr. HOAR. But in that case the time when there will be such an interruption of his functions is selected by the President with reference to the public convenience and safety. In the case of a murder the time when the interruption shall take place is selected by the murderer.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit me to ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. The Constitution vests the executive power in the President. In the case of the death of President Harrison, when there was no one for a week to take his place as President, in whom was vested the executive power of the Government of the United States? I should like to have the Senator answer that question.

Mr. BACON. I heard the statement of the Senator from Florida to the effect that all the powers of the heads of the various Departments are powers of the President, which are really exercised by the different officials of the several Departments. I have not been able to see the correctness of that suggestion. If that were the case, we certainly would not have any power to prescribe by law what shall be the duties of those officers, because the powers of the President as an Executive are powers which are vested in him and which can neither be added to nor taken from by any act of Congress.

I had occasion, Mr. President, to discuss that question here somewhat more at length than I can with propriety now do. I have forgotten the particular occasion, but it was in the last Congress. I think it was on the question which arose out of the refusal of the Secretary of War to respond to a requirement of the Senate, in which I took occasion to discuss the origin of the powers of the heads of departments. Certainly it would trespass upon the Senate, and particularly upon the time of the Senator from Mississippi, if I now undertook to repeat what I then said, but I will say in all courtesy to my distinguished friend that I there expressed the views I would now repeat if I had the time to respond to his inquiry.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, I should like to say, in answer to the suggestion which was made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], that laws have been made for the government of all these officers, and if they are constitutional laws, the officers must obey them. The Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of State—all the Secretaries and the marshals of the United States—have laws that govern them. They are governed by the laws, and the death of the President does not change the law at all. I will read this clause from the Constitution:

> The Congress shall have power * * * to define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and offenses against the law of nations.

One of the laws made to define and punish piracies and felonies may require the execution of the felon by the marshal of the United States. If the President were to be dead and no successor had been qualified at the time fixed for the execution of a criminal, this marshal would be required just as much to go on and execute him as if the President were alive. His duties are defined. He holds his office by law, and he executes the duties of his office by law; and it would be just as much his duty to go on and execute that man, the President being dead and no successor installed in his place, as it would be if the President were alive.

Uniform laws on the subject of naturalization and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy throughout the United States Congress may provide, and in doing that it may require the marshal to serve processes in these cases. When the marshal serves the process, it is one of the duties that pertains to his office. The Senator says that he is an executive officer and depends upon the life of the President for the execution of the duties of his office.

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator misunderstood me. I do not intend to say that at all. Of course he has a commission, which continues for four years. I admit that.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Still he may be removed at the pleasure of the President.

Mr. MALLORY. There is something mean tby the Executive power. There is something meant when the Constitution says specifically that the Executive power is vested in the President. There is no provision for its being vested in anybody else. When the President dies, in whom is this function vested? The Constitution confers it upon somebody. That is the question. In the performance of duties I admit that the executive officers have to comply with the law; but where is this power, this thing which constitutes the source of all their acts, and the reason for it? What becomes of it?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. It does not constitute the source. The power that is vested exclusively in the President, when he dies, is not vested anywhere except in his successor. There can not be any question about that. But the President is not the source of all power of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Treasury or of the marshal. He is not the source of that power. The source of that power and authority is the law. Of course their commission gives them authority. That commission is signed by the President according to the law. He appoints them. He appoints them for a stated term. He may remove them. If he is dead, he can not remove them, but as long as they are in office they exercise that authority and that power, and they have it not by the will of the President, but under the law of the United States that is passed by Congress.

When the marshal serves a process he does not serve that process by the will of the President, but he serves it under the law of the United States, he being marshal. So when the Secretary of the Treasury performs the functions of that office he performs the functions that are given to him by the law enacted by Congress. It is true that the President appoints him by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, but still the power he exercises is the power that is given him by law, not by the President, because the President can not delegate to him any power that is given to the President under the Constitution. Whatever power the President has it is not in his power to delegate. It is not given to him by the Constitution to be delegated to others. The constitutional power of any officer can not be by him delegated to anybody else, any more than a Senator's power as a Senator here can be delegated by him to some one else.

Now, I will state another objection I have to this measure, and I am going to close what I have to say by merely calling attention to it. I have stated that I object to saying "or counsel another to kill" without saying "to murder" or something to show that it is the counseling of the murder of the President, because a man may counsel to kill and not commit any crime at all. If A sees B about to be murdered by C, A may say, "Shoot to save your life," and that would be counseling him to kill him, but it is not a violation of law. But if he says to B, out of vindictiveness or to gratify any spirit of revenge, "Shoot him," then he is guilty of murder. However, a man may counsel to kill without counseling murder or counseling any crime at all, just as a man may kill without committing any crime against the laws of the State or of the Government.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi whether there is to be found in the statute books of any State or of the United States an offense that consists simply in counseling or advising the doing of a thing without the thing being done or being attempted or without a conspiracy?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Nowhere that I know of at all.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then, why should we create a law such as has never been enacted before by any State or by the United States?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. That is a great objection, as the Senator from Colorado has correctly said, but that is not the greatest objection I find in the bill. A man might see some sovereign of a foreign country about to make a murderous assault upon another, or he might have reason to believe that he is about to make a murderous assault upon another, and he might counsel that other person to kill him. It might become necessary to kill him, or he may make no attempt to kill him, and yet under this law he might be sent to the penitentiary for twenty years.

Senators know that some of these foreign potentates have an idea that a private citizen has no right at all. One of them might come to this country and he might invade the rights of an American citizen in many ways. He might invade his household, for that matter. Another might counsel the killing of him and, as I said a while ago, if he should kill the man in what he conceived to be necessary self-defense, or if he should not hurt the sovereign at all, according to this provision he would be guilty of an offense for which he might be sent to the penitentiary for twenty years. I am not willing to vote for any such law as that.

But the fifth section is more objectionable to me than any one I find here:

> That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof—

Listen, now, to this—

> by spoken words, or by written or printed words, uttered or published, threaten to kill——

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I understood the Senator to say that under the bill one who killed the President in self-defense would be within the provisions of the bill. Do I understand him correctly?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I will repeat what I said. The third section provides:

> That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, aid, abet, advise, or counsel the killing of the President or Vice-President of the United States or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the President may devolve under the Constitution and laws, or shall conspire with any other person to accomplish the same, or who shall instigate, advise, or counsel the killing of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, etc.

Now, then, the counseling of the killing of the sovereign of any foreign country is punishable by imprisonment not exceeding twenty years according to this bill. That is what I said and that is what the bill says. There can not be any dispute about that.

Mr. SPOONER. I understood the Senator to say that it would exclude the killing in self-defense.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. It would. It would exclude the man from defending himself against a murderous assault; that is, from counseling his friend to defend himself against a murderous assault by the sovereign of any foreign country. It is the killing. It does not admit of any plea. It goes on the idea, I suppose, that the king can do no wrong. This is certainly a very objectionable feature.

But, as I said, in the fifth section I find three words that are more objectionable to me than any other words in the whole bill, when taken in conjunction with what precedes. A man may be riding along the road and he may utter a threat that nobody in the world hears, and he becomes at once a felon. It is true he could not be convicted if no one heard him, unless he would go and plead guilty to it, but the law would make him a felon nevertheless if he should utter a threat to kill the President or Vice-President of the United States. I believe it does not include any of the sovereigns of foreign countries, but if he were to utter such a threat a mile from any house, out in the woods even, he would be a felon, and if he could not be convicted, nevertheless he would be a felon.

Mr. SPOONER. He might not be a felon, if the Senator will permit me, but if he uttered a threat a mile from anybody else he would be a fool.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. He might be still a fool, but I do not want to have him denounced as a felon. It would be a very bad doctrine to promulgate.

Mr. SPOONER. That is not what this means, obviously.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. It seems that the draftsman of this bill, or the committee, saw the difference between uttering and publishing, because if it is published somebody must read it, but it may be uttered without anybody's hearing it at all. As I have said, fool though he might be, he would not be a felon. There are a great many fools who are not bad men and I do not think any law ought to be enacted that would make him a felon.

I have said more than I intended to say on this subject when I took the floor. I have been interrupted frequently, and that has prolonged the discussion and prolonged what I had to say further than I otherwise would have consumed the time of the Senate. I am just as anxious as anybody else for the protection of the President of the United States. I believe that the President of the United States is just as safe without any law on the statute books specially directed to his protection as he would be with the most stringent law that could be enacted by the Congress of the United States. I believe, further, that there is now on the statute book all the law necessary for guarding the President from the commission of any offense against him that this measure would guard him against. All the preventive protection that can be given to him is given, in my judgment, by laws now on the statute books.

I have often prided myself on being a citizen of a country where every man is upon an equality before the law. It does not make any difference whether he is a Senator going down the street or a laborer, or whether he is the President of the United States going down the street or a laborer, or on the highway, or anywhere else, they are both equally protected by law, and both stand equal before the law of the country. It has been one of the matters of pride in which I have indulged, and of which I have boasted, that I live in a country the Government of which recognizes the equality of all men, of all races, and of all conditions of life before the law. Mr. President, I hope it will so remain.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, if there be no disposition to dispose of the pending bill to-night, I shall move an executive session.

Mr. HOAR. There is.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from Illinois will withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. CULLOM. I will withdraw it for a moment.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps we can have a vote on the bill.

Mr. BACON. Before we vote I desire to submit an amendment. The amendments already on the table which were framed by myself, and which I gave notice I would offer, are amendments which simply change the phraseology of the pending bill, but it is difficult in thus changing the phraseology to have the full import properly understood and appreciated. I therefore propose to withdraw those amendments and to offer at the proper time what will be intended as a substitute for the bill, which will embrace the amendments which I have already offered and one other. I now ask that the amendment may be read and printed in order that we may have it before us.

Mr. HOAR. Would not that involve not having a vote to-night, for we can not get the amendment in print in time to vote on it to-night if it is to be printed?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, of course it is not for me to say that we shall not vote to-night. I shall not interpose any objection if the Senate desire to vote.

I now ask that my amendment may be read, and then, if the bill goes over, I shall ask that it be printed; if not, we can vote on it to-night.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the proposed substitute be read, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. It may be read in a moment. I should like to say that it was said last night, when it was desired to get a time fixed for voting on the bill, that there was no reason to doubt we should get the vote to-night, but I suppose the debate has occupied a little longer time than Senators on the other side last night thought it would. Can we not now have some understanding about the time for voting on the bill and amendments?

Mr. BACON. Personally I have no objection, Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will permit me to reply, as he asked me a question.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Senator had replied.

Mr. BACON. I was going to say that personally I should have no objection; on the contrary, I should very much prefer that there should be a vote to-morrow, because I shall be compelled to leave the city to-morrow evening, and I should be very much mortified if I were not present to vote on this bill.

Mr. HOAR. I will suggest an understanding that we take the vote to-morrow at 3 o'clock on the bill and pending amendments.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator had better say 4 o'clock.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; I will say 4 o'clock.

Mr. TELLER. I want to reserve the right to have five minutes allowed for debate on any amendment that may be offered so late in the day that, owing to the agreement, we can not have an opportunity to speak on them. The other day, when the vote was taken on the ship-subsidy bill, we were compelled to vote on propositions on which I should have liked, at least, to have expressed my opinion, and to have briefly given the reasons why I should vote for them or why I should not vote for them.

Mr. HOAR. I did not hear the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I want to reserve the right as to amendments that have not been heretofore offered and which may come in to-morrow, that each Senator, who so desires, may have five minutes for their discussion.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; I will agree to that. I will make the request with that reservation.

Mr. TELLER. I limit the request to those amendments offered after to-day. I suppose, as to the amendments which have already been printed and are now on the table, that every Senator has had a chance to examine and speak upon them. We should have until 4 o'clock to-morrow, in any event, to speak on those amendments offered up to this evening, but I do not intend to undertake to direct what ought to be done about the matter.

There is not only the amendment in the nature of a substitute, which has just been offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], but there is another amendment to be offered by my colleague [Mr. PATTERSON]. Those can, of course, be debated to-morrow before 4 o'clock, if we agree to fix that time for voting; but I think we ought to have a little time after 4 o'clock—say five minutes—on any amendment then offered.

Mr. HOAR. Very well, Mr. President. I will ask, then, that debate on the bill and the amendments now pending shall cease and that we vote at 4 o'clock to-morrow, and that after that time there shall be a debate of five minutes on each side, or by any Senator who chooses——

Mr. TELLER. I mean any Senator who wants to speak for five minutes on any amendment shall have the opportunity. The suggestion is now made to me by Senators on this side of the Chamber that we commence voting at 4 o'clock, and that then any Senator who wants to debate any amendment after 4 o'clock may have five minutes in which to do so.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; I will make that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asks unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock to-morrow general debate on this bill shall cease, and that the vote shall be taken on the bill and all pending amendments and all amendments that may then be offered, and that as to the amendments the limitation of debate contained in Rule VIII shall apply.

Mr. HOAR. After 4 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After 4 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BACON. I now ask that the amendment I have offered may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, willfully kill or cause the death of the President or Vice-President of the United States because of his official position, or for the purpose of destroying the Government or any departments thereof, or of impairing the execution of its constitutional powers, or who shall willfully and maliciously cause the death of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, shall be punished with death.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, attempt to commit either of the offenses mentioned in the foregoing section shall be punished with death.

SEC. 3. That any person who shall, with the purpose aforesaid, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction, aid or abet the killing of the President or Vice-President of the United States, or shall conspire with any other person to accomplish the same, or who shall aid or abet the killing of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, or shall conspire with any other person to accomplish the same, shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding twenty years.

SEC. 4. That any person who has conspired as aforesaid may be indicted and convicted separately, although the other party or parties to the conspiracy are not indicted or convicted.

SEC. 5. That any person who shall willfully and knowingly aid in the escape of any person guilty of either of the offenses mentioned in the preceding sections shall be deemed an accomplice after the fact, and shall be punished as if a principal, although the other party or parties to said offense shall not be indicted or convicted.

SEC. 6. That in all cases arising under this act the presumption of the law shall be that the killing or causing the death of the President or Vice-President of the United States, or the attempting to kill or cause the death of either of said officers, was because of his official position, or for the purpose of destroying the Government or any department thereof, or of impairing the execution of its constitutional powers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have the amendment printed?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be ordered to be printed.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I offered some amendments when the discussion of this bill first commenced. I desire to withdraw those amendments and offer what I now send to the desk as a substitute for the pending bill. It is not long, and I ask that it may be read and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, murder the President or Vice-President of the United States, or the official next in succession to the President under the Constitution and laws of the United States, shall be punished with death; and an accessory before or after any such offense shall be deemed a principal and be punished with death; and any such accessory may be indicted, tried, and punished, although the other party or parties to such offense has not or have not been indicted or convicted.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall within the limits of the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, kill any of the official persons mentioned in section 1, under such circumstances as to constitute the killing manslaughter, he shall be imprisoned not more than twenty years.

SEC. 3. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to its jurisdiction, assault any of the official persons mentioned in section 1 with intent to murder the person so assaulted, he shall be punished with death, or, in the discretion of the court, with imprisonment during his natural life, or for a period not less than twenty years.

SEC. 4. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, conspire to murder either of the official persons mentioned in section 1 shall be punished by imprisonment not more than twenty years; and any person who has conspired as aforesaid may be indicted and convicted separately, although the other party or parties to the conspiracy have not been indicted or convicted.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to select and detail from the Regular Army a sufficient number of officers and men to guard and protect the person of the President of the United States without any unnecessary display.

And the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to make special rules and regulations as to dress, arms, and equipment and duties of said guard, and shall publish only such parts of said rules and regulations as he may deem proper.

That the additional expenses of such guard so detailed shall be paid out of the Treasury, on accounts to be certified by the Secretary of War to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 12804) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, which was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAY reserved all points of order on the bill.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12346, the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Waukegan, Ill.: Continuing improvement, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 343, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, $100,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the project recommended in said report, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $245,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 28, line 21, after the word "appropriated," insert: "Provided further, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, and in case the total costs shall not exceed the limit fixed herein, modify the location of the detached breakwater."

Mr. BURTON. The object of that, Mr. Chairman, is to give some degree of liberty to the engineer in charge to change the plans, with the proviso that it shall not increase the cost. It has been suggested by the local engineer and recommended by the chief.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Improving harbor at Ontonagon, Mich.: For maintenance, $5,000.

Mr. McLAIN. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in making this motion I do it not for the purpose of seeking an opportunity to make war upon the Rivers and Harbors Committee. While the committee was in session we earnestly pressed for an appropriation for Gulfport and Pascagoula harbors, but the committee has seen proper to refuse our request.

I believed then, and so believe now, that these ports should have been recognized with a substantial appropriation by the committee. But I am seeking no quarrel with this committee; I submit to its decree in good temper. My chief object in thus presenting this amendment is to secure an opportunity to call the attention of the House to our great Mississippi coast, its natural harbors, its growing commerce, and its wonderful progress along all lines. It is true we have heretofore received liberal appropriations from Congress for these two ports, but we need more and we must have it.

We feel confident from the magnificent showing that can be made for them in the future, Congress will continue to lend a helping hand to each. They are growing and expanding daily, and nothing can permanently interfere with their march to success. I wish I had the time and you the patience for me to give you fully the many reasons for this assertion, but I must pass on. However, in this connection, I wish to give some facts and figures touching the importance and growth of these two ports and other points along our coast before I conclude my remarks.

When I said just now that I had no desire to make war on this committee, I am prompted to that course for the reason that I think it has discharged its duty honestly and faithfully from its standpoint, and for the further reason of its generous appropriations given to our coast in its last river and harbor act of March 3, 1899. At that time it gave to the port of Pascagoula $267,000, Horn Island Pass $50,000, Ship Island Pass $40,000, Gulfport $150,000, and the mouth of Pearl River $18,199. We now ask of this committee an additional appropriation for the port of Pascagoula and Gulfport.

The committee gave us a patient hearing, but after due deliberation has declined to give them any further aid for the present, assigning as one of the chief reasons that each of these ports is now under contract for improvement by virtue of the above-mentioned appropriations. The contract for the improvement of Pascagoula will soon be completed, and that of Gulfport will not be finished until April, 1903; or at least the contractor of this work has until then to complete it. I will here give you the reports of the Chief of Engineers made to the Secretary of War upon these two projects, which speak for themselves:

CHANNEL FROM GULFPORT TO SHIP ISLAND HARBOR, MISSISSIPPI.

The depth of water over the line of the proposed channel varies from 8.5 feet to 19 feet, and in the proposed basin there is an average depth of about 6 feet.

PLAN OF IMPROVEMENT.

To dredge a channel 300 feet wide and 19 feet deep at mean low water from the anchorage at Ship Island Harbor to Gulfport, Miss., and to construct at the end of this channel next the shore an anchorage basin of similar depth and not less than 2,640 feet by 1,320 feet in area.

The river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, authorizes contract for a channel and basin as above, at a cost not to exceed $150,000, and their maintenance for a term of five years after completion for the sum of $10,000 annually, and further provides that the necessary expenses for examinations, surveys, and inspections of the work shall be paid from the permanent indefinite appropriation made by section 4 of the river and harbor act approved July 5, 1884.

WORK OF THE PAST YEAR.

This work having been advertised in May, 1899, and no bids received on it, was readvertised on January 1, 1901, and one bid received, from Spencer S. Bullis, Gulport, Miss. Contract was finally awarded to Mr. Bullis, by the terms of which work was to commence within thirty days after notification of approval of contract by the Chief of Engineers and be completed within two years from date of commencement, the work of maintenance to commence immediately upon completion of channel and basin.

The cost of dredging the channel and anchorage basin is to be $150,000, and the cost of its maintenance for the term of five years after completion is to be $10,000 annually, subject to a penalty of $30 per day for each and every day said channel and anchorage basin is not maintained in accordance with the terms of the contract.

Dredging was commenced with a hydraulic dredge on the anchorage basin April 16, 1901. On June 3, 1901, a clam-shell dredge was placed at work on the channel, and dredging is in progress at the end of the fiscal year.

No money has yet been appropriated by Congress for this work.

On April 20, 1901, an allotment of $1,000 was made from the appropriation for operating and care of canals and other works of navigation, indefinite, for payment of expenses of inspections and examinations of the above work during the last three months of the fiscal year 1901. Under this allotment the work was surveyed and laid out, and the dumping of the material, etc., is being supervised by inspectors appointed by this office.

IMPROVEMENT OF PASCAGOULA RIVER AND HORN ISLAND HARBOR, MISSISSIPPI.

The present condition of the channel in Pascagoula River is such as to permit vessels of 12 feet draft to ascend to the lumber mills at Scranton and Mosspoint, Miss., while the original condition of the channel would not allow of its navigation by vessels of over 10 feet draft.

The harbor at Horn Island originally had a depth of 21 feet, except over the shoals known as the "Bulkhead" and the "Neck," where depths of from 17.5 to 19.7 feet were found, preventing the satisfactory utilization of a safe anchorage parallel with the northern beach of Horn Island and extending 7 miles westerly. There is now available a depth of 20 feet with a width of 200 feet over the "Bulkhead."

PLAN OF IMPROVEMENT.

The present project for the improvement of Pascagoula River, that of December 28, 1896, is to obtain a channel 12 feet deep by dredging from 3 miles above the mouth of Dog River to the 12-foot contour in Mississippi Sound, 150 feet wide above the railroad bridge at Scranton, Miss., and 300 feet wide below said bridge; and the present project for improving Horn Island Harbor, that of August 29, 1898, is to obtain a channel in the anchorage by dredging to a depth of 20 feet at mean low water, with a width of 500 feet. The estimated cost of both works was $317,600.

WORK OF THE PAST YEAR.

Under contract dated July 21, 1899, and supplemental contracts dated November 23, 1899, and March 25, 1901, work of dredging was continued throughout the fiscal year. From Horn Island anchorage 116,658 cubic yards of material, chiefly compact sand, little clay, shell, and mud, was removed, and the cut of 150 feet width dredged to a depth of 20 feet during the fiscal year of 1900 was widened to 400 feet throughout its length of 4,000 feet.

This channel has yet to be widened 100 feet, and it is proposed to do this during the early part of the fiscal year of 1902. This increased depth in the anchorage has afforded great relief to the shipping using it. By the removal of 536,784 cubic yards of material, chiefly compact white sand, variegated clay, shells, and soft black mud, from Pascagoula River channel below the railroad bridge at Scranton, the channel through reaches 1 to 6 was widened from 200 to 300 feet for the aggregate length of 8,035 feet; on reach 7 a channel 100 feet wide and 950 feet long was widened to 300 feet and completed throughout its length of 1,565 feet—this work being done by a hydraulic dredge with a 15½-inch suction. Reach 8, or the last reach, of 18,400 feet length, was dredged to a width of 200 feet, 50 feet width and 12,580 feet length of which was done during fiscal year of 1900—this work being done by two clam-shell dredges. The channel through reach 8 has to be widened by 100 feet more to complete the work on Pascagoula River channel, and this work will probably be completed by January 1, 1902.

In view of these facts, the committee is of the opinion that the additional appropriation asked for Gulfport and Pascagoula is premature, and it therefore, has declined to give to either any aid on this bill pending before the House. This action of the committee does not mean that it is of the opinion that these ports are unworthy of further improvement or that they will be ignored hereafter. I am sure the necessity for the improvement of these two points will continue to be so pronounced, along all lines, that they will receive from Congress, from time to time, all the aid needed.

I say this because I have a supreme confidence in the strength, growth, and development of this section of our Commonwealth, and I have an abiding faith in Congress to do justice by it. Its progress, material and industrial, will soon reach such proportions as to force its attention upon this body with increased force from year to year. When these conditions arrive, as they will, I feel sure Congress will do that which is right and just toward it if we but press its cause. The entire Mississippi coast is in the Congressional district which I have the honor to represent.

I have given the subject of the improvement of its harbors much earnest thought and time. It has been my ambition to see a deep-water harbor on our coast while I have the honor to represent that section. But by the recent apportionment of my State into Congressional districts by our legislature my home county is not in the Congressional district in which the coast counties are placed. In parting with the coast, I do so with feelings of profoundest regret, and I take this occasion to say that should I be returned to Congress from the district in which I am now located I shall give the Representative from this coast district my heartiest cooperation in all matters looking to the development of this great section.

Mr. Chairman, it has always been the desire of Mississippi to secure a great harbor upon our very sea front—a harbor where the largest vessels may come with safety to discharge and receive cargoes. What we have already achieved inspires us to hope for the full fruition of our future efforts. Have we sufficient cause to thus believe that our efforts will ultimately be crowned with success? I think so. Now, let me place you in possession of all facts as to what has actually been done for our coast by the Government in the last river and harbor act. Once having this in possession, the question naturally arises: What further aid can we reasonably expect along this line from Congress, and what are the best methods to pursue?

Proceeding on this suggested method, I will begin by saying that by act of Congress approved June 16, 1898, the Secretary of War was authorized and directed to cause to be made a survey for a channel leading from Ship Island Harbor to the railroad pier at Gulfport and from Ship Island Harbor to Biloxi, and also for an anchorage basin at both places, with a view of ascertaining the cost of same and the advisability of doing the work. He was also required to report a plan for making and maintaining said channels and basins by necessary dredging and improvements, together with an estimate of the cost of same; and also to make survey for a channel 26 feet deep at mean low tide through Ship Island Pass, and to report the cost and advisability of making the same by dredging.

This survey was made by Maj. W. T. Rossell, and he filed his report with the Secretary of War December 17, 1898. He estimated the cost of dredging channels with depths of 17, 19, and 23 feet, respectively, as follows:

From Ship Island Harbor to Gulfport, channel 17 feet and 300 feet wide, $371,839; channel 19 feet deep, $573,967; channel 23 feet deep, $1,089,627.

From Ship Island Harbor to Biloxi, channel 17 feet deep, $496,924; channel 19 feet deep, $766,728; channel 23 feet deep, $1,586,559.

For anchorage basins 2,640 by 1,320: For Gulfport, a basin 17 feet, $138,296; one at 19 feet, $174,142; one at 23 feet, $245,432.

Basin at Biloxi: One at 17 feet, $172,325; one at 19 feet, $208,347; one at 23 feet, $272,828.

For Ship Island Pass he recommends that it be cut to 26 feet and estimates the cost of same at $40,000, and he recommends that this work be done.

Also, by act of Congress passed June 3, 1896, the Secretary of War was directed to make a survey of Pascagoula River with a view of obtaining a depth of 17 feet. This survey was made and report made thereon recommending that the channel be dredged to 12 feet, and estimates the cost at $267,600.

Also, by act of Congress passed May 7, 1896, the Secretary of War was directed to make a survey of the pass leading from the Gulf of Mexico into Horn Island Harbor, and a survey of said harbor and of the channel leading to and from said pass, with the view of ascertaining its cost and advisability of undertaking the work. Major Rossel made his report recommending the improvement of the anchorage at Horn Island Harbor and recommended $50,000 with which to do the work.

Also, an act was passed by Congress for a survey of the channel at the mouth of Pearl River leading to deep water in the Mississippi Sound, with a view to obtaining 17-foot channel at mean low-water tide. This survey was made, and the engineer in charge of the work reports that this channel is not worthy of improvement to a depth of 17 feet at mean low tide, but is worthy of improvement to a depth of 9 feet at mean low water, and recommends an appropriation of $18,199.

From the foregoing you see we have succeeded in getting Congress to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to cause to be made six different surveys upon our coast, with a view to ascertaining the cost of each and the advisability of doing the work. The engineers in charge have recommended four of these projects to Congress as worthy of improvement, to wit, Pascagoula Channel, Horn Island Harbor, Ship Island Pass, and the mouth of Pearl River.

You will see by reference to the river and harbor act passed by Congress March 3, 1899, that the sums of money heretofore mentioned were appropriated to each of these places, and said sums of money to be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers for the construction of these public works, etc. These contracts have all long since been let and all completed except the Pascagoula Channel and the Gulfport Channel, both of which are nearing completion. From this you see Congress recognized Gulfport by an appropriation, though not recommended by the engineer who made the survey, estimate, and report, thus making five projects on our coast to receive appropriations under the river and harbor act of March, 1899.

Congress refused to give Biloxi anything, and at first refused to give Gulfport anything, as neither was recommended for improvement by the engineer who made the survey and estimate for these two places. We did all in our power to secure recognition for Biloxi and Gulfport on the rivers and harbors bill of 1899. For each we had in our possession the survey and estimated cost of the work made by the Government, but the River and Harbor Committee refused to place either Biloxi or Gulfport on its bill for an appropriation, for the reason it was not recommended.

But after all efforts had failed Major Bullis, in the closing days of Congress—as a dernier ressort—authorized me to say to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that his company would undertake to dredge a channel 19 feet deep and 300 feet wide from Gulfport to Ship Island Harbor, and the required anchorage basin, for $150,000. I introduced the bill as requested, and we succeeded in getting the following through Congress:

Gulfport, Miss., to Ship Island Harbor.—The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts to dredge a channel 300 feet wide and 19 feet deep at mean low water from the anchorage from Ship Island Harbor, on the Gulf of Mexico, to Gulfport, in Harrison County, in the State of Mississippi, and to construct at the end of said channel next the shore an anchorage basin of similar depth not less than 2,640 by 1,320 feet in area, at a cost not to exceed $150,000; and the Secretary of War is further authorized to contract for the maintenance of said channel and anchorage basin for the term of five years after its completion for the sum of $10,000 annually: Provided, That the necessary expense for such examination, surveys, and inspections of the work as may be required by this act, shall be paid from the permanent, indefinite appropriation made by section 4 of the river and harbor act, approved July 5, 1884: And provided further, That the depths provided for shall be at mean low water as determined by the engineer officer in local charge of the work.

Under this act the Secretary of War advertised for bids. Of course no one would bid except those who were willing to take the chances of spending some of their own money in doing a piece of work, for the estimated cost of which, by the Government engineer, was $748,109.96, with only $150,000 appropriated. I understand that Major Jones, president of the Gulf and Ship Island Railway, has taken or caused to be taken this work. This shows the confidence that Major Jones and others have in the establishment of a harbor here.

He is in truth and in fact placing upon the harbor of Gulfport an improvement that the Government, by actual calculation based upon a survey, estimated would cost $748,107. This does not include the enormous cost already expended there in constructing the wharf and the railroad pier. In undertaking this gigantic work, of course, Major Jones believes it a good investment for him, yet at the same time it will greatly benefit Gulfport and our State. Indeed, the future of Gulfport is bright, and in the near future it will witness the realization of its hopes in its fullest measure.

The Mississippi coast is about 75 miles long, the shore line running along the Mississippi Sound. From 6 to 12 miles out from shore are located a number of islands fronting the entire Mississippi Sound. Commencing on the east and running west the islands are in the following order: Petit Bois, Horn Island, Ship Island, and Cat Island. This forms a breakwater for the Mississippi coast. Ship Island is the largest of these islands, and it is about 12 miles from shore, lying in front of Biloxi, Mississippi City, and Gulfport.

Ship Island Harbor is the finest natural harbor on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico. It has long been known as a port of safety. Packenham's fleet gathered here in the war of 1812. The depth of the water in the harbor is from 18 to 35 feet, with surface room sufficient to anchor the entire shipping of Habana, Mobile, Galveston, and New Orleans. To the west of Ship Island lies Cat Island; to the east, Horn Island, the harbor for Scranton and Moss Point, the entrance thereto from the Gulf being Horn Island Pass.

The entrance proper to Ship Island Harbor from the Gulf is Ship Island Pass, lying between Ship Island and Cat Island, which had a natural depth of 22 feet at mean low water, but by the expenditure of the recent appropriation of $40,000 for its improvement it is now 26 feet deep. This makes this channel 3½ feet deeper than Mobile channel, three-quarters of a foot deeper than Galveston, and as deep as the channel at the mouth or passes of the Mississippi River.

By the way of comparison, let me give you a few figures and facts in reference to the harbors of some of our neighboring cities on the Gulf of Mexico, which will show how grossly we have been neglected at the hands of the Government. The entire length of the Mobile Channel is 33.9 miles, with a continuous cut of 32.27 miles. It originally had a depth of 5½ feet through Choctaw Pass and 8 feet on Dog River bar. From 1870 to 1876 the channel was deepened to 13 feet. From 1881 to 1888 to 17 feet.

In 1888 a project was adopted to dredge the channel to 23 feet and the work was placed under a continuous contract. Since 1888 the total amount expended on this improvement to June 30, 1897, was $2,183,161. On this last date the channel had a depth varying from 20 to 23 feet. The natural depth of channel at Biloxi and Gulfport is about 9 feet, which gradually increases toward Ship Island Harbor, striking 17 feet of water within 4 or 5 miles out from either place. The money given Mobile channel since 1888 alone would give to Biloxi and Gulfport each a channel 308 feet wide and 23 feet deep.

Let me take another case, if you please. Over $8,000,000 has been given Galveston Harbor. This expenditure resulted in a depth of 24½ feet on the outer bar and 25½ feet on the inner bar. According to the Government's estimate, heretofore stated by me, an anchorage basin at Biloxi, a channel to Ship Island Harbor, at 23 feet deep, can be dredged for $1,859,387.01; the same character of work at Gulfport for $1,335,059.96; total for the two, $3,194,446.97. Therefore the two basins and channels of these two places can be built for less money than has been given Galveston Harbor by $4,805,553; or, in other words, for less than half. The two basins and channels can be built from Galveston's appropriation and have left $6,664,940.

I will go a step further. It is also estimated by the Government that Pascagoula Channel can be given a depth of 17 feet for $1,050,222. The combined sum necessary for the dredging of Biloxi and Gulfport Channel to 23 feet, along with anchorage basin for each, and that of Pascagoula Channel to 17 feet, based upon the survey and estimate of the Government, is $4,244,668.

Therefore this shows that these three projects upon our coast can be improved for about half of the sum of money already expended on Galveston Harbor. Suppose half or one-third or one-fourth—yes, one-eighth—of this amount was given to one of our ports, what developments you would behold! I do not invite your attention to these matters out of a spirit of envy, but that it may stir you to give us our just rights. We rejoice at the good fortune of Mobile, Galveston, and New Orleans and bid them Godspeed on the road to a higher success.

There is another thing I wish to lay before you. It is our export business of the district of Pearl River for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901. The collector for this district gives me the following figures: Clearances to foreign ports, 299 vessels, with 236,368 tons, carrying 210,992,000 feet of lumber and timber valued at $2,835,829; clearances to Key West and domestic Atlantic ports, 36 vessels, with 17,473 tons, carrying 13,928,000 (estimated) feet of lumber and timber valued at $160,000 (estimated).

From this you see the total vessels, foreign and domestic, 335, with 253,841 tonnage; total feet of lumber 224,920,000, valued at $2,995,828. In this office there is no record kept of the business with New Orleans, Mobile, or other nearby ports. The distribution of the above foreign business credited to the ports of Pascagoula and Biloxi is as follows: Pascagoula, 201 vessels, 128,321 tons, 11,587,000 feet, total value $1,570,717; Biloxi, 98 vessels, 108,047 tons, 91,405,000 feet, total value $1,265,112. In this distribution of business of these two ports the domestic business is not given for the reason that I have not the figures.

I am reliably informed that the fish, oyster, and shrimp shipped from our coast alone amounts to several millions. Indeed it is said that Biloxi exports more canned oysters than any other port in the United States, barring Baltimore.

Immediately north of this coast lies a tier of counties literally covered with wooded wealth, and without doubt the finest pine forest standing in the Union. A few years ago it was without railroads, but to-day it is threaded with them.

All over this belt stands many sawmills, each with a capacity of 10,000 to 200,000 feet per day. The estimated number of feet of lumber now standing upon the soil of the counties immediately north of our coast is almost beyond computation. Into the statistics of this I will not go, for statistics, as a rule are dry and dull reading; but let me throw out a few basic facts from which any inquiring mind can get a flood of information upon the wonderful resources of our pine belt.

In the 25 counties east of the Illinois Central Railway (including Amite and Franklin west of it) and south of the Alabama and Vicksburg Railway, it is estimated to contain 5,860,000 acres of pine-timbered land, and from the best information I can get the estimated cut of timber per acre is from 4,000 to 8,000 feet. But, to be on the safe side, we can with confidence assume that 6,000 is a moderate estimate.

Now we have before us these figures: Total number of acres, 5,860,000; estimated cut per acre, 6,000; total number of feet, 34,160,000,000. At $10 per 100 feet it is worth $341,600,000.

On the various railroads running through this section of timbered land there are over 200 sawmills distributed and with an annual output as follows:

Fourteen on the Mobile and Ohio, with an output of 80,000,000 feet; 50 on the Northeastern, with 300,000,000 feet; 34 on the Illinois Central, with 250,000,000 feet; 70 on the Gulf and Ship Island, with 350,000,000 feet; 23 on the Louisville and Nashville, with 190,000,000 feet; grand total or annual output, 1,170,000,000 feet. At $10 per thousand feet it is worth $11,700,000, yielding an annual revenue equal to one-fourth of the entire cotton crop of the State.

It is estimated that it would take fifty years to consume the merchantable pine standing in the counties above named, assuming the rate of consumption to be as above related, and giving due allowance for the growth of young timber not at present merchantable. When this occurs, will the country be impoverished? Not by any means. The soil is light and easily cultivated, yielding abundant harvest under proper cultivation.

Immediately associated with this immense lumber business is the rosin and turpentine business, which is produced and gathered in vast quantities, bringing thousands of dollars into the country and giving employment to many people.

Such, in brief, is the lumber business in this tier of counties. Taking this vast annual income into consideration along with the agricultural productions, and many other lines of business all through this section, am I not justified in saying that this is a most remarkable, prosperous, and prolific part of our country? I think so. Many other things I could say about it; but I must pass on. We feel that our coast is standing at the door of great possibilities, yet with all this there is a grander future for it. While we take fresh courage and inspiration from the great improvement upon its harbors and channels within the past few years, yet we desire further aid from the Government.

To impartially contemplate what has been done for our coast, it is cheering and refreshing. When we consider this along with the lavish gifts God has given it in the way of natural harbors lying within 6 and 10 miles of our entire coast front, it emphasizes the fact that a most magnificent future awaits it. I do not think I speak extravagantly. Mississippi is a great State from center to circumference, but if there is one section that promises to blossom with more prosperity than any other, it is this coast and the country immediately north of it.

Its development in the past few years has been a wonder and a surprise. It will be a greater surprise in the next five years than it has been in the last ten. In the heart of this favored land some villages within the last eight years have developed into cities of 5,000 or more inhabitants each, and yet it is further dotted with scores of other towns from 500 to 3,000 inhabitants which are increasing in population and wealth daily.

Our coast alone is a big thing. Its possibilities are almost beyond the conception of the mind. It, too, is a wonderful surprise to all that pass that way. Great cities are there now, but they are getting stronger and greater with each day. Almost a solid town from Bay St. Louis to Ocean Springs; going 18 miles to the east of Ocean Springs, there we find along the Pascagoula River and Bay another solid town stretching from Pascagoula to Moss Point, a distance of 8 miles.

At this hour this coast bids fair to be the best thing in Mississippi. Within the last two years $465,000 has been expended by the Government on its harbors and channels. Some of the direct and immediate results of this expenditure are that vessels loaded to 26 feet pass in and out of Ship Island Harbor at low tide, out of Horn Island Harbor at 21½ feet, out of Pascagoula Bay and River at 13 feet, from Gulfport to Ship Island Harbor at 19 feet. With the reasonable prospects now before us, vessels drawing 21½ and 26 feet can anchor at the wharves on our very sea front at some of these places at no distant day. Is it any wonder that the coast towns have within the last few years gone from a few hundred inhabitants into the thousands?

Our coast has long been neglected by capital and railroads. The Government has been slow to aid it. For these causes the country has been in ignorance of its wonderful possibilities, but by the completion of the Gulf and Ship Island Railway and other roads the country is beginning to know it better. The wheels of progress have struck it with full force. It is coming right along and up the road to success. Conditions have arrived when we will secure the necessary appropriations for the development of its harbors. It has become a necessity.

Our progress, material and industrial, has reached that high-water mark as to force it. Nothing can plant itself across its track of onward march to defeat it. With the great natural harbor of Ship Island lying within bowshot of our shore, the cheapness with which a deep-water channel connecting our ports with this great harbor can be secured, have we not reasonable grounds to believe that we will get abundant aid from the Government, and that at no distant day the Mississippi coast will glory in one of the most magnificent ports in these United States? [Applause.]

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Improving harbor at Duluth, Minn., and Superior, Wis.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $275,000, of which not less than $100,000 shall be expended in prosecuting the work of rebuilding the piers at the Wisconsin entry of said harbor, and $143,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended for the construction or purchase of a dredging plant.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, I intended to move to strike out the paragraph on page 27, and with the consent of the chairman of the committee I will ask to recur to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimons consent to return to page 27. Is there objection?

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman wants, I suppose, to make a motion to strike out the provision for dredges?

Mr. RYAN. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. I have no objection to returning to the paragraph.

Mr. RYAN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out in accordance with the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph beginning on line 13, page 27, and ending with line 7 on page 28.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, by the provisions of this paragraph it is intended to build or purchase a suitable dredge for use by the Government in the improvement and maintenance of the harbors on Lake Erie. To carry out this project $175,000 is appropriated. It is also intended to purchase or build dredges to be stationed at Duluth and Grand River, as I am informed the dredges are to be of that class known as the English style of construction, which means a very large boat that propels and loads itself by suction, and after being loaded starts out to the dumping ground.

This is a very costly method of construction and also expensive to maintain. I do not think that, as a business proposition, the Government should engage in the construction and maintenance of dredging plants.

There is already an excessive amount of dredging machinery on the Great Lakes, and the resulting competition has forced prices away down. The Government is now paying for dredging at Chicago 7.45 cents per cubic yard; Toledo, 8¼ cents, and Duluth, 8 cents.

The Government can not do the work at as low a figure.

The dredging business has not been an extraordinarily profitable business, as is shown by the fact that two of the largest firms on the Great Lakes have been forced to discontinue owing to the low prices that they have received for their work.

Owing to the competition for the work on the lakes there has been no abuse by those who have invested their capital in this business, and as long as reasonable prices and satisfactory service are given the Government should not provide machinery to do this work.

The chairman of the committee [Mr. BURTON] must concede that the work has been satisfactorily done, and the Government should not go into competition with private enterprise unless as in the case of building war vessels, where enormous prices have been paid and the Government has every facility and must necessarily maintain navy-yards to keep the naval ships of the country in repair. I hope, Mr. Chairman, this paragraph will be stricken out.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, there are three dredges provided for in this bill on the Great Lakes and tributary waters. One is for a dredge, to cost not exceeding $100,000, in the Grand River between Grand Rapids and Lake Michigan. That for years to come would be used only in that part of the river between Grand Rapids and the lake. The other is for $143,000 for a dredge at Duluth-Superior. The other is an authorization for a dredge costing $175,000 for the harbors at Toledo, Sandusky, Cleveland, Fairport, and Conneaut, and the amount of the cost, $175,000, is apportioned between those ports. Now, there are two reasons why this provision for dredges, particularly at Duluth-Superior, and in the district on the south side of Lake Erie are very salutary. In the first place, a demand for a dredge may arise over night.

There may be a storm which throws sand or some other obstacle into the mouth of a harbor and threatens to interfere with the use of the channel. Such a situation, of course, needs immediate attention, and a dredge should at once be sent there. Now, if you undertake to do that sort of work by contract you would have to prepare specifications, advertise for thirty days, and send the contract on here to Washington for approval; and it would be, at the least calculation, sixty days before anything could be done.

There is another special call for a provision of this kind at Duluth-Superior. The channel there has recently been dredged out, and for the first few years of its use there will be frequent caving and shoaling. It is desirable to have a dredge immediately at hand to go to work as soon as any obstruction appears.

Now, that consideration in itself is a sufficient reason. Another good reason is this: On the Great Lakes there are, as the gentleman said, a great many firms and corporations engaged in the dredging business. We all desire that these gentlemen may have the utmost success in their business. We hope they will have plenty to do and that their work for the Government will be done at a reasonable price. I know a great many of them and count them as personal friends. But they have been getting together recently with a view to forming either a trust or making a "gentleman's agreement" to fix the price of dredging. It is very desirable that some provision for these dredges should be made, so that they may operate as a check upon extortionate prices in case there should be a combination.

Mr. RYAN. Have not the prices charged for Government work by those companies on the lakes been reasonable and just?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly. I want to call attention to several other places in the country. Take the dredges that have been used in the Cape Fear River below Wilmington, N. C. The work of dredging there has been done by the Government at prices altogether below those charged by private or outside contractors.

But I do not know that I have answered the gentleman's question. Some of my colleagues say that I misunderstood it. Will the gentleman repeat it?

Mr. RYAN. I asked whether the prices at which contracts had been let for Government work on the Great Lakes had not been reasonable and just?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, yes. But the gentleman knows that the private contractors are going to fix their prices just as high as they can. They are not enlisted in their business for the sake of philanthropy or to undertake the dredging work of the Government at a low price.

Mr. RYAN. But the gentleman will concede that no contractor engaged in the business of doing work for the Government is engaged in it for any other reason than to make money, yet when the public work is done by contract better results, as a rule, in my judgment, can be obtained than otherwise.

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman is entirely mistaken in that. The dredging work on the Mississippi, which has been carried on upon a very large scale, has been done by Government dredgers exclusively, and in a number of other places it is done in the same way. As I was remarking a few minutes ago, the dredging work on the Cape Fear River below Wilmington has been done as cheaply as anywhere in the United States, at a cost, I think I may say, below the cost of similar work done by any private contractor in the country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman tell us something about the capacity of these proposed dredges? In connection with the contracts that were let for work in the harbor of New York there has been some difficulty in building dredges of adequate capacity. There is nothing in this provision which indicates the capacity of the dredges proposed to be built, or anything of that kind.

Mr. BURTON. I want to suggest to the gentleman that if he expects Congress to fix the specifications for every dredge that is to be built, or for all work of this kind that is to be done, there will be little time for any other business aside from this bill. That is a matter which is very properly and safely left to the Department having this subject in charge.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not ask that Congress do anything of that kind. My question sought simply to elicit some information. The gentleman in incorporating this provision in the bill must have had in mind dredges of a certain capacity; there must have been some recommendation for an appropriation of this kind which would enable the Department to build dredges of a certain capacity. I simply asked whether the gentleman could tell us anything about the size of these dredges or the amount of work that they would be able to do.

Mr. BURTON. There are two things which settle that question very simply. First, the amount appropriated or authorized. That gives a very decided indication concerning the will of Congress about the size of the dredges. Second, the projects where the work is to be done have a depth and width which is definitely fixed in each case.

I assure the gentleman there will be no difficulty whatever in providing proper models and sizes for these dredges.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Allegheny River, Pennsylvania: Continuing improvements and for maintenance, $10,000.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I will send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding to line 10, page 46: "For the removal of obstructions in the channel of the Allegheny River between Oil City, Pa., and Corydon Dam, $5,000."

Mr. BURTON. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on that?

Mr. SIBLEY. I do not, except to state, Mr. Chairman, that the channel is obstructed and wrecks the barges that are shipped down the river that carry the products of the Lower Allegheny, Monongahela, and Ohio rivers to their final market, and it has entailed a great expense and loss, and a very small sum of money, perhaps much less than $5,000, will remove entirely those obstructions. I think this a very proper amendment, to clear the channel of so magnificent a waterway as the Allegheny River.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation, at least so far as regards the most important part of that river, is not needed, because it is expected that the $10,000 to be appropriated, while not for work clear up to Olean, N. Y., is for work up to Warren, Pa., which, I believe, is about 50 miles above Franklin, is it not?

Mr. SIBLEY. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. I will read from the report on that subject.

The head of principal navigation on the river for several years has been at Hickory, and hence improvements have been confined almost exclusively to the stream below that point. Urgent requests are now made for improvement of the river from Hickory upstream to near Warren, a distance of about 30 miles [that is, 30 miles above Hickory], on account of recent establishment of sawmills and a boat yard at Irvinton, near Warren, for furnishing river shipments of lumber, barges, and coal-boat bottoms.

As I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the main object in inserting this amendment was to provide a better channel for those barges to go down the river.

Mr. SIBLEY. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Now, the provision in the bill had in view that very object. I read further from the report:

It is intended to devote the available balance of funds to a cleaning of the low-water channel from Hickory to New Kensington [which I believe is near Pittsburg, the lower part of the improvement] and to minor repairs for temporary maintenance of Nicholson Dam and Red Bank Dike.

Now, to this paragraph I ask the special attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania:

The additional appropriation recommended is for open-channel work from Warren to Hickory, maintenance of channel below Hickory, etc.

Now, there is a balance, or was a balance, on hand at the date of the last report of $2,189. That would be expended in maintenance in the general way mentioned in the report, and the remaining $10,000 would be for dredging and improvements up to Warren. That is as far as there has ever been any survey or estimate of which I can find any trace, and to go above Warren would be certainly contrary to our rules, because we have before us neither survey, estimate, nor recommendation. In the first place, I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania will find that ample provision has been made for the situation which he describes. If he wants to go further than that, or, in other words, if he wants to go above Warren, why, there is no warrant for this House to do so.

Mr. SIBLEY. I would like to ask the chairman if there is any other stream of the size of the Allegheny River, with its volume of water, its length, the marvelous resources that line its banks, that has received so small a sum from the Federal Treasury for its betterment?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, I think, Mr. Chairman, I can state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania at least 20. I do not know about the volume of water.

Mr. SIBLEY. I doubt if you have ever been up the Allegheny Valley. If the gentleman will take a trip, starting from Pittsburg at daylight, he will find that when night overtakes him, riding on an express train, he is still by the side of a majestic river, and I think then the gentleman will have a little higher appreciation of what the Allegheny River is.

Why, our creeks are larger than most of the rivers provided for in this bill. We have French Creek, up in our country, which is bigger than nine out of ten of the rivers that this appropriation bill provides for and we only call it a creek. Now, for over 200 miles of this river you have appropriated $10,000, and I think that inasmuch as this money will not be wasted that is not needed to remove the obstructions—and much of that work of removal of obstructions has already been done by private expense—if you let that $5,000 go in there, Mr. Chairman, it is not presuming too much upon that fair portion of this river and harbor appropriation that we would like to have up in that corner of Pennsylvania. I am going to call for a vote on my amendment.

Mr. BURTON. Just one word further, Mr. Chairman. Let us see about the Allegheny River and whether it has been treated badly. There has been expended on this river within the last ten years for locks and dams $1,013,500; for the open-channel work there has been expended $250,000, making $1,263,500 that has been expended on this river within a comparatively short time. It has a total tonnage of 440,000. I have no doubt the trip which the gentleman from Pennsylvania details would be a very interesting one, and, from his description of it, exceedingly poetical and picturesque; but we are compelled to look at this from a commercial standpoint, and I want to say, first, that this river has received its full share. Then, too, there is a large balance on hand now, or that will be appropriated in the sundry civil bill—some $3,000 or $4,000—for building a dam at Six-mile Island. I am going to offer an amendment about it in a moment. The rest of the river has not been neglected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BURTON) there were—ayes 25, noes 60.

Accordingly, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment that I desire to offer at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers the following amendment; which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 10 insert:

"The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to prosecute the work of constructing the dam at or near the head of Six Mile Island: Provided, That the expenditure shall not exceed the present limit of cost until further estimate shall have been submitted and said limit of cost extended by law."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, just a word. There were three dams provided for on the Allegheny River by the act of 1896. On the second or middle of those dams, at Six Mile Island, there was difficulty in obtaining title. There was a controversy, that it is not worth while to detail at length, in regard to some land belonging to the city of Pittsburg. The city claimed that the cession of this land and the operation of the dam there would foul the water supply, as I understand it. For that reason work was postponed for some years.

The site has now been obtained, but in the meantime the contractor who bid upon the work some four or five years ago has asked to be released on what seems to be a reasonable ground, namely, that he made the contract at a time when materials and labor were cheaper than now. He has already been released, and it is probable that the amount authorized by the act of 1896 will not finish this dam; but in order that the work may not be delayed this provision is inserted, authorizing the Department to prosecute this work and expend the money so far as it may go.

There is a similar provision in the bill for the locks and dams between St. Paul and Minneapolis, made necessary by the increase in the cost of labor and materials, which I might as well mention now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], chairman of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving York River, Occoquan, Lower Machodoc, Nandua, Aquia, and Carters creeks, Virginia, $16,000.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment there.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 47, line 16, add after the word "dollars:"

"In the improvement of Carters Creek the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, spend an amount sufficient to dredge a channel in the eastern branch, near Galley Hook Point, so as to afford a depth of 12 feet by a width of 100 feet."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Neuse and Trent rivers, North Carolina: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $20,000, of which amount so much thereof as may be necessary may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in deepening the Neuse River at and below Newbern, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 317, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session. The said Trent River shall be improved in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 121, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, and of the amount herein appropriated $5,000 may be expended at Newbern.

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "Newbern," in line 4, page 49, the following:

"Improving Cape Fear River, North Carolina, above Wilmington, 'in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 180, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, $250,000, to be expended in obtaining a navigable channel from Wilmington to Fayetteville, having a depth of 8 feet at mean low water;' so that the paragraph will read: 'Improving Cape Fear River, North Carolina, above Wilmington, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 180, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, $250,000, to be expended in obtaining a navigable channel from Wilmington to Fayetteville, having a depth of 8 feet at mean low water.'"

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Chairman, I should like the attention of the committee. Those members of the House who will take occasion to read the last census report, and also to peruse that very splendid article written by General Merriam, at the head of the Census Bureau, in the last edition of the Manufacturers' Record, on "The industrial growth of the South," will be amazed to note the stupendous growth of the State of North Carolina in cotton manufacturing, and also the increase in the general material development of all the resources of that State. In the number of manufacturing establishments in the cotton line she now exceeds every other State in this Union. In the manufacture of furniture she is rapidly becoming the great center of that industry. She has already become famous for her manufactures of tobacco, and the Durham brand is known throughout the habitable globe.

Right here, in passing, allow me to say, if we are not disturbed in the peace and the security which is now prevailing throughout that State, and never through negro domination again have our treasury squandered, or our taxes again made more burdensome than we can bear and our people become demoralized, that we will leap rapidly to the front and become the greatest manufacturing State in this Union. For nearly a third of a century a black cloud, the menace of negro domination, has been hovering over the South, and just at this period, when we are about to peacefully settle the racial question, when peace and contentment are prevailing throughout the Southland, when sectionalism has been virtually buried, when the hearts of the two sections of our common country by the dreadful calamity which has befallen us recently have been united as by a common household sorrow, when our people had begun to study the great economic questions of this country rather than partisan politics, when the sunlight of progress and hope has begun to disperse forever that ever-threatening black cloud and solve the race question peacefully forever, we are startled and awakened by another effort to interfere in our domestic concerns, to stir up sectional strife and bitterness, and "tear agape the healing wound afresh."

Mr. Chairman, we Southern people are heartily tired, yea, sick nigh unto death, of sectional strife. We love the Union, and we will ever defend and maintain its honor. Yes, Mr. Chairman, the Southern people desire to contribute their share to the upbuilding of the moral and material growth of our great nation; but for a sinister motive some few members on the other side of this Chamber, doubtless for the purpose of sowing again the seeds of sectional discord, have introduced into this Chamber a most adroitly concocted scheme, for partisan and political advantage, to tear asunder again the sections of this now united country. The hands of the dial of time must not be turned backward, but must be allowed to point to a bright and hopeful future of industrial progress and prosperity. And I to-day ask the conservative and patriotic members on the other side, many of whom I have the honor to count as friends, who love national unity more than they do partisan politics, to frown down upon and condemn that measure, which is fraught with so much evil to our people.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me come to the subject. There is not a city in the South that has contributed to the manufacturing growth of this country more than——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from North Carolina be extended for ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BELLAMY. There is not a city in the South that has contributed more largely to the development of the manufacturing interests than the little town of Fayetteville, on the Cape Fear River. It is situated about a hundred miles from Wilmington and 125 miles from the sea.

In the year 1796 the State of North Carolina conceived the idea of opening up that river to Fayetteville, which was then and still is the head of navigation. Fayetteville then was the distributing point for North Carolina and part of Tennessee, South Carolina, and Kentucky. The State granted to the Cape Fear Navigation Company a charter to improve it, and it was improved by that company until about twenty years ago, when the Government of the United States, in the exercise of its privilege and power to regulate the commerce of the country, took from the corporation that owned the bed of the stream its contract and compensated it for it, and put it forever under Government control and supervision.

That little town has 40 manufacturing industries. It has a most industrious, intelligent, and progressive people, many of whom are the lineal descendants of those who followed the banner of Prince Charlie at Culloden. During the last year its tonnage was 129,622 tons. It increased 14,775 tons over the year before. The value of its tonnage was $1,150,000 and its manufactured products $5,800,000; and yet, notwithstanding that in the last bill which went to the Senate, and was there killed in the last day of the last session, it had an appropriation of $250,000 for the improvement of this stream, this bill actually omits every dollar of the appropriation then given and ignores it altogether.

Mr. Chairman, the engineer in charge of the improvements of the Cape Fear River uses this language:

This proposed expenditure of $1,325,000 is for the benefit of actual present commerce, valued at about $6,000,000 annually, on which, according to the Fayetteville citizens' letter, there would be a resulting saving in rates of about $70,000 annually, which is over 5 per cent of the estimated cost. On this basis, and for the reasons outlined above and elaborated in the accompanying letters from the citizens' committee and the Chamber of Commerce, Produce Exchange, and Merchants' Association of Wilmington, I consider the improvement a worthy one and recommend that it be undertaken by the United States.

That was the recommendation of that most competent, clever, and able engineer, Captain Lucas, and $250,000 was put into the last bill for that purpose. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a practical scheme; it is a necessary one for the life of that neighborhood. In Georgia the Government of the United States has entered upon a similar improvement in deepening the waterways leading from Savannah up to Augusta, and where there was only 2 feet some time ago, in a report which I saw yesterday from a Georgia paper, I see now that the cotton mills and other industries at Augusta are able to carry their freights down to Savannah in 4 to 8 feet of water.

What is desired is a similar improvement for the Upper Cape Fear, and I do appeal to the members of this body to give to that section, the Upper Cape Fear, this appropriation, which will secure that end. The following is the article:

RIVER BOATS DRAWING 5 FEET CAN NOW GET TO AUGUSTA.

Capt. C. E. Gillette said yesterday that during the last two years the depth of the channel of the Savannah River between here and Augusta had been increased 2 feet, and that whereas two years ago boats drawing 3 feet of water found it difficult to make the passage from Savannah to Augusta, vessels drawing 5 feet now make the trip with ease.

The improvement has not been effected without the expenditure of time, thought, and money. Congress originally appropriated $250,000 for the work on the river, which has been made available as occasion required and as projects and contracts were submitted and approved.

The work of improvement has been principally by spur dams and training walls, which have tended to increase the depth of the channel by reducing its width. Formerly there was a succession of shoals for about 20 miles down the river from Augusta, which rendered it necessary for the river boats to stop at this distance from the city and lighter some considerable portion of their cargoes to the wharves. Most of these shoals have been removed, and opposite the wharves at Augusta, where formerly there was not more than 2 or 3 feet of water, there is now between 7 and 8.

There are, of course, other shoals at various points in the river between Savannah and Augusta, but these are being as rapidly removed as circumstances will permit. Work on a contract involving the expenditure of about $90,000 is now in progress, the contractors being Hunter & Frey, of Memphis.

Mr. Chairman, I have extensive data bearing upon the subject which I can not, in the short time given me, elaborate upon here, and therefore I must content myself with publishing them in the RECORD, and at the same time hope the few remarks that I have made to the members of this House will induce them to agree with me in this amendment:

IMPROVING CAPE FEAR RIVER BETWEEN WILMINGTON AND FAYETTEVILLE.

The object of this improvement is to obtain all the year round depth of not less than 4 feet, which will involve the improvement of about 70 miles of river on which the present governing depths are 2 feet at ordinary low water and 9 inches at extreme low water. Such low-water depths now result in a practical suspension of navigation during three or four months annually, with the result that the stream is useless for purposes of navigation during a third of the year, and much business which would go to it if certain navigation were assured is now always shipped by rail and at a higher rate.

The estimated present commerce is about 115,000 tons annually, valued at $1,150,000, and with navigation all the year round this present business would probably at once increase at least 50 per cent, to over 170,000 tons, valued at about $1,700,000. With certain navigation throughout the year, much of the product of about 40 mills now operating at and near Fayetteville would be shipped by river to Wilmington, and thence by steamer to the North, instead of, as now, by rail to Norfolk and thence by steamer to the North. This Fayetteville mill product has an estimated value of $5,800,000, of which three-fourths, valued at $4,350,000, could be shipped by river. This makes a total of about $6,000,000 worth of annual present shipments which would probably utilize the river if certain navigation were established.

As to probable development resulting from the improved navigation, it is claimed in Fayetteville that 12 or 15 mill enterprises, some with capital already subscribed, are only waiting assurance of certain river navigation to begin the construction of buildings and plant at that city.

There is also a possibility, and perhaps a probability, of the improvement of the river resulting in the reestablishment of Fayetteville as a distributing point for a large section of country. This point is brought out and explained in the accompanying letter from the Fayetteville citizens' committee, their claim being that Fayetteville would, under such circumstances, become such distributing point for a section of country the business of which is estimated in their letter at 6,000,000 tons annually, valued at $165,000,000.

With certain navigation there would be a probable development of the Cape Fear River Valley, much of which is good farming land. Under present conditions the success of a year's crop depends entirely on the use of the river for transportation to market. During low-water stages the farmers have the alternative of a long, costly haul, or the loss of their crop, if perishable. This section of the country is also interested in the proposed improvement because it will afford much better mail and passenger carrying facilities than now exist.

The wholesale merchants of Wilmington are much interested in the proposed improvement because it means to them a chance of extending their business to Fayetteville and vicinity, which they can not now get because unable to compete with merchants of Richmond and Norfolk, Va., on account of existing rail rates, although Fayetteville is only 83 miles by rail from Wilmington, while it is 211 miles by rail from Richmond and 204 miles from Norfolk.

The interest of Fayetteville is much greater than that of Wilmington, because, although at the head of navigation, its water route to the North can not now compete with the rail routes. North-bound shipments are now usually sent by rail to Norfolk, and thence by water north. All railroads now entering Fayetteville belong to one system, and there is practically no competition. The accompanying letter from the citizens of Fayetteville states the case in a concise and comprehensive form, and shows a probable immediate business affecting Fayetteville of approximately $5,500,000 annually. Reference has already been made to the possible much greater interest affected if the improvement of the waterway resulted in the establishment of Fayetteville as a distributing point.

Estimates are called for to obtain a depth of 4 feet, 6 feet, or 8 feet at all seasons. The least depth mentioned, 4 feet, can, in my opinion, be obtained with certainty only by a system of locks and dams, as the low-water discharge at Fayetteville is about 212 cubic feet per second, and the fall in the 70 miles below Fayetteville about 20 feet.

The river has been under improvement about twenty years, under a project to clear the river to Fayetteville and obtain a continuous channel—depth not stated—by jettying and dredging, at a cost estimated, in 1893, at $275,000, of which about half has been spent. The appropriations have been spread over so many years, and in such small amounts, that the improvement thus far attained is local in character, and the present governing depth between Wilmington and Fayetteville is little, if any, better than it was twenty years ago. With the expenditure of $135,000, in addition to as much already spent, it is believed that the low-water depth can be increased about 1 foot, making the governing depth 21 inches, instead of about 9 inches, as at present. I do not believe it possible to obtain a navigable channel of 4 feet certain depth at all seasons by jettying and dredging.

The minimum depth proposed, 4 feet, can be obtained with certainty by the construction of three locks with movable dams, the locations of which are approximately shown in the accompanying profile sheet of the Cape Fear River, such locks to have a lift of 8 feet. By making the lift 9 feet, instead of 8 feet, and doing a little dredging, the maximum proposed depth, 8 feet, could be obtained. The difference in cost of 4 feet and 8 feet navigation would probably not exceed $30,000, a little over 2 per cent of the cost of obtaining 4 feet navigation. This difference between costs for 4 feet and 8 feet navigation is so small that it is not deemed necessary to estimate the cost of the intermediate depth of 6 feet.

The form of lock and dam proposed is similar to those used in Kanawha River, and consists of a lock of 8 feet lift with a chamber 150 feet long and 28 feet wide and a movable dam about 170 feet long. Such a lock will accommodate any boat capable of navigating the river. Movable dams are deemed necessary because the river is subject to freshets ranging from 40 to 60 feet at Fayetteville to 20 to 30 feet at the lowest proposed lock.

The estimate is as follows:

Three locks, as above described, with movable dams, $400,000 each	$1,200,000
Superintendence and contingencies, 10 per cent	120,000
Total	1,320,000

This estimate may appear excessive, but it should be borne in mind that there is no solid rock for foundations, and the estimates are based on bottom of foundations at about 28 feet below low-water surface. In addition, the stream has caving banks, necessitating bank protection for an unusually long distance below each dam, to protect from scour.

This proposed expenditure of $1,320,000 is for the benefit of an actual present commerce valued at about $6,000,000 annually, on which, according to the Fayetteville citizens' letter, there would be a resulting saving in rates of about $70,000 annually, which is over 5 per cent of the estimated cost. On this basis, and for the reasons outlined above and elaborated in the accompanying letters from the citizens' committee of Fayetteville, and the Chamber of Commerce, Produce Exchange, and Merchants' Association of Wilmington, I consider the improvement a worthy one and recommend that it be undertaken by the United States.

There are forwarded herewith, under separate cover, a map of Wilmington Harbor, one sheet of profiles of Cape Fear River between Wilmington and Fayetteville, and two sheets of cross sections of river bed and valley at proposed lock and dam sites.

Respectfully submitted.

E. W. VAN C. LUCAS,
Captain, Corps of Engineers.

Brig. Gen. JOHN M. WILSON,
Chief of Engineers, U. S. A.
(Through the Division Engineer.)

Resolution of the general assembly of North Carolina requesting the Senators and Representatives in Congress from that State to exert their united influence to secure the adoption of the plan for improving the Cape Fear River, recommended by Captain Lucas, U. S. A., as transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of War.

Whereas the maintenance of water transportation in competition with rail is of the greatest importance to all of the citizens of the entire Cape Fear section; and

Whereas the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Fayetteville, and the Chamber of Commerce, the Produce Exchange, and the Merchants' Association of the city of Wilmington have secured a survey and a recommendation for an appropriation for the improvement of the Upper Cape Fear River: Therefore Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring): First. That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to exert their united influence to secure the passage of an amendment to the river and harbor bill at this session authorizing the adoption of the plan for improving the Cape Fear River recommended by E. Van C. Lucas, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A., Wilmington, N. C., as transmitted to Congress by the honorable Secretary of War.

Second. That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each of our Senators and Representatives.

In the general assembly read three times, and ratified this the 18th day of January, A. D. 1901.

(Captain Lucas's plan provided for slack-water navigation between Wilmington and Fayetteville so as to secure an 8-foot channel at low water. The bill for this purpose was adopted in the conference committee of the Senate and House, and an appropriation made for beginning the work. It was, however, lost, along with the rest of the river and harbor bill, on March 4 last.)

[The Observer, Fayetteville, N. C., Friday, March 14, 1902.]

LAST NIGHT'S PUBLIC MEETING—REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON IMPROVEMENT OF THE CAPE FEAR RIVER.

The following report of the committee appointed for the purpose was unanimously adopted:

The chamber of commerce, at the suggestion of the citizens' committee on improvement of the Cape Fear River, having called this meeting for the purpose of consulting with the citizens of Fayetteville, and the meeting, through its committee, having considered the matter of the proposed improvement of the Cape Fear River, finds as follows, viz:

The Cape Fear River between Wilmington and Fayetteville was, up to some twenty years ago, under the control of the State of North Carolina. The State had, in the year 1796, chartered the Cape Fear Navigation Company, whose duty it was to secure continuous navigation of the river, in return for which service the company was authorized to charge tolls on the commerce using it. In order to set commerce free and more effectually to accomplish the object sought for, the Federal Government bought out the navigation company, took charge of the river, made Fayetteville a port of entry, and adopted a plan for securing continuous navigation which was estimated to cost $275,000, $135,000 of which has been expended. The plan consisted of the enlargement of the system of jetties inaugurated by the old navigation company, but which the increasing effects of deforestation at the head waters of the river have rendered ineffectual, and, as since declared by Captain Lucas, the Government engineer in charge, practically worthless.

The failure of the jetty plan to secure continuous navigation led to the present agitation of the subject, and a preliminary survey was ordered by Congress for the purpose of ascertaining by what plan such navigation could be secured. The engineer's report showed that nothing short of a slack-water system, at a cost of $1,320,000, would accomplish the object sought; and it only remained to demonstrate that such an expenditure was commercially feasible. The English plan, self-evidently sound, for proving "a commercial case" before Parliament for such an undertaking, was adopted, and the commercial feasibility of the proposed improvement demonstrated many times over.

Every possible, as well as every actual, contention against the soundness of the proposition that the Government has bound itself in duty, by its act in freeing this river and taking charge of it, to maintain it as a navigable highway, has been met and overthrown. The general assembly of North Carolina, at its last session, unanimously adopted a resolution urging our Senators and Representatives in Congress to secure the passage of an act to carry out the proposed improvement. Our Senators and Representatives have recently (viz, on the 16th of January), sitting as a deliberative body, adopted a resolution binding themselves to exert every effort to secure the necessary legislation; and in their presentation of the reasonable needs of North Carolina before the Rivers and Harbors Committee they gave the chief place to the improvement of the Upper Cape Fear, asking that $250,000, out of a total of $515,000 asked for by them, be appropriated to this particular work.

Notwithstanding these facts, we are informed that the Rivers and Harbors Committee granted every request made for North Carolina by our delegation, with the single exception of this one—and that, too, the only one asked for by the State, as such, or by any State, and, as noted above, the chief one made by the delegation.

We are informed by Mr. BELLAMY, the member of Congress from this district, that the committee was controlled in its decision by the report of the division engineer at Baltimore, Col. Peter C. Hains, who had declared that he did not believe that the whole amount of traffic (approximately $165,000,000) proved to exist in the territory traffically tributary to Fayetteville would be diverted to the Cape Fear River on completion of the proposed work; and that the effect, if it, or part of it, should be so diverted, would be merely to transfer existing business from one port to another.

It is within common knowledge that the Government has appropriated several times as much as is asked for for the Upper Cape Fear improvement in full to improvements which have secured but a sixth of the possible traffic named; and it is obvious, we respectfully submit, that the diversion of business from one port to another is the effect of every such improvement, as was notably the case with the spot-cotton business of New York, which has been diverted by the improvement of Southern harbors. It is also obvious that the ground upon which the Government justifies its act in causing such diversion of business is the lessening of the cost of transportation to considerable bodies of consumers and producers, as has been so conclusively demonstrated would be the effect of the proposed improvement of the Cape Fear and the setting free thereby of a portion of the forces employed in the production of wealth.

Now, therefore, in view of the foregoing facts and considerations, it is hereby Resolved 1. That we reiterate our conviction that we are entitled, as of right, to a fair, not to say generous appropriation from Congress for the carrying out of this the greatest of the State's works of internal improvement, undertaken by our own and assumed by the Federal Government.

2. That the secretary of the chamber of commerce be instructed to bring the action of this meeting to the attention of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, with the request that they use the facts recited for the purpose of securing an amendment to the river and harbor bill either in the House or in the Senate, as may seem best to them.

3. That the secretary be also instructed to bring said action, together with the recent presentation and exhibits made by the chairman of the citizens' committee before the Rivers and Harbors Committee, to the attention of Colonel Hains, the division engineer referred to above, with the respectful request that he reconsider his report in the light of the facts recited and cooperate with us and our Senators and Representatives in securing the amendment desired.

4. That the secretary be also instructed to bring the said action, etc., to the attention of Col. William H. Love, the secretary at Baltimore of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, with the request that he employ his good offices with Colonel Hains to secure his cooperation as suggested.

5. That our thanks are hereby tendered to our delegation in Congress for making the appropriation for the improvement of the Cape Fear the chief item embodied in their request of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and for their caucus action in reference thereto; and to those chambers of commerce and other commercial bodies and those newspapers of the State which have had the intelligence to perceive the importance to North Carolina of this great State work, destined to lift us out of the condition of commercial inferiority which has been so long the State's chief reproach, and the patriotism and independence to speak out in its favor, and whose kind words and sympathy have so greatly encouraged us.

LETTER OF THE FAYETTEVILLE (N. C.) CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
FAYETTEVILLE, N. C., August 8, 1900.

DEAR SIR: The Fayetteville Chamber of Commerce desires to call your attention to the great necessity which exists for the improvement of the navigation of the Cape Fear River from Wilmington, N. C., to Fayetteville, N. C., the head of its navigable waters. Fayetteville, N. C., for almost a century enjoyed the advantage and distinction of being, commercially, the most important inland town in the State. This condition was brought about by its position at the head of the Cape Fear River, upon whose splendid waters all the heavy shipment of salts, iron, molasses, coffee, and merchandise generally found their way through Fayetteville all over the western counties of the State, reaching into East Tennessee and into the States to the north and south of us. The building of railroads in the last quarter of a century and more deflected these shipments elsewhere, and the Cape Fear River did not receive that attention which its importance to the people of a large section of North Carolina would seem to have warranted. Latterly Fayetteville, N. C., has attracted the attention of several manufacturing capitalists, and is beginning to be regarded as a promising manufacturing center, as is shown by the following industries, the most of which have been erected very recently here and in vicinity.

Hope Mills, 15,000 spindles, 750 looms; Holt Morgan Mills, 10,000 spindles, 500 looms; Holt Williamson Mills, 5,200 spindles; Fayette Cotton Mills, 3,120 spindles; Bluff Mills, 200 looms; Murchison Mills, 3,000 spindles, 100 looms; Cumberland Mills, 3,000 spindles; Ashely-Baily Silk Mills, 100 looms; La Fayette Knitting Mills; Lacy Manufacturing Company Furniture Mills; Fayetteville Cotton Oil and Fertilizer Company, 40 tons daily; Carolina Machine Shops; Ward's Foundry; Emmitt's Roller Corn Mill; Williams Furniture Factory; McNeill's Roller Rice and Grist Mill; Clark's Machine Shop; Carolina Roller and Grist Mill; Watson Planing Machine Mill; Tobacco Warehouse; Fayetteville Wooden Ware Company; Tolar Hart Holt Mills, 15,000 spindles; E. A. Poe's Brickyard Works; several sawmills and other industries.

All these produce vast amounts of freight, and many of these works already use the river in their transportation and in this way enjoy a large profit in saving on freights alone. The present tonnage of river freights is 50,000 tons, but if water could be assured the year round, even with the present river transportation facilities and the present business, there would be no trouble in increasing the tonnage 100 or even 150 per cent. But we have in the near future the certain prospects of electric power at $15 per horse per annum. This will in a few years (with our other advantage) bring a great many new and important industries to our city. We know of three very large ones that will come here certainly as soon as the electric power reaches us. This is to be produced by the waters of the Cape Fear River at a point some miles above us, and the fact of its coming here seems to be well assured.

It is almost impossible for us to estimate the amount of freight in tons that would seek the river transportation if a regular depth of water was assured. But from the great advantage in freight rates that would favor water transportation we know that several more steamboats would go on at once, and that soon the Cape Fear River would regain its old-time importance, blessing a large section of the State by its beneficent freight rates.

Fayetteville, N. C., is a port of entry, and the Cape Fear River is under the control of the Government. There is no stream in North Carolina that will bring so much in return for every dollar expended upon its improvement by the Government.

Yours, truly,

F. R. ROSE,
Secretary Chamber of Commerce.

Capt. E. W. VAN C. LUCAS,
United States Engineer.

LETTER OF A COMMITTEE OF CITIZENS OF FAYETTEVILLE, N. C.

FAYETTEVILLE, N. C., November 21, 1900.

SIR: The undersigned, the committee appointed at the citizens' meeting held on the occasion of your visit on Thursday last, have taken up the subjects of inquiry suggested by you, and have pleasure in reporting as follows:

THE PRESENT RIVER TRAFFIC.

The tonnage of the traffic by the steamboats between this city and Wilmington, as reported by the United States engineer office at Wilmington for the year ending December 31, 1899, was, in round numbers, 115,000. We are informed that its value would average $10 per ton, which would give a total value of $1,150,000.

EXISTING LOCAL RAILWAY TRAFFIC WHICH WOULD SEEK THE RIVER IF IMPROVED.

In reply to printed forms issued to our merchants, traders, and manufacturers, made out, when necessary, under supervision, we find that there have been received at and shipped from Fayetteville by rail during the past twelve months 112,295 tons of merchandise of all kinds, valued at $5,812,614. It is estimated that at least three-fourths of this would at once be diverted to the river for transportation if the proposed improvement were made and the speedy and regular dispatch of freights which it would make possible were established.

TRAFFIC FROM A DISTANCE WHICH WOULD BE DIVERTED TO THE RIVER IF FAYETTEVILLE WERE MADE A "BASING POINT."

We are informed that as soon as the proposed improvement in navigation and the dispatch of freights is effected Fayetteville would be made what the traffic managers call a basing point for freight rates. The effect of this, we are informed, will be to cause all railways which run within the territory thus tributary to Fayetteville to make rates from Fayetteville. By the term "the territory thus tributary to Fayetteville" we mean all the country which is nearer to Fayetteville than to any other basing point, the railway commission laws requiring the rates therein to be proportionately less than to such other basing points.

We inclose a map * * * which will show the territory thus delimited as tributary to Fayetteville. The basing points nearest to Fayetteville are Richmond and Norfolk, Va., on the north and Charleston, S. C., on the south. We have drawn lines at right angles across air lines between Fayetteville and the three cities named, respectively, and at points midway between Fayetteville and them. Line A is the dividing line between Richmond and Fayetteville; line B the dividing line between Norfolk and Fayetteville, and line C that between Charleston and Fayetteville. It will be seen that, while the northeast section of North Carolina falls within the territory allotted to Richmond and Norfolk, a considerable portion of southwest Virginia and a considerable portion of northeast South Carolina, each larger than the first-mentioned, fall within the territory of Fayetteville. As the improvements referred to would also cause Wilmington to be made a basing point, the map would be changed thereby to a comparatively small extent, the effect of the change being to add more to the joint territory of Wilmington and Fayetteville.

We also inclose a copy of a United States Government report on the Manchester Ship Canal * * * in which is described (pp. 5-9) the manner employed in Great Britain for "proving" a commercial reason for the granting of a charter by Parliament for such an undertaking. We shall, in this case, employ the same method, in a general way, because such matters in the older countries have necessarily reached a more exact standard. An important consideration in our favor in relying upon such a method is the fact that the railway-commission laws in this country now require connecting lines to transport freight delivered to them, whether a tariff of through rates has been established or not, and, as before mentioned, at rates proportioned to the "length of haul."

Without entering upon a consideration of how far westward beyond the borders of North Carolina the traffic influence of the proposed improvements would extend, we ask attention to the significant coincidence that the territory now delimited on our map is almost the same as that which was tributary to Fayetteville in the last of the eighteenth century, in the first part of the present century, and up to the railroad era. The fact that Canova's statue of Washington was brought from Italy to Wilmington, was thence landed at Fayetteville, and finally hauled overland to Raleigh in the latter period is merely an illustration of the general conditions of transportation at that time.

The proposed improvement, therefore, would not establish a novel condition, but would restore the normal relation of the Cape Fear to a vast territory, which the overworking of the railroad idea and the effect of deforestation upon the water courses have disturbed; or we may state the case this way, that it would be the reestablishment of normal conditions by a development of the problem of transportation, which conditions had been disturbed by a cruder stage of the movement.

Within the limitations of our map, as thus restricted, it will be seen that there is a population equal to that of the State of North Carolina (some 1,900,000). The population which by a liberal estimate might be considered as involved, in one way or another, in the production of the existing river traffic and the existing railway traffic divertible to the river, in and out of Fayetteville, may be said to include that of Cumberland County, in which Fayetteville lies (30,000), and one-fourth of that of the contiguous counties of Sampson (7,000), Bladen (5,000), Robeson (9,000), Moore (6,000), and Harnett (4,000)—a total of 61,000. The territory, then, on the map, this side of the Blue Ridge, contains a population thirty times as great as the population at present tributary to Fayetteville.

We therefore have this proposition:

	Tons.	Value.
Existing river traffic	115,000	$1,150,000
Three-fourths (the divertible portion) of existing railway traffic in and out of Fayetteville—three-fourths of 112,295 tons and three-fourths of $5,812,614	84,221	4,359,460
In round numbers	200,000	5,500,000
Thirty times these figures would give the tonnage and value of traffic which, other things being equal, would find a cheaper route to and from the great markets by way of the Cape Fear River if improved as suggested—that is, 30 by 200,000 tons and 30 by $5,500,000	6,000,000	165,000,000

In this connection it is worth noting that Mr. Walter L. Holt, one of the chief owners of cotton mills in this county and in Alamance County, 100 miles distant, finds that he gets his oils, dyes, and machinery and ships his finished products by river from his Fayetteville (Cumberland) mills for an average of but half the freight rate which he is obliged to pay by rail to and from his Alamance mills.

THE RAILWAY COMMISSION'S FIGURES.

We further inclose a letter from the North Carolina corporation (railway) commission, * * * from which it will be seen that the actual freight-traffic movement for the past year over the roads converging at Fayetteville, and within the territory indicated on our map, amounted to 1,497,976 tons, or one-fourth of the tonnage (6,000,000) which we have estimated by the per capita method for the whole territory east of the mountains. It will be observed also that the commission's letter expresses the hope that "the Government will see the importance of this station (Fayetteville), which, by reason of its situation, should again become the distributing point for the central and western North Carolina territory."

Attention may also be called to the fact that Fayetteville, at the head of navigation, 100 miles inland, is the only point on the Atlantic Coast Line between Richmond and Charleston (the present basing points) which is situated on navigable water.

How far the inertia of settled routes of trade may act in restraint of the possibilities indicated above is, of course, a matter of conjecture.

THE COMMERCIAL CASE.

We assume that while the Government undertakes works of the kind now proposed for the public benefit, and without expectation of a direct return for its outlay, it is nevertheless influenced by the same conditions which influence private capitalists. That is to say, if the cost of the proposed improvement should be $1,000,000, it would be a sound commercial undertaking, commending itself to the Government from this point of view, if the additional traffic secured by reason of the outlay, or the resultant economies of transportation on existing traffic, should yield 5 per cent on that amount. Five per cent on $1,000,000 is $50,000.

It is apparent that the economies of transportation which such an improvement would render possible—twelve months' running of the boats instead of nine months, the cheaper proportionate handling of larger loads, etc.—would leave a margin for tolls for the use of the improved waterway, if the work were done by a private corporation, far in excess of the reasonable rate of 5 per cent on $1,000,000. An average of 25 cents a ton on the class of freight (115,000 tons) now carried by the river and 50 cents a ton on the class of freight (84,221 tons) now carried by the railways in and out of Fayetteville, but divertible to the river, would produce a revenue of $70,860, or over 7 per cent, on the existing Fayetteville traffic alone. A toll of 10 cents a ton would more than pay for the whole investment of $1,000,000 in two years if all the traffic of the tributary country were diverted this way.

Such speculations as to what might be done if the river were the property of private capitalists instead of that of the Government are useful as indicating how very far within the margin of commercial safety the Government would be acting if it should make such an expenditure.

We desire, in conclusion, to heartily reiterate for ourselves the expression of thanks which the meeting that appointed us unanimously voted to you, sir, for the interest which you have taken in this great work.

We remain, with high esteem, yours, obediently,

LETTER OF THE NORTH CAROLINA CORPORATION COMMISSION.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NORTH CAROLINA CORPORATION COMMISSION,
Raleigh, November 20, 1900.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter, bearing date November 19, asking for information touching the tonnage of freight moved over the railroads to and from Fayetteville.

Replying to this inquiry, I am very sorry to have to say that I can not give you the information as you desire it, as we do not receive at this office the tonnage movement from each station along the various lines of railroads in the State; but we do get the total tonnage of freight from the entire road, which compilation gives the freight originating on the road and freight received from connecting roads, together being the total freight tonnage handled by the road. This information I take pleasure in furnishing you, which you will find herewith inclosed. (Detailed figures omitted by Captain Lucas. The total tonnage amounts to 1,137,947 for Wilmington and Weldon Railroad: 360,032 for Cape Fear and Yadkin Valley Railway; total, 1,497,979.)

Table No. 1 is compiled from the last statement of the Cape Fear and Yadkin Valley Railway Company; Table No. 2 is for the Wilmington and Weldon Railroad (main line), including Wilson and Fayetteville branch and other of its branches proper.

I trust the statements will enable your committee to make an estimate of Fayetteville's proportionate amount of this tonnage. I am very glad to know that some steps are being taken toward opening up the Cape Fear River between Wilmington and Fayetteville, and I trust the Government will see the importance of this station, which by reason of its situation should again become the distributing point for the central and western North Carolina territory.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

H. C. BROWN, Clerk.

Hon. E. J. HALE,
Chairman Citizens' Committee, Fayetteville, N. C.

LETTER OF THE WILMINGTON (N. C.) CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

THE WILMINGTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Wilmington, N. C., November 19, 1900.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 12th duly received and referred to our committee on harbor, shipping, and commerce. Our chamber appointed a committee December 21, 1899, to ask for anchorage basin at Wilmington, feeling that the size and importance of our port, the largest and only deep-water port in the State, upon which the Government has expended large sums to give it 20 feet of water, require and need an anchorage basin, at which ships coming here can swing in safety, the present channel being too narrow to allow this. We are not prepared to care for vessels that this increased depth of water gives us. Our business has and is materially increased each year, and with this basin we will be in position to care for many more vessels and increased commerce.

This being a fresh-water port south of Hatteras, makes it particularly desirable for the shelter and care of smaller war ships and torpedo boats. From our geographical position we are particularly well situated for steamers trading between Cuban and Porto Rican ports, it being a shorter and safer route than any port north of Hatteras. We have good railroad facilities, capital, and energy, which will unite and make good use of these needed improvements. We are not prepared at this time to give statistics showing the present commerce of this port. This, no doubt, you have on file in your office, but if we can do anything to obtain this much-desired basin we will be pleased to do so.

Navigable rivers are sure and steady feeders, and those living near such streams receive many direct and indirect benefits. Before the time of railroads they were the channels upon which commerce moved. To-day they control and adjust rates made by railroads upon which commerce can move freely and cheaply. Therefore how necessary to the welfare of a country.

The Cape Fear River has been the great gateway for the people of North Carolina for many years, and even with its uncertain waters, being navigable only about eight months in the year, and then only to boats of very light draft—2 feet or under—has proven of inestimable value to the section through which it runs and is tributary thereto, particularly to the port of Wilmington. With increased depth of water, say 6 feet the year round, an immense tonnage will come this way, the people of our State will be materially benefited thereby, and the commerce and future of Wilmington be assured.

Our chamber appreciates highly the services rendered by you and the marked improvement of our river under your administration, and will gladly cooperate with you in any and all things tending to the continuance and improvement of this needed work.

Very respectfully,

MARCUS W. JACOBI,
President.

Capt. E. W. VAN C. LUCAS,
Corps of Engineers, U. S. A.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina is to improve Cape Fear River above Wilmington. I want to ask the attention of the committee to the estimate of cost by the Chief of Engineers. The making of this improvement so as to give 4 feet channel in depth is estimated to cost $1,320,000. To give an 8-foot channel is to cost $1,350,000.

The division engineer, Colonel Haines, speaking of this improvement, makes the following statement as his conclusion:

That the prospective business may reach the value of $165,000,000 annually, as estimated, if the river be improved as recommended, I do not believe. Moreover, much of the prospective business would not be in the nature of an increase, but merely a diversion from Fayetteville and Wilmington of business already existing at other points.

The improvement of this river by means of locks and movable dams is an expensive one, and after it be completed if it is to be efficiently maintained much larger appropriations must be made annually than has formerly been the case. The cost of 8-foot navigation is so little in excess of 4-foot navigation that the 8-foot depth is the one by all means to be preferred if the plan for slack-water navigation be adopted. While I am of opinion that Cape Fear River is worthy of improvement, I can not subscribe to the opinion that it is worthy of improvement at the expense herein indicated.

If this amendment is adopted it simply means that we are to go directly in the face of the division engineer as to the advisability of doing it at this time. The improvement of the river below Wilmington has been carried on and is being carried on at a very large expense. The committee, after the most careful investigation we could make, felt that this proposed amendment was in no ways up to the standard or average in worth of improvements contained in this bill. If this amendment is made, and equal justice is done to other projects the country over, of equal importance and of equal value, then this bill, instead of carrying $60,000,000, ought to be, in my opinion, $150,000,000. The time has not come for taking up the character of the improvements that is asked for here in this amendment. This was the unanimous conclusion of the committee after the most careful investigation that we could give it, and we must ask this committee to vote down the proposed amendment.

Mr. BELLAMY. I will ask the gentleman if it is not fair to state this to the committee—that Colonel Hains himself, in reporting the amount to the present session of Congress, omitted any appropriation for the improvement of the river for the maintenance of the present operations there until Congress had provided for this improvement recommended by the engineer below?

Mr. REEVES. Without intending the least discourtesy to the gentleman, I have been unable, on account of the confusion, to hear his suggestion. I do not know what he said.

Mr. BELLAMY. I ask if Colonel Hains in his report to this body the present fiscal year did not omit any appropriation for continuing the present improvements of the Upper Cape Fear, expecting the committee to make the permanent improvement suggested in Major Lucas's report?

Mr. REEVES. Oh, no; I do not think so at all.

Mr. BELLAMY. He says that he recommends no further appropriation be made until the committee adopts the project.

Mr. REEVES. Yes; I expressly stated that. I read his opinion as to the improvement of the river, that it should not be undertaken at this time. I so read from his report.

Mr. BURTON. Just one word, Mr. Chairman. I spoke on this subject briefly yesterday. There is no line of river and harbor improvements where the appropriations have been so extravagant or the methods pursued so open to criticism as in the construction of locks and dams. We have half a score of rivers on hand now, on some of which the completion of the project would cost six to ten million dollars. Several of these provisions have been scattered over different reaches of the river, as if the intention were to make provision for a lock and dam for every Congressional district. Unfortunately, the statement I have made is not an exaggeration. Now, if there is anything desirable for this committee and the House to do, it is to stop this building of locks and dams, unless in pursuance of some carefully devised plan and after full consideration of the results.

We have omitted recommendations for several rivers where large improvements have already been made, where there are unfinished locks and dams, and now this new one comes in with a million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars more. We are asked to begin this by appropriating $250,000, and we might as well face the fact that it means a million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars. If we do anything on it at all, we might as well appropriate $250,000 and authorize $1,100,000 additional. If we did that and took care of other projects of this nature, it would absolutely break down our bill.

I can not give very much attention or respect to the argument that one State should have an improvement made because some other State has it. That is a good deal like the boy who says, "Tom has a whistle, and I want a whistle, too." Because appropriations have been made for other States, that is no reason why similar appropriations should be made for North Carolina. Suppose appropriations have been made for other States irrationally, shall they be made irrationally for North Carolina, too? Suppose that we are selecting out a few works, intending to push them to completion; ought we not to pursue that policy and abandon the construction of new and expensive locks and dams until we have secured some results from those already commenced.

I regard this as an amendment of very vital importance, because it is so objectionable, and I hope it will be promptly voted down.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. BELLAMY was rejected, there being—ayes 31, noes 61.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving North East and Black rivers and Cape Fear River above Wilmington, N. C.: Continuing improvements and for maintenance, $10,000.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. I deem it my duty to the district which I have the honor to represent, to the State which I represent in part on this floor, to myself, and to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to state clearly, in order to avoid any possible misconstruction, my individual position in regard to the pending bill.

Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the amendment presented by my colleague [Mr. BELLAMY]. I voted for it and used all the influence I possess for its adoption. I have always been in favor of that proposition. In the Fifty-sixth Congress I succeeded in having inserted in the emergency river and harbor bill a provision for a survey for 4, 6, or 8 feet depth of water in the Upper Cape Fear River. That survey was made. In the same Congress I also advocated an appropriation for the Upper Cape Fear River (when the river and harbor bill was up for consideration) upon the floor as well as before the Rivers and Harbors Committee. In the Fifty-seventh Congress I went before the Rivers and Harbors Committee and again advocated this appropriation for the Upper Cape Fear River. So that from the beginning to this hour my position has been clear and unmistakable. I have been in favor of the proposition and have voted for and strongly advocated it.

My distinguished colleague from the Sixth district of North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY] has also been indefatigable in his efforts for this proposition. I do him the credit to say that on and off the floor of the House he has spared no pains to have this provision included in the pending bill. I am also, Mr. Chairman, most heartily in favor of the proposition of my colleague from the First North Carolina district [Mr. SMALL] for a great inland waterway, which will be not only a protection to the commerce of the State of North Carolina, but to the National Government, in war as well as in peace. I do my colleague from the First district the justice to say that he has been indefatigable in his efforts in behalf of that proposition. I have also used whatever influence I possess for the inland waterway along the North Carolina coast.

So that, Mr. Chairman, I have earnestly advocated both these propositions of my colleagues'. My record upon these propositions, as well as upon all other matters in which the State of North Carolina is concerned, is clear and beyond question; and I am ready here and now, in the House of Representatives and through the conference committee of the House and Senate, when the bill goes to conference, to seek to amend this bill in order to get these appropriations included, and to get what I think the State of North Carolina is entitled to in the way of additional river and harbor improvements.

But in regard to the pending bill, Mr. Chairman, my position must also be clearly understood. My colleague [Mr. SMALL] stated yesterday that there is included in the bill the sum of $29,500 only for the Third North Carolina district. Now, sir, that statement is not entirely correct even as to the amount; for it does not include the Northeast and Black rivers, for which an appropriation is in the bill.

What does the Third North Carolina district get in this bill, and what would I antagonize if I should individually antagonize this whole measure? The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has included in the pending bill an appropriation for improving the Neuse and Trent rivers—the two largest rivers I believe in my State next to the Cape Fear River. That provision inserted in this bill I do not propose shall be underestimated. That provision gives 8 feet low-water depth in the Neuse and Trent rivers, which have an extensive commerce especially in North Carolina pine lumber.

It means a navigable channel of 8 feet depth at low water in those rivers, so that the lumber barges and the great steamers which ply on them can carry quickly and safely their freights to Norfolk, to Philadelphia, and to other Northern markets. I have seen near the city of Newbern these lumber barges stuck in the mud by reason of an insufficient depth of water. This bill carries $20,000 for that navigable channel of 8 feet depth at low water, and this item means also, Mr. Chairman, an additional sum, if I remember correctly, of at least $60,000 for the completion of this new project, committing the Government to this expenditure.

This project is of incalculable value to the people who live along and who are interested in the commerce of those rivers. Again, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors included in this bill an item of $9,500 for the improvement of an inland waterway between New River, Onslow County, and Beaufort, in the county of Carteret.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. This bill includes, as I was saying, Mr. Chairman, also, an appropriation for a project which had been for some years abandoned—between New River, in the county of Onslow, and Beaufort, in the county of Carteret. It opens up an inland waterway of vast importance to the people of Onslow and Carteret counties. Therefore, I do not propose to underestimate the importance of that proposition. The bill includes a survey for New River—the appropriations under the old project having been somewhat of a failure—and upon this survey will be based undoubtedly in the future additional appropriations for New River, in Onslow County.

To say the least, it is an important entering wedge. It includes also a survey, which was demanded by the Chamber of Commerce of Goldsboro, in the county of Wayne, for a 3-foot depth at low water from Goldsboro to Newbern, in the Neuse River. It includes a survey in which I am much interested, and which, through the joint efforts of my colleague [Mr. SMALL] and myself, was incorporated in this bill for Carrot Island Slough, a most important thoroughfare to the people of Carteret County.

Therefore, with all these appropriations in this bill of such great importance to the counties of the Third district, I do not see how, in the discharge of my duty, I can do more than seek to amend the bill. While I am heartily in favor of the Upper Cape Fear appropriation, and the great inland waterway appropriation, and other appropriations for the State of North Carolina, and while I yield to none of my colleagues, all of whom are diligent and able men, in loyalty to my State, at the same time I do not feel I should go so far as to antagonize these various appropriations, of the utmost importance to the people in my district, included in this bill.

I feel that this would be unjust to the people I represent and unjust to the committee. I am ready to amend the bill; I am ready to amend it here and to strive to amend it elsewhere. As between my colleagues and myself there is merely a difference of opinion as to the proper method to be pursued. I do not, however, see how, in the discharge of my duty, I can antagonize this bill. I am willing to do everything in my power to amend it and to see that the State of North Carolina gets what my colleagues and I think we are entitled to (and we should have both the Upper Cape Fear and inland waterway appropriations); but it seems to me that antagonism of the pending bill is useless, as well as hopeless, and that the same results can be accomplished by a different method.

That, Mr. Chairman, is my position, stated clearly and emphatically, I hope. I shall vote for the amendments of my colleagues. I shall do all in my power to secure both the amendment for the inland waterway and the amendment for the Upper Cape Fear, as I have always done in the past; but when it comes to active opposition of this bill, in which are included so many other most important projects and new projects, not large in amount, it is true, but great in their importance to the people of the district which I have the honor to represent, it does not seem to me that this would be the right thing to do or that I should go any further than to seek to amend the bill in every proper way in my power. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. I understand the gentleman withdraws the pro forma amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to speak on the proposition of the amendment?

Mr. NEWLANDS. In the debate of yesterday, Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman from Louisiana was considering the effect of the overflow of the Mississippi River upon the agricultural lands of Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana, he was asked by the gentleman from Tennessee whether the storage of water in the arid regions of the Northwest and West would not diminish the torrential flow, and it is with reference to that matter that I wish to say a few words to this committee, and particularly to the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

The flow of the Mississippi River is supplemented by the flow of rivers tributary to it, part upon the east of that river and part upon the west. The main tributary upon the east is the Ohio River, of which the Tennessee and the Cumberland rivers are tributaries. The tributaries on the west are the Missouri River, of which the Platte River is a tributary, and the Arkansas River. All these rivers have numerous rivers tributary to them, and all have their sources in the snows of the Rocky Mountains. These snows melt in the late spring and the early summer and precipitate a torrential flood into these rivers. That flood reaching the Lower Mississippi adds to and supplements the torrent there.

Now, what is the problem of the Mississippi River, with reference to which so large expenditures have been made during a series of years? Why, the problem there is that they have too much water in the early part of the summer, threatening an overflow of the banks and a destruction of millions of acres in three great States now devoted to agriculture. What is the difficulty later on? Why, it is that there is too little water; and hence improvements upon the Mississippi River are of two classes—first, the construction of levees, and, second, the dredging of shoals and sand bars. The levees are purely intended for the protection of the agricultural lands on each side of them. There is no pretense that they are necessary for the purpose of promoting navigation during those months, for the river is so swollen as easily to permit of navigation. But later on the stream is reduced to a thread; sand bars and shoals appear, and so it is necessary to dredge the river for the purpose of aiding navigation. The difficulty, then, with the Lower Mississippi River is the unequal flow of that river; torrential in the early summer and reduced to a narrow stream later on.

Now, what is the problem with the arid region? Why, it is the same problem. The flow of the river is unequal. The flow of those rivers derived from the melting snow is torrential in the early summer and is reduced to almost nothing in the late summer, when the water is required for the purpose of ripening the crops. So that the problem is the same, the evil is the same. Now, what do we propose to do in the arid region? Why, we propose to equalize the flow of these streams by retaining the flood waters in great artificial reservoirs at the headwaters of the Missouri, of the Platte, of the Arkansas River, and the numerous rivers that are tributary to them and which take their source in the snows of those mountains.

But the answer is that these reservoirs can not possibly store enough water to materially diminish the torrential flow below. I admit that, but there is a secondary storage of water which is the result of the construction of these reservoirs. Why are these reservoirs constructed? Simply because in the spring and early summer the flow of the river is torrential. The settler who wishes to reclaim land on the banks of the stream or at a distance of 4 or 5 or 6 or 10 miles, and who proposes to construct a ditch or canal to the public lands for the purpose of spreading out the waters over the land for the cultivation of crops, ascertains upon investigation that in the months of July and August there is not sufficient water flowing in the river, and that his crops will lack the moisture required to mature them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nevada has expired.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Before the gentleman goes on, I wish he would tell us how much water will be kept out of the Missouri River, and therefore out of the Mississippi River, by these reservoirs.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will speak of that a little later. I was saying that the man who wishes to divert water for the purpose of reclaiming land upon the bank of a stream or distant 10, 15, or 20 miles finds upon inquiry and observation that that stream is reduced to a thread in July, when the water is most needed. During the months of March, April, May, and June he would have an abundance of water, but in July, when it is most needed, the water would not be forthcoming and the crops would become the victims of the sun and of drought.

So the very purpose, or the primary purpose, of the storage of this water in the mountains is to furnish the comparatively small supply that will be required by great areas of cultivated land during the months of July and August. We will assume, then, that enough storage is accomplished for that purpose by storing the flood waters in the winter and spring of the year in the mountains. Immediately following that the settlers would enter upon large areas of land in the great plains which constitute a part of what is called the Great American Desert, and would immediately divert from and take out of the river by means of canals and ditches vast quantities of flood waters which can not be stored in the reservoirs; for, of course, all of such flood waters can not be stored.

The result will be that millions of acres will take up like a sponge these flood waters, which otherwise would go down the Missouri River and down the Platte River and down the Arkansas River into the Mississippi River, and thus add to the flow of the torrent there. Later on these waters used in irrigation gradually seep back through the soil into the river and equalize its flow, and thus, instead of having a torrential flow during two months of the year you have an equal and sustained flow throughout the entire summer season. Thus the waters which now go to waste in the Gulf of Mexico in the period of two months would gradually make their way back to the Gulf during a period of many months, maintaining an equalized and sustained flow of that river.

Go to the Mississippi River and to the Missouri River in the months of July and August and September, and inquire of the people there what the difficulty is, and they will tell you there is too little water. Go there in the months of March, April, and May and ask what the difficulty is, and they will tell you there is too much water. The problem which we have to meet is the equalization of the stream, the maintenance of an equal and sustained flow. Now, the gentleman from Louisiana, whilst admitting that there may be something in the theory that the reclamation of the arid lands of the West would tend toward an equalization of the stream, claims that only one-third of the torrential waters of the Mississippi River come from the Missouri, the Platte, and the Arkansas rivers.

I do not know whether his figures are correct or not for I have not inquired into that matter. The Missouri is an immense stream, and I supposed that its flow alone was larger than one-third of the Mississippi. But assuming that it is only one-third, if this storage system should have the effect only of reducing its flow partially it would be of great benefit. Of course the work on the Lower Mississippi River will never be ended. That work will be perpetual, because whatever our efforts may be, it will be necessary to raise these levees from time to time and to repair them in order to protect the adjoining agricultural lands. But surely the expense can be very much reduced by reducing the volume of the torrent.

You must increase your expenditures just as that torrent increases, and you can diminish them just as that torrent diminishes. Then, when it comes to the dredging of the river, by maintaining an equal and sustained flow over the river during the year you will do away with the necessity of the great expenditure for dredging that river. Why, $7,000,000 have been expended on the Missouri River on work which has been abandoned by this committee, work which would have been unnecessary had we undertaken this great work in the reclamation of this vast area. As to the magnitude of this storage, the committee should bear in mind the fact that we do not propose merely the storage of a teacupful in the mountains and urge that that will diminish the flow of the Mississippi River.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a statement?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have a statement from the Geological Department relative to two streams in the State of Colorado, on one of which 27 reservoirs have been constructed and on the other one 34 have been constructed, and that they consume practically all the water of those two streams.

Mr. NEWLANDS. All the flood water?

Mr. SHAFROTH. All the flood waters. That of course is only one indication in this early stage of the development of this great reclamation scheme.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The gentleman from Colorado speaks of about 50 reservoirs in his own State constructed by private enterprise, the effect of which has been to absorb all the flood waters of those two streams. Now, recollect that in this arid region there are about 70,000,000 acres of land that can be reclaimed. Of that 70,000,000 acres one half, say, 35,000,000 acres, probably lie upon the eastern slope, that slope that furnishes the water of the Missouri and Mississippi rivers. Imagine an annual diversion from the streams over the arid plains of flood waters covering ultimately 35,000,000 acres with water 2 feet deep, and imagine the effect of that in diminishing this extraordinary and torrential flow of the Mississippi River.

Now, this work has been too long postponed. Jefferson Davis, when Secretary of War, fully informed regarding the conditions in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas, and as an army officer and engineer fully informed regarding the great Rocky Mountain region, urged that this reservoir system should be established in the Rocky Mountains, with a view to diminishing the torrential flow of the Mississippi River. That was more than fifty years ago; and yet we have been halting in this great work, which not only means diminishing the flow during the torrential period of the Mississippi, but the equal and sustained flow in that river, for the purposes of navigation and also for the development of a country now arid capable of sustaining millions of people. Is it not about time for us to annex that country to the United States and give it a part of our benificent legislation intended for the equal and harmonious growth of the Republic? [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Cape Fear River, North Carolina, at and below Wilmington: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $150,000, of which amount so much as may be necessary may be used in the construction of mooring dolphins, in accordance with the approved project.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment there.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 49, line 13, after the word "project," insert:
"Provided, That of the amount herein appropriated, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in moving obstructions at the mouth of Brunswick River, in accordance with the estimate in Senate Document No. 130, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session."

Mr. BURTON. That, Mr. Chairman, is to open the mouth of a river near Wilmington by the expenditure of a small amount. It was added as a Senate amendment to the bill last winter. There was no survey authorizing its insertion at that time when the House bill was passed, and in pursuance of the general policy of not inserting that which had not been estimatad for, no provision was made; but now the estimate has been submitted in proper form.

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Chairman, it is very necessary, I will state, and if the House wishes an explanation of it I will offer one. But I do not think there is any necessity after the chairman has made his statement.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BELLAMY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out in line 10, page 49, the words "one hundred and fifty" and insert the words "two hundred;" so as to read "two hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Chairman, the defeat of the last river and harbor bill has entailed on the country a great deal of loss. In the improvements that were progressing on Cape Fear River below Wilmington by the failure to have the appropriation available to carry on these improvements as they had been going on the dredges were tied up and all work ceased, and the consequence has been that, according to the estimate of the engineer as contained in volume 1 of the annual reports of the War Department, the deterioration arising therefrom has been $128,000, consisting of the following items:

Deterioration has occurred as follows:

By shoaling in Alligator Creek, Lilliput, Old Brunswick Cove, Midnight, and Reaves Point shoals, about 600,000 cubic yards; estimated cost of redredging	$80,000.00
Damage by storm, New Inlet dam; estimated cost of restoration	8,000.00
Damage by storm, Swash Defense dam; estimated cost of restoration	30,000.00
Damage by decay, etc., Snows Marsh dike; estimated cost of restoration	30,000.00
Total deterioration	128,000.00
July 1, 1900, balance unexpended	96,279.97
March 22, 1901, received for rent of dredge Cape Fear	7,593.57
	103,873.54
June 30, 1901, amount expended during fiscal year	71,796.07
July 1, 1901, balance unexpended	32,077.47
July 1, 1901, outstanding liabilities	2,221.74
July 1, 1901, balance available	29,855.73
Amount (estimated) required for completion of existing project	885,000.00
Amount that can be profitably expended in fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, for works of improvement and for maintenance, in addition to the balance available July 1, 1901	200,000.00
Submitted in compliance with requirements of sundry civil act of June 4, 1897, and of section 7 of the river and harbor act of 1899.

Now, in the present bill there is appropriated only $150,000 for the entire lower Cape Fear. The amount recommended by the engineer in charge, both the local and the chief engineer in charge of the southern department, Colonel Hains, is $885,000 for the completion of the existing project. Therefore, if you take the $128,000 necessary to repair the damage done by storms last year, it leaves simply $12,000 toward the improvement of $885,000 which has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

Now, I say it is the most nearsighted, unbusiness-like policy that I know of. There these improvements are going on, and only $12,000 becomes available for the improvements of this year, and next session there will be necessarily appropriated $150,000 more to repair the damages that will be caused by this small appropriation failing to be effective. Therefore I ask this body to amend that and make it $200,000, which is the smallest amount that ought to be made available, and then we will only receive for that improvement $200,000 out of the $885,000 recommended. I think it is reasonable; I think it is business sense to give it, and I warn this body at this time of what the consequences will be at the next session if you fail to adopt this amendment.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, this difference in the amount carried in the bill and that recommended was pressed so strongly that I asked the War Department to call to Washington the engineer in charge, Mr. Lucas. I spent the greater part of an evening with him in looking over this project, and at one time I thought it might be necessary to add to this appropriation of $150,000 perhaps ten or twenty thousand dollars to bring it up to compare with the other appropriations in the bill, but after going over it very carefully with the local engineer and considering the project further it did not seem best to raise the amount inserted in the bill.

There is one thing the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY] ought to state, and that is that there is a balance on hand of $20,000 in addition to this amount appropriated. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars is as large an amount for Cape Fear below Wilmington as has been appropriated for some years, and I think we are giving it generous treatment.

In reply to the statement made by the gentleman that this is exceedingly unbusinesslike to make this appropriation, I would ask him to consider carefully the difficulties under which the committee labor. It has been repeatedly stated on this floor that we have estimates aggregating over $300,000,000.

Now, according to his argument, the businesslike way to do would be to bring in a bill appropriating and authorizing $300,000,000. Does the gentleman think for an instant that this House would favorably consider such a bill? Does he think for an instant that the country would sustain Congress in passing a bill carrying three hundred millions, or even one hundred and fifty million dollars?

If he desires us to make larger appropriations I say to him, as I have said to commercial bodies, "Go out into the country and educate public opinion, that force which in this country is as despotic and as absolute as the standing army in Russia; go to the people and demand that these appropriations be larger." The Committee on Rivers and Harbors could have brought in a bill carrying one hundred and fifty millions or two hundred millions, and it would have been beneficial to the country, but the will of the people is not that we should do anything of the kind, and, I take it, such is not the will of Congress.

Now, I want to compare the gentleman's project with that of Brunswick, Ga. Brunswick is a port growing much more rapidly than Wilmington. It has a tonnage greater than Wilmington, and it has a commerce more varied than that of Wilmington. It has not only an outer bar, which must be taken care of, but an inner bar; and yet for both outer bar and inner bar we appropriated, or recommended an appropriation, of $140,000. That, too, when there was no balance on hand. On looking over the subject with the engineer, we found they could take care very well at Wilmington of the improvements they now have.

There is one other point which it seems to me I should state to the committee. Southport, at the mouth of this river, some 25 or 30 miles below Wilmington, has a magnificent harbor. A railroad to that place is already in sight, and while Wilmington will no doubt continue to hold prestige as a commercial point, it is a question whether the future commercial development, so far as navigation is concerned, will not be at Southport rather than Wilmington. Briefly considering all the circumstances, quite as generous provision has been made for this project, possibly more generous provision, as for others in the bill. I trust the Committee of the Whole will promptly vote down the amendment.

Mr. BELLAMY. I infer from the remarks just made by the distinguished chairman of the committee that he is not acquainted with the immediate vicinity of Southport and Wilmington.

Mr. BURTON. I have never been there.

Mr. BELLAMY. It is your misfortune that you have not.

Mr. BURTON. I have many, many misfortunes. [Laughter.]

Mr. BELLAMY. And our people will be delighted to have you come there and acquaint yourself with the needs of the best port south of Norfolk, and they will, I assure you, give you a most cordial and hospitable welcome.

Mr. BURTON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BELLAMY. But I wish to state that of the appropriation that the committee is making in this bill, $128,000, the greater portion goes down to the mouth of the river near Southport, leaving of the $885,000 recommended only $12,000 for this part of the river.

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman is slightly in error. Eight hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars is the amount required for the completion of the work. The local engineer did not recommend the expenditure of the whole of that amount at this time; only $378,000.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Coosa River, Georgia and Alabama, and the Oostenaula and Coosawattee rivers, Georgia, $25,000, of which amount $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended upon the last-named rivers, and the balance upon the channel of the Coosa River between its source and the site of Lock No. 4. From the balance remaining on hand to the credit of the lower portion of said Coosa River between Wetumka and the railroad bridge a further sum of $10,000 shall be expended upon that portion of said river above the said railroad bridge, and the Secretary of War shall cause a survey to be made of the Coosa and Alabama rivers with a view to determining the advisability of securing 6-foot navigation in said rivers, and the probable expense thereof. The said survey shall also contain a report upon the advisability of further prosecuting the present project for locks and dams in the Coosa River, and the expense of such survey or surveys shall be paid from the unexpended balance remaining to the credit of the said lower portion of the Coosa River, between Wetumka and the railroad bridge.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to perfect this paragraph by the introduction of certain verbal amendments, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

One page 51, line 14, change the comma after "four" to a period; same line, change letter "f" in "from" to a capital; line 16, insert after the word "bridge" a comma; line 18, after the word "bridge," change the comma to a period, and change the "a" in the word "and" to a capital; also in line 22, change the period after the word "thereof" to a semicolon, and begin the following word, "the," with a small letter.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out on page 51, lines 8 to 25, inclusive, and lines 1 and 2 on page 52, and substituting therefor:

"Improving Coosa River, Alabama, between Wetumpka and railroad bridge: Continuing improvement, $15,000, which amount, with the balance on hand, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended for the completion of Lock and Dam No. 31.

"Improving Coosa River, Georgia and Alabama: For maintenance and continuing improvement, $75,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete Lock and Dam No. 4 in said river, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $199,845, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated, and the balance on hand, together with any amounts herein appropriated, not reqiured for the completion of said lock and dam, may be used for completing the work at Horse Leg Shoal, and dredging and improving the channel between Rome, Ga., and Lock No. 4."

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in all seriousness and good faith, hoping the Committee of the Whole will adopt it, thereby placing the Coosa River in the same standing in this bill that it had in the bill recommended to this House by the River and Harbor Committee less than two years ago. If Coosa River, Mr. Chairman, was worthy of an appropriation two years ago, I can not see why it is not worthy of this governmental support to-day.

The distinguished chairman of this committee, in presenting his bill to the House, said that the committee had considered all projects presented to them upon their merits, without reference to making the distribution by States; yet when we began to discuss the merits of the Coosa River yesterday he attempted to divert the attention of the House from that question by presenting some statistics which he had gotten from the Census Bureau, collected in 1890. Such statistics are a reflection upon the gentleman offering them, because they show that he has not kept pace with the progress of this country, and especially of the great State of Alabama. It is unfair and unjust to try to prejudice members of this House against the appropriation for the Coosa River by presenting here as an argument against it the assessed value in 1890 of three or four counties lying adjacent to this river.

The gentleman, in further support of his argument against the appropriation for the Coosa River, said that the River and Harbor Committee had dealt generously with Alabama, contradicting the very policy that he had laid down when he presented his report in general to this House. I confess, Mr. Chairman, that the River and Harbor Committee has dealt generously with Alabama, and as an Alabamian I thank the committee for the liberal appropriations they have made to our State. But, according to the policy and principle of this improvement and of this committee as suggested by the chairman, it is no argument to assert that the Coosa River, one of the most deserving streams in all this land, should be cut off, ignored, and especially after the Government has expended $1,200,000 upon its improvement.

The gentleman says he has disregarded the applications in behalf of a great many streams where money has been expended. But his principal argument yesterday against this river was that it was not meritorious because the assessed value of a few adjacent counties in 1890 was only $8,000,000. I have in my hand a report of the engineers made in 1890, in which they say:

There are nine counties in Alabama lying immediately upon the Coosa and cut off from all water communication with the Alabama, to wit: Elmore, Chilton, Coosa, Shelby, Talladega, St. Clair, Calhoun, Etowah, and Cherokee. These counties have a population of over 150,000 souls. They have in cultivation nearly 700,000 acres of land. Their territory covers nearly 1,500,000 acres. The assessed valuation of their property is over $13,000,000.

That is the report incorporated there by the engineers, which I presume is just as correct as the one presented here yesterday from the Census Bureau. Now, Mr. Chairman, in the Manufacturers Record of February, presented by the able chief of the Census Department, among other things, he says that during the past fifty years capital invested in Alabama has increased in round numbers from $3,000,000 to $70,000,000.

The increase in the number of establishments from 1890 to 1900 is 88 per cent, and yet the chairman of this committee, with the power he has by virtue of being in charge of one of the most important committees in this House, undertakes to prejudice the members of this House against the Coosa River by presenting statistics here which are twelve years old and should not be considered an argument against this great enterprise. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the people whom I have the honor to represent in the Fifth district of Alabama——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of my colleague may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague may be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMPSON. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the Coosa River has been unjustly treated by this committee, with all due respect to the distinguished chairman and the members thereof. I do not say, sir, that they have done it intentionally. The chairman of this committee seemed very sensitive yesterday because some of those who believe in the justness of their claims had seen fit to criticise him and his committee for striking us down now after a million and a half dollars of the Government's money has been expended here. He said to me that some of the papers down in Alabama had seen fit to criticise him.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that his public experience might have gotten him accustomed to newspaper criticisms by this time, and I want to say that the people all over my section of the State feel indignant over this treatment, not only those who live in the three or four counties referred to by the distinguished chairman, because that is an unfair estimate, for the Coosa River rises up in the mountains of Georgia, flows down through the mineral district of our State, which, as was stated here yesterday, is one of the richest mineral districts in the world, and it is unfair when the chairman of the committee tries to prejudice the members of this House against this appropriation by presenting statistics giving the valuation of three or four counties amounting to $8,000,000.

It is unfair, Mr. Chairman, and I appeal to the members of this House to reinstate the Coosa River appropriation in this bill. We only ask for $15,000 to finish and complete Lock and Dam 31, and $175,000 to complete the work that is unfinished at Lock and Dam 4, which is liable to be washed away perhaps before this committee can consider its claims again. [Applause.]

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to speak on this proposition?

Mr. BALL of Texas. Yes. I am sure that there is not a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors but that would have been glad indeed to have made a substantial recognition of the Coosa River in this bill. So far as I am personally concerned, certainly the ties of blood and of kindred and the regard that I have for the State of Alabama, as well as for the gentlemen who so well and honorably represent it, would have impelled me to have voted for the appropriation asked; but, Mr. Chairman, while the members of Congress from Alabama interested in this improvement have left no stone unturned, have exhausted every legitimate and honorable effort in pressing the matter upon the Rivers and Harbors Committee, yet in the judgment of that committee, with the single exception of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the committee was unable to comply with their wishes, and its members are compelled, in their judgment, at this time to vote against further recognition for the Coosa River.

Now, I do not think that there is anybody upon the Rivers and Harbors Committee that is prejudiced against the Coosa River. I am sure the chairman of that committee is not, but when gentlemen insist upon attacking the work of the committee they ought not to criticise the chairman or any member of the committee for attempting at least to justify themselves before the House for their action, and show that good reasons exist for failing to make the desired appropriation. Now, so far as the State of Alabama is concerned in this bill, no State in proportion to its population and its commerce has been more liberally recognized. Certainly the State from which I come has not fared any better than the State of Alabama, although our commerce largely exceeds that of that splendid old Commonwealth; and, as I say, no State in the Union in proportion to her population and commerce, so far as I know, has been better cared for in this bill than the State of Alabama. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is probable that if there was no money to be spent on rivers and harbors except that demanded by the Coosa River, that the Rivers and Harbors Committee would have been able to consider the matter of making a larger appropriation there, with due regard to the public interests and to the wishes of all concerned, with greater favor.

But here is a project the completion of which, according to late estimates received from the engineers, amounts to some $8,000,000.

It is one of the most expensive rivers to improve, in proportion to the mileage of commerce to be served, of any that has been presented to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for their consideration. Now, I believe that there is much merit in Coosa River in a great many respects. Certainly they are establishing splendid manufacturing industries in that section, and they have a volume of water sufficient in many respects to support a large commerce, and there is a good commerce in certain sections of that river. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors have not abandoned the Coosa River. We have simply been unable at this time to see our way clear to give it a more liberal recognition than we have, and do not believe at present that the extension and expensive improvements contemplated are justified.

In the selection of the various projects which come before us and are pressed upon us we are compelled to ignore some and to accept others, and in the judgment of the committee, without a single exception save only the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], it was decided that at this time we could not give more substantial recognition of this river, which all of us would be glad to provide for more liberally if we could justify ourselves, having due regard for the proper expenditure of the public money and size of the bill which we are permitted to bring in, in doing so.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, the arguments in favor of this amendment prove to the House a very noticeable fact, namely, that the worse a project is the more steadfast and eloquent is its support. They prove, further, that if any member of this House, whether belonging to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors or not, sees fit to oppose an absolutely unworthy project he must lay himself liable to accusations of prejudice and of trying to mislead the members of this House.

I regard this project as the most objectionable of all those in the whole list of river and harbor improvements for which there have been recommendations made. It proposes, in a stretch of about 142 miles, to build 31 locks and dams. On that there has already been expended about $1,300,000. The balance required to complete it would be something over $6,000,000 according to the estimates made in 1890, and before. Captain Judson, an able young engineer, was in charge of this improvement, and he states frankly that when he first was assigned to duty there he thought favorably of it, but on further examination he was compelled to change his mind, first, because 4-foot navigation would not do any practical good.

Mr. BURNETT. May I ask the gentleman what further examination Captain Judson shows he ever made?

Mr. BURTON. Well, there is oftentimes benefit, as the gentleman himself knows, in reflection; and after Captain Judson had been there some time he not only gave further examination, but, I take it, he gave reflection to it as well, and I trust that some reflection will be given to this project by the gentleman from Alabama. Captain Judson is a young man, and he changed his mind. The gentlemen from Alabama who advocate this improvement are comparatively young men, and I trust they will change their minds. No doubt they are ambitious to add still further to their very considerable stock of knowledge, and I trust when this addition is made they will go through the same process of evolution as Captain Judson.

Mr. BURNETT. I will ask the gentleman if Captain Judson did not change his mind in about three months; if he did not make an official report on the 30th of June, in favor of this project, and on the 24th of October, a little more than three months afterwards, make a report that was absolutely contradictory of the other?

Mr. BURTON. I want to say about that that it does not matter if he changed his mind over night. It is not a question of whether he changed his mind or not. It is a question of the validity of the arguments that he gives, and the arguments that he gives are that 4-foot navigation would do no good whatever; that with 31 locks to go through coming and going there would be an exhaustion of the coal supply and an exhaustion of the profits of the trip; and if you have 6-foot navigation, which you must have in order to do any good, from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000 will be required. It is evident the estimates were too small. Why, there is one lock that I believe was estimated to cost $200,000, and they have already expended nearly $400,000 on it, as I recall, and it is yet in an unfinished condition.

Now, what are the claims of the Coosa River? As my colleague on the committee [Mr. BALL of Texas] has said, the State of Alabama is treated very liberally in this bill. We are providing at large expense for the improvement of the Black Warrior River, and it is not fair to the rest of the country while we are canalizing this latter stream at great expense, possibly costing $6,000,000, to take up another river that in some places is only 25 or 30 miles from the one which we are now improving. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors is like an organization located in a building on a great eminence with windows all around. Suppose some man should come in from Alabama and say, "Shut down that window!" Then some one from Kansas or Arkansas should come and say, "Shut down this other window," and then requests to close down all around until there is but one window left looking out on one project. Some persons regard no improvements as important except their own.

We can not afford to take any such restricted view as that. I wrote a letter to some gentleman down in that locality giving courteously my reasons why the Coosa should not be improved, and the result was he abused me in his newspaper. Now, I would like to know how can a man so permeated with narrowness and selfishness have any conception of our responsibility for all of this country. The Coosa River is not the whole country; the State of Alabama is not the whole country. There are 45 States here which we must provide for. I do not blame gentlemen for being in earnest, but they say I misled this House, in that I gave the statistics of 1890.

I wrote to a Department of this Government and asked for the latest available statistics of the assessed valuation of these counties. I took the report as a correct one and used it; and the committee will recall that what I sought to bring out most prominently was the amount of taxes paid on real estate. I said then and I say now that it is evident in these counties and parts of counties bordering this improvement, which is to cost $4,900,000, the amount that they ask the Government to expend is more than has been paid in fifty years for municipal, State, and county taxation upon their real estate.

I think that that is a little too much to ask of this Government. They tell of the great coal fields on this river. Now, it has navigation of 150 miles or so already, and yet I have looked back for years in the reports and there is not a single ton of coal that was ever shipped on this river during these years. That illustrates what sort of a project can be brought in here, and if we bring in evidence to show how extravagant it is, and how poor the prospect is, if anyone opposes it he must be set down as being prejudiced against the appropriation.

Gentlemen of the committee, I am willing to submit to any accusation, provided I first point out how objectionable such a project as this proposed. The committee, as well as myself, purposes to do business at the old stand, and whenever a scheme like this appears we intend to point it out to this committee, and if you gentlemen desire to take the responsibility of wasting the public moneys you may do it; but we purpose to face our responsibility and perform our duty. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BURNETT. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 67.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Amend by adding as a separate paragraph after line 2, page 52, the following:

"For the completion of Lock and Dam No. 4 in said Coosa River, Georgia and Alabama, the sum of $192,000, and the balance of said sum, if any be left after the completion of said lock and dam, shall be expended in the completion of Horse Leg Shoals, and dredging and improving the channel between Rome, Ga., and Lock No. 4."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr, Chairman, having addressed the committee on this subject a day or two ago, I will extend any further remarks I desire to make in the RECORD, and will yield my time to my colleague [Mr. BOWIE].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Alabama yields his time to his colleague.

[Mr. BOWIE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that this is the proposition that I supposed we were discussing before, and that the arguments I made a little while ago apply equally to this. This proposition is to expend $190,000 for increasing the navigable length of a river now 150 miles long to 162 miles. In the 150 miles already navigated there is a tonnage of 33,000 tons. It is probable there would be an increase by the extension for 12 miles of about 2,500 or 3,000 tons, and for this increase we are asked to expend $192,000.

The gentlemen have seen fit to criticise my figures that I gave yesterday about the assessed valuation. I ask those gentlemen to publish in the RECORD the figures. I wish to be fair to them, but I challenge them to show that the figures I gave for that lower improvement—taking into account that it does not extend up the whole distance between these two counties, Talladega and another, are incorrect.

Mr. BOWIE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. BOWIE. The Chairman gave merely the real estate in the lower counties, and did not include the personal property, but the figures that I gave——

Mr. BURTON. I so stated distinctly to the committee, that I gave real estate, and the figures are real estate and improvements. I did not assume to give the value of the personal property.

Mr. BOWIE. And the value of the personal property nearly doubles that of the real estate.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, certainly; we know that is true of many localities.

Mr. BOWIE. Well, I did not know it was true in every locality.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, it is not double, certainly, in many cases, but we all understand that the personal assessment makes the total very much larger.

Mr. BOWIE. But the figures which I gave with reference to the four counties that border on lock 4, which is near the corner of four counties, show that for the $192,000 which we ask by this amendment under discussion the taxed values of those four counties amount to over $24,000,000, as taken from the Eleventh Census.

Mr. BURTON. I would suggest to the gentleman that his figures are altogether wrong. That would not convey a fair impression. What would be correct would be to give the assessed valuation along the 12 miles to be improved, not along through all these counties that have already navigation for 150 miles. The man who could convince anyone of the accuracy of figuring in that manner would certainly be a genius, and no one could figure against him.

Mr. BOWIE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. BOWIE. Is it not a fact that the people along the whole line of the river would be benefited by increasing the length of the navigable stream?

Mr. BURTON. Very, very slightly.

Mr. BOWIE. I think the gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr. BURTON. Anyone can judge of that proposition, whether extending 150 miles of navigation to 162 miles confers any benefit of a very radical nature on the rest of the 150 miles. I do not think that requires any argument.

Mr. BOWIE. Undoubtedly it does, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, some benefit, but very slight.

Mr. BOWIE. It brings it right down into the Coosa coal fields and into the Coosa Valley, which is as fine a farming section as there is in Alabama, and into the region of two independent railroad systems, the Southern and the Birmingham and Atlantic.

Mr. BURTON. I want to say in response to the statement of the gentleman that the statements made before the committee have always been to the effect that those coal fields were not limited to those 12 miles.

Mr. BOWIE. Not at all.

Mr. BURTON. And that in glowing terms it has been claimed that they were all along on the river.

Mr. BOWIE. That is true.

Mr. BURTON. So that there is not any unusual advantage in opening up those 12 miles. It is not likely that it would add a ton of coal to the coal already shipped down the river. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana offers the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Between lines 2 and 3 on page 52 insert: "For improving the harbor of Habana, Cuba, to be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of War, $2,500,000."

Mr. BURTON. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to having a little pleasantry here, but on that I raise a point of order.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I hope the gentleman will permit me to make a statement as to the relevancy of this amendment here.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon a point of order?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, I have no objection. I trust the gentleman may be heard if he desires to, but of course I reserve all points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well; the Chair so understands it.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered at this point in the bill because it is just before the beginning of the words in it which apply to the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the State of Florida, the nearest point to the island of Cuba. It has been stated, Mr. Chairman, upon many occasions upon this floor that under the provisions of the Platt amendment we had placed certain restrictions over the independence of Cuba and had so restricted her that it was necessary for us to give her some relief.

Section 5 of the Platt amendment, which I believe is pertinent here, reads as follows:

That the government of Cuba will execute, and as far as necessary extend the plans already devised, or other plans to be mutually agreed upon for the sanitation of the cities of the islands, to the end that a recurrence of epidemics and infectious diseases may be prevented, thereby assuring protection to the people and the commerce of Cuba, as well as to the commerce of the southern parts of the United States.

Under the provisions of that section of the Platt amendment, I believe that if we owe anything at all to Cuba we have so impressed upon her the necessity of the improvement of the harbor at Habana that we should undertake it here at this time. There is no point from which we can begin which will afford more relief to the people of Cuba and which will go more directly to those people than the expenditure of this money, which, in addition to the fact that it may improve the harbor, will protect it against the accumulation of filth, and thereby avoid epidemics. Now, as to the power of this House to make an appropriation of this kind, I would say that I believe that holding the island, as we do, under our military power, the Government has the right to do that which may be necessary to protect those people from the standpoint of health, and also to assist the island in her commerce.

I know very well, Mr. Chairman, that this House at the time we passed the resolution declaring war against Spain disclaimed any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over these islands, except for the pacification of the same, etc. But, Mr. Chairman, that was modified, both by the adoption of the treaty and also by the adoption of the Platt amendment on the 2d day of March, 1901, when the act making appropriations for the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, was passed.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this is a proper method to pursue in assisting Cuba. If Cuba is in need of real help, here is the opportunity and here is the place to do it.

We have said also in the adoption of the treaty that as the island upon the evacuation by Spain is to be occupied by the United States, the United States will, so long as such occupation shall last, assume and discharge obligations that may under international law result from the fact of its occupation for the protection of life and property.

Now, sir, we also have said that we would see that a stable government was established in Cuba. At what time can we look for that, Mr. Chairman? We understand that unless we give relief to Cuba in a short time insurrections will take place there and no stable government can exist. Hence the military occupation of the island must continue, at least for some time to come.

This appropriation for the cleaning out of Habana Harbor, excellent work upon which has already been done by our military authorities there, will go a long way toward relieving those people of additional taxation.

It is also required by another section of the Platt amendment that—the said government shall not assume or contract any public debt, to pay the interest upon which and to make reasonable sinking fund provision for the ultimate discharge of which the ordinary revenues of the island, after defraying the current expenses of government, shall be inadequate.

Even if her revenues should not be sufficient to meet her expenditures, she can not issue bonds, as other nations may, under this section of the Platt amendment.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that if there is a time when we can come to the relief of Cuba in the proper way this is the time. The mere sop to the whale, Mr. Chairman, in a reduction of 20 per cent of the duties upon sugar, the benefits of which will go into the pockets of the sugar trust, is no relief for Cuba, and never will be.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a decision on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman to state his point of order.

Mr. BURTON. The point of order was that that amendment is entirely out of place in this bill. It is not germane to the bill, and I may state in addition that there is no estimate for it. We might as well make an appropriation for something in the South Sea Islands.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Oh, no; it is not quite that bad.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not germane to that part of the bill to which it is offered, and also is of opinion that it is not germane to the bill at all, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 52, line 4, change the period after "dollars" to a comma, and add: "of which amount so much as may be necessary may be expended upon the St. Johns River between the said Volusia Bar and Lake Monroe."

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BOUTELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On March 15, 1902:

H. R. 7035. An act for the relief of Charles Hurrle.

On March 18, 1902:

H. R. 4381. An act to authorize the Central Railway of West Virginia to build a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near Morgantown, in the State of West Virginia;

H. R. 10305. An act to amend section 14 of the act approved June 29, 1898, entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a bridge across the Niagara River;"

H. R. 718. An act to correct the military record of James L. Proctor.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the removal of the water hyacinth from the navigable waters of the States of Florida and Louisiana, so far as it is an obstruction to navigation, $50,000: Provided, That the amount herein appropriated and the unexpended balance of amounts heretofore appropriated for this purpose in both of said States may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be used in exterminating or removing such plant by any mechanical, chemical, or other means whatsoever.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would ask if the chairman of the committee would permit this section to be passed and an amendment to be offered later. This is the section providing a fund or appropriation to destroy hyacinths in the Florida rivers.

Mr. BURTON. I am willing to have it passed, so far as I am concerned. The idea is to postpone it, to be considered when the rest of the section relating to appropriations is read.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Yes. I just heard it read. Conditions similar to that prevail in Texas, and I want to consult with members of the committee and ask for an amendment with reference to other rivers.

Mr. BURTON. I can not consent to any amendment increasing this amount. I have not understood that there was any such condition in Texas——

Mr. COOPER of Texas. There is.

Mr. BURTON (continuing). As would make it desirable that that State should be included.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Navigation is largely obstructed, and therefore I would like this passed over.

Mr. BURTON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask that unanimous consent be given that the consideration of this paragraph be postponed until the balance of section 1 is read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the reading of this paragraph may be postponed until the balance of section 1 has been read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving the Black Warrior, the Warrior, and the Tombigbee rivers, Alabama: Continuing improvement with a view to securing a navigable depth of 6 feet in said rivers from Mobile to Mulberry and Locust forks in said Black Warrior River, $574,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary for constructing Locks and Dams 1, 2, and 3 in the Tombigbee and Warrior rivers, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $500,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated: Provided further, That $10,000 of the amounts herein or heretofore appropriated for said project may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended for continuing improvement and for maintenance on said river from Tuscaloosa to Demopolis; and the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the necessary lock sites in Tombigbee River between Demopolis and McGrews Shoals, and of Locks 5 and 6 in the Black Warrior. An unexpended balance of $14,000 remaining from the appropriation heretofore made for the construction of Locks and Dams Nos. 4, 5, and 6 on the Warrior River is hereby transferred to be expended for the improvement of Black Warrior River in the completion of Lock No. 4.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 55, line 3, insert after the word "made" the words "to determine the location."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, as it now reads the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made for the necessary lock sites. The locality of those lock sites has not yet been determined, and by the amendment as suggested it would read "to cause a survey to be made to determine the location of the necessary lock sites." This is a more correct description of what is to be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offerde by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Tombigbee River, Alabama, from the mouth to Demopolis: For maintenance, $20,000: Provided, That $4,000 may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended between Columbus and Walkers Bridge, Mississippi.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I gave notice the first day this bill was taken up that at this point in the bill I would offer the amendment then read by me, and I now offer it and send it to the Clerk's desk and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert between lines 16 and 17, page 55, after the word "Mississippi," in line 16, the following:

"Improving the Tombigbee River from Demopolis, Ala., to Columbus, Miss.: Continuing improvement with a view to securing a navigable depth of 6 feet at low water in said river from Demopolis, Ala., to Columbus, Miss., $100,000; and the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the necessary lock sites in said river between Demopolis, Ala., and Columbus, Miss."

Mr. CANDLER. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I said then, I will repeat now, I offer this amendment in all candor and sincerity. I am in the utmost good faith and greatest earnestness about it. I appeal to this House not to carelessly consider it, but to give it your undivided attention and solemn and serious consideration, because I assure you this is a worthy and deserving project. I know I have been, and am now, persistent about this improvement. I have urged it earnestly upon the committee as a body and upon the individual members thereof in personal interviews, and upon many members of this House, and as I walk through the corridors of this great Capitol building, and when I appear on this floor, the remarks of my fellow-members oftentimes reach my ears as they say, good naturedly, of course, "There goes Tombigbee." [Laughter.]

That is all right, for you could not call me a name that is nearer my heart, and you could not refer to anything in which I feel a greater interest. You can call me "Tombigbee" the remainder of my days if you will adopt this amendment. This is not a new project, but is one in which the noble people of Lowndes, Monroe, Itawamba, and Noxubee counties, Miss.—yea, in fact, one in which my whole State has been greatly interested for years and years. This river was surveyed as early as 1872 by the authority of the Government, and from then until now the interest and desire has been intense to see it opened up to navigation the year round. By the river and harbor act of September 19, 1890, Congress adopted a channel depth of 6 feet at low water, but no provision has been made so far by appropriations to secure that channel. I am asking you now to begin the work to eventually bring about that much-desired result.

It is a beautiful stream from Columbus, yea from Fulton, and even as high up as Walkers bridge to the great Gulf of Mexico. Never blocked with ice, it flows through a country better timbered, richer in agricultural resources and mineral wealth than any other river of its length in this Union. The fall of the river from Columbus to Demopolis is 107.8 feet, and the distance of this part of this river is 156 miles. Deepen it and open it up and the current will keep it open. In its murmerings from its beautiful southern sunlit bosom it appeals to you to prepare it to carry the wealth which is produced along it shores out into the Gulf and on to the nations of the earth. [Applause.]

The tonnage on it in 1895 was 20,152 tons; in 1896, 23,213 tons, and in 1897, 24,857 tons. Last year there were brought into the Bigbee Valley 10,250 carloads of merchandise, and carried directly across this river for reshipment at New Orleans 16,000 carloads of coal. All of these 26,250 carloads of products would have been carried on the silvery and dancing waves of the lovely Tombigbee if you had begun this improvement when the 6-foot channel depth was adopted and pushed it to completion.

There is one stave factory in Columbus which ships 1,000 carloads annually, and there is also there one of the largest and most prosperous cotton factories in the country, the "Tombigbee Cotton Mills," the shipments of which amount to hundreds of carloads each year, and you must know that these mills would patronize the Tombigbee River, from which it takes its name. The Tombigbee parallels the great iron and coal fields for 150 miles, being within 25 miles of the finest deposit of hemitite ore on this continent, and there is produced in the rich and fertile valley of the Tombigbee one-twelfth of the raw cotton of the whole South, and along its banks there is an almost inexhaustible virgin forest of timber of great variety and size, including white oak, pitch pine, black walnut, beech, cypress, cottonwood, hickory, water oak, red oak, and sycamore.

At Demopolis there is nearing completion a $2,000,000 plant for the manufacture of cement from lime rock, which is inexhaustible and extends up to Columbus, right along this river. This plant will ship about 500 barrels per day. The distinguished chairman of this committee said in his speech that a river which could furnish 100,000 tons was entitled to be improved. Give us this improvement and we will furnish the tonnage. Now, in view of this enormous tonnage in sight, as soon as this river is opened up, I must believe you will agree with me that this is a most deserving project.

If you do not come to its relief now I serve notice on you that I intend to be as faithful in the advocacy of the improvement of the Tombigbee as my distinguished friend, Major HEPBURN, of Iowa, is in his opposition to the river and harbor bill, and every time the question of river and harbor improvement comes before this House, so long as I have the honor to remain here, I will make this historic Chamber resound with the virtues of the Tombigbee, until these beautiful walls will have driven into them in letters of living light the word "Tombigbee," so as it will greet you at every turn. [Laughter and applause.]

This river must be improved in the interest of commerce. You have played long enough with this improvement by making small temporary appropriations. Give the people this substantial appropriation, improve this beautiful river, and the people will call you blessed, and this river will sing your praises forever in its murmurings to the Gulf as it bears the increased tonnage and the enlarged commerce and productions, yet untold and unnumbered. This is one of the oldest rivers in all this country. It has been traveling the even tenor of its way since America was discovered, and I do not know how much longer. The maps show that when Columbus first visited America it was then right where it is now. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. THOMPSON. The gentleman has said that this river was the oldest river in this country. Will he tell us how much older it is than the Coosa River in Alabama?

Mr. CANDLER. I said one of the oldest. [Laughter.] You can not get me to say anything against Alabama, because the best, the noblest, and sweetest possession I have on earth is my wife, and I found her in Alabama, and persuaded her to leave that great State and remove to Mississippi, and one of the chief inducements was that she would be nearer the beautiful Tombigbee. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. THOMPSON. How old is your river?

Mr. CANDLER. It has been where it is now ever since America was discovered, and I was just saying that I did not know how much longer.

If you ever intend to begin this improvement, now is the "accepted time." [Laughter and applause.] When it is opened there will be no trouble to navigate it by day and night, for vessels can travel each and every twenty-four hours, for there will be no storms to disturb, no ice to block, and the silvery moon will light up the crystal waves of this river by night and the dazzling sun will lend its transcendent rays by day. They both in their usual and ordinary trips travel the full length of this river, because there is no other place in the universe where their added graces will bring so much in return as along this beautiful river which is possessed of indescribable grandeur. [Great applause.]

Now, I am sure a river where you can secure navigation for every twenty-four hours the year round, and where there is such a certain and unquestioned and unquestionable promise of tonnage, is worthy of your immediate attention and of a substantial appropriation. The chairman of this committee, my friend Mr. BURTON, of Ohio, invited us in his opening speech to point out where the committee had erred, if we could, and said they would join us in correcting the error.

He is a most efficient and competent chairman and a most amiable, obliging, and lovable gentleman, and he and every member of this great Committee on Rivers and Harbors have been, personally, very kind to me, and therefore, at his request, I have courteously and in the kindest spirit, but earnestly and sincerely, pointed out this error in not putting this important appropriation in this bill, and now I beg that he will not oppose this amendment, but join with me and the many others who have promised their support and insert it here on page 55, where it so justly belongs. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. What would be the tonnage of the river if this improvement was made?

Mr. CANDLER. I am glad my distinguished friend and congenial colleague suggests this important question about what the tonnage would be, because I firmly believe I have already conclusively shown that the tonnage is there now, and that much more will be forthcoming as soon as you give us the year-round navigation; but in case I should be mistaken in that and there should be a small deficiency in that respect, I promise you that after I serve my country long and well here in this House, and there is no longer any absolute necessity for my remaining here for the "general welfare" of this Republic and the "perpetuity of the Union," I will retire and go to the prettiest spot in all the world, the country traversed by the Tombigbee, and supplement the tonnage with my ponderous weight, and spend the remainder of my ripe and useful old age in riding peacefully up and down the Tombigbee in the many lovely steamers which will be placed in that inviting field for trade as soon as the river is opened, and I now invite you one and all to join me at intervals as you may retire from the heat and turmoil of active conflict. [Laughter and great applause.]

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the gentleman tell us whether this river reaches Tupelo?

Mr. CANDLER. Tupelo is at a point a little farther up; but I want to call your attention to the fact that if you will improve this river as it goes on up toward Tupelo, by and by we will be in easy reach of that point, which I am sure my good friend and distinguished predecessor, the Hon. John M. Allen, convinced you was the hub of the earth and the center of trade, and which you will remember is the location of that great industry, the Tupelo fish hatchery. [Loud laughter.] So, call me "Tombigbee," if you desire, but vote for this appropriation and receive the thanks of a nation and the smiles and benediction of an approving Heaven. [Applause.] I am indebted to my good friend, Maj. John P. Mayo, of Columbus, Miss., a most excellent gentleman and a veteran of the Spanish-American war, for the following interesting statistics, to which I now invite your careful attention. This will further answer the question of my colleague [Mr. HENRY]:

Statistics of counties adjacent to Tombigbee River.

County.	Cotton grown.	Actual receipts.	Square miles.	Corn (estimated).	Population.
	Bales.			Bushels.
Lowndes, Miss	20,920	$100,000	504	78,450	29,905
Noxubee, Miss	25,025	200,000	1,050	94,840	30,846
Monroe, Miss	26,184	100,000	762	98,235	31,216
Clay, Miss	16,080	50,000	390	60,225	19,563

Pickens, Ala	19,230	235,000	937	67,305	24,402
Total	223,501	2,385,000	11,416	845,545	334,131

Estimating the total crop at 10,000,000 bales, these counties adjacent to the Tombigbee produce one-eighteenth of the total.

The following estimates appear by using the following values: Mules, $65 per head; cows, $10 per head; calves, $5; hay and other crops, 10 per cent of the total value of cotton and corn:

	Number.	Value.
Mules	44,700	$2,915,500
Cows	89,400	894,000
Calves	44,700	233,500
Hay and other crops		2,507,157

Placing the value on farming lands at the low value of $4 per acre, we have in the counties touching the Tombigbee River the enormous value of $28,224,960, to say nothing of municipal properties, factories, etc., in these counties.

The census bulletins show that Mississippi has increased 155.8 per cent in the last half century, and, while almost altogether an agricultural State, the proximity of the Tombigbee Valley to the coal fields make it an ideal manufacturing section, with exhaustless possibilities.

Twelve months in the year the coal fields of Alabama pour an ebon stream across the fair breast of the State of Mississippi to reach the Mississippi River, the great highway of commerce, at Greenville. This vast tonnage, aggregating thousands upon thousands of tons, would at once seek the nearest way to the sea by the Tombigbee and find an outlet through the port of Mobile and go out to the nations of earth through the Gulf of Mexico. [Applause.]

Along this thoroughfare of travel where now there is comparative silence and inactivity there would arise a new existence; church spires, clamorous school bells, and the trumpet sound of factory whistles and bustling commerce would make you happy that you voted for my amendment and made all this possible. I beg you to contemplate this fair land and improve this river and thereby pour into the channels of commerce its slumbering possibilities. The richest lands of the Tombigbee Valley have never been touched, and the river moves as when the red man trod its banks and lies like the sleeping beauty of old, awaiting the magic touch of river improvement and consequent progress, to awaken it to new life. [Applause.]

It is yours, my fellow-members, to realize the splendid dream of Bienville, who, when writing to his king, said of Mississippi: "No monarch ever ruled so rich a land. No people could be happier than when its wealth of soil would be turned to proper account." Reviewing the past we behold, among other wonderful people, the sturdy Hollanders fighting with the boisterous North Sea for land, and beating fierce waves back, step by step, till the lateral line reached far into the ocean's domain.

All this to secure wild stretches of arid sand and soft marsh, while we have at our doors a marvelous area ready for the husbandmen and the factories as soon as the necessary work is done which would surely bring a rich and an immediate return. Mississippi, with outstretched hands, appeals to you, her brave, loyal, and chivalrous men and her cultured, lovely, and precious women will be grateful to you, increased and paying commerce will praise you, bustling, hustling business will laud you, and an approving conscience will make you happy if you vote for my amendment and thereby bring about this great and beneficent improvement in this beautiful stream, the historic and "lovely Tombigbee." [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, the speech of the gentleman from Mississippi has at least secured two things: The Tombigbee from Demopolis, Ala., to Columbus, Miss., is now on the map, and has a permanent place in history as well. Without any tinge of sarcasm, I want to congratulate the gentleman from Mississippi cordially on the speech he has made. It shows his district in Mississippi has a high ideal of the men whom they shall send to Congress; and if this were a social club, I should be glad to consent to the additional appropriation. But this stream was certainly very generously treated by the committee.

There is a balance of $15,000 on hand, and for some reason or other they do not seem to have any way to spend that balance. The total tonnage of this portion of the river it about 5,500 tons, and it does not seem to have grown much recently. It has been less than 10,000 tons for many years, and it is certainly not one of those upon which we can afford an increase. I therefore trust that the House will vote the amendment down.

The question was taken on the amendment; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. CANDLER. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PAYNE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9227) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Shafer.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2418. An act to ratify an agreement with the Indians of the Devils Lake Reservation, in North Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect;

S. 4469. An act extending the time for the completion of a wagon-motor bridge across the Missouri River, at St. Charles, Mo., as provided by an act approved June 3, 1896, and as extended by the act approved January 27, 1900; and

S. 149. An act to provide for holding terms of court in the district of Utah.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Bayou Bartholomew, Boeuf River, Tensas River, and Bayou Macon, and Bayous D'Arbonne and Comey, Louisiana: For maintenance, $15,000.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to correct the spelling. I move to strike out the word "Comey" and insert the word "Corney."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving the mouth of the Sabine and Neches rivers, Texas, to be applied upon the construction of an 8-foot channel across Sabine Lake, not including revetment, in accordance with House Document No. 299, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, $79,000: Provided, That in the discretion of the Secretary of War said channel may be connected with the Port Arthur Canal: Provided further, That, in case such connection is made, boats shall be allowed to pass through the said canal without payment of any tolls.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer two amendments, which I send to the Clerk's desk, and I will ask the Clerk to read the first one.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 57, line 14, after the word "channel," strike out the word "across" and insert in lieu thereof "at or near the west margin of."

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to the report of the Secretary of War, House Document No. 299, which says that the engineer should be authorized—I would like the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors——

Mr. BURTON. Does the gentleman desire to ask me a question?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. No; I want to make an explanation, and to get the benefit of the gentleman's support, if I can. The appropriation in this bill is based on this report, and the report is ambiguous and might be misleading to the officer authorized to execute the law. The gentleman will note that the report provides for a channel of various depths. The bill provides for the excavation of an 8-foot channel across the lake. It was intended by the committee, as I understand, to provide for a channel near the west margin of the lake. The engineer in his report recommends the channel to be excavated near the west margin of the lake; and in mentioning the 8-foot channel he speaks of the channel "across the lake." I want that made certain which is ambiguous, and have the bill provide for a channel at or near the west margin of the lake.

Mr. BURTON. I think, Mr. Chairman, it is better to let the provision remain as it is. The executive document will make it clear; the 8-foot depth serves to relieve any ambiguity. This has been submitted to officers of the War Department, and the Department regards it as the proper phraseology for this place.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I call the gentleman's attention to page 3 of the report of the Secretary of War, in which he says that the channel should follow close to the west shore, say in 2 feet of water, thus excluding the cost of revetment. Now, there is a contradiction to that statement in what he says on page 4 in reference to the 8-foot channel. There he says that the channel should run direct from the pass to the river. So, if the committee intended that it should go on or near the west shore, they ought to so state in specific terms. As it is, the engineer may conclude to dig the channel through the lake, when it was intended that the channel should be dug at or near the margin of the lake.

Mr. BURTON. I can see no reason for the change. If we are authorized to dig there, it is in accordance with the project. I should have been glad if the gentleman had called my attention to this a week or more ago instead of on the floor of the House. I should be unwilling to consent to the amendment after it has been submitted to and approved by officers of the Department.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Well, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment and paragraph be passed until I can confer with the chairman with reference to this matter.

Mr. BURTON. I have no objection to that, though, of course, it is desirable to finish up an item as we go along.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the paragraph just read, and the amendment pending, be passed for the present. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the second amendment be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend on page 57, in line 17, by striking out the words "seventy-nine" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and fifty," so that it shall read "one hundred and fifty thousand dollars."

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am conscious of the fact that, since my amendment provides for an increase of the appropriation, I am likely to meet with disappointment. From the statements which have been made by the distinguished chairman of the committee, it is apparent that there is not an "i" to be dotted nor a "t" to be crossed in this bill without his consent; and the position which he assumes seems to meet with the approval of the House.

The bill that he and his committee have reported meets my approval. I am satisfied that they have labored industriously, honestly, and wisely to get up a bill that would meet the demands and result in benefit to the country. I know they have been sincere and honest in their labors, and I have no criticism to pass upon them, but otherwise, to commend them for their energy, their industry, their integrity, and their honesty; but humanity has never reached that point of perfection where there were not mistakes made, and this committee could make some errors. In reference to the proposition which I submit they have committed an error. I am indebted to them and grateful to them for the sum of money which they propose to appropriate for this particular improvement; yet, Mr. Chairman, with that expenditure of money alone, in view of the contingencies and possibilities that may arise, it will be impossible to obtain the results that they expect.

The conditions in that section of the country are such as exist nowhere else. If I had the ear of this House I know I could get their judgment in my favor. I must first state the physical conditions before this House can understand the demand I make. The Neches River and the Sabine River are two deep, navigable streams, capable of supporting the merchant marine naval ships of the world. They have a depth of 30 feet. They enter into Sabine Lake—a shallow lake—and from thence flow through Sabine Pass, now having a depth of 25 feet, to the Gulf of Mexico, for which an appropriation has been made sufficient to maintain that depth of water for the next two years, with the hope and expectation that abundant appropriations will hereafter be made to perfect and complete the jetties already undertaken by the Government.

Now, the object of this appropriation is to dig an 8-foot channel through Sabine Lake, connecting the deep waters of the Sabine and Neches rivers with the deep water at Sabine Pass. Let me make this statement to the House, that may astonish even the chairman of the committee, who is better informed than anyone else on subjects of this kind, that there is more commerce in tonnage originating within a radius of 100 miles of Beaumont than the commerce that originates on the Gulf coast elsewhere or upon the Atlantic coast up to Baltimore. In the towns of Orange and Beaumont there are mills that manufacture annually 250,000,000 feet of lumber. Within the circumference I have given there are more than 50 sawmills daily manufacturing lumber.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I ask for a few minutes longer—five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want members upon the other side of the House, as well as those upon this side, to understand that there is no humor in this proposition of mine. I am in earnest about it. I say there is more tonnage originating within a radius of 100 miles of the project here proposed than at any place upon the Gulf or Atlantic coast as far north as Baltimore.

Within the past sixteen months a freak of nature, a caprice unparalleled in the world's history, has occurred there, and the yield of a most valuable product has grown to be enormous. I refer, of course, to oil. The oil fields near Beaumont are capable of producing within three months more oil than the whole world produced last year. That oil must seek its foreign market through the channel I have described. The ships that will transport the oil and the lumber produced and manufactured there can not be sent abroad unless you give the depth of water we are asking. There we have the products, we have the commerce; all we ask is a meager appropriation—the bagatelle of $70,000—to give a barge service that will afford some relief to the people and the industries there.

Now, gentlemen, these are merely statements, but a case fully and fairly presented carries with it its own argument. I submit it to you; and I appeal to the chairman of this committee to give, if he can, a single reason for withholding his approval to this appropriation except that he does not want to mar his bill by the addition of any correction or the addition of any sum of money, because if this be granted other appropriations less meritorious might be added. If the gentleman will give me a single reason why this appropriation should not go in, I will withdraw my amendment. I want to add that the proposition contained in the bill provides that this canal may be connected with the Port Arthur Canal, a private enterprise extending halfway from Sabine Pass to the mouths of these two rivers, and that this can only be done with the consent of the Secretary of War and with the consent of the owners of this private canal.

Suppose that this canal company should refuse to permit this connection, then, according to the report of the engineer, there will not be sufficient funds now appropriated to carry this channel anywhere except out into the middle of the lake.

The engineer in his report says that this improvement will cost $150,000, and with this sum expended from the mouths of the two rivers to Sabine Pass it will be immaterial whether or not the Port Arthur Canal Company consents that this connection be made, the commerce and the shipping of that region of country will be benefited and will receive the relief demanded.

Mr. Chairman, I appeal in fairness and honesty, not only to the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, but to members on both sides of this Chamber, to give this small sum, this bagatelle, to afford the relief sought, and if the appropriation be made much will be obtained and much benefit rendered the commercial products and people of this section.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, this is one of those cases where a considerable traffic is in sight. The great oil development in Texas is adding largely to the wealth not only of that portion of the United States, but to that of the whole country; and this location is worthy of very careful consideration. I believe there is none, however, that has been more carefully considered by the committee than this. I want to state in the first instance that this is not the only problem before Congress in that locality. There has been expended for the harbor at Sabine Pass, through which all this traffic must find its outlet to the sea, and without which any improvements to the channel of Sabine Lake would be useless, $3,436,452, an amount larger in proportion to the results than upon any harbor in the United States, for it has developed a traffic per year less than that for a few days in the harbors of New York and Philadelphia.

Not only has this large amount been expended, but because of storms and insufficient construction the improvements made there are out of repair and a very considerable amount will have to be expended to restore those works so as to secure a channel 25 feet in depth. The businesslike course to pursue is, first, to provide for an outlet to the sea, so that whatever is brought down by rail or by this channel can find access to the ocean.

It was perhaps a little under protest that the committee made any appropriation for the channel through this lake; but in view of the very considerable amount of timber along the Sabine and Neches rivers, and the fact that oil may perhaps be carried by boat, though it is doubtful whether it will not be carried by pipe line to the ocean side, in view of those two lines of development, the committee concluded to recommend the expenditure of $75,000 here. The appropriation in the paragraph is $79,000, but $4,000 of the $79,000 is to be used at the mouths of the Sabine and Neches rivers. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this project has received all the recognition by the committee that it deserves, and the amount fixed herein should not be increased.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the worthy chairman of Committee on Rivers and Harbors is frank and fair, yet his statements are misleading. He undertakes to show that this project is not worthy of improvement, and that the amount of shipments through Sabine Pass has cost more per ton than any other port. Now, there can not be tonnage at Sabine Pass until there is an opportunity for tonnage at Sabine Pass. I hold in my hand a letter received yesterday from one of the mill men at Orange, in which he gives me the statement that in the last two months he has lost over $2,000 in demurrage, in the effort to get barges across Sabine Lake to Sabine Pass, at which point he might ship his freight.

The manufacturers of lumber decline to undertake to send their goods that way for the reason that it is too uncertain and expensive. Now, give them the benefit of the barge service that can be obtained if my amendment is adopted, let them have an opportunity to get to Sabine Pass, and the tonnage at that port will exceed the tonnage of any port upon the Gulf of Mexico, because the tonnage will largely be lumber, rice, and oil. Reference has been made to the oil concerns and the pipe lines to Port Arthur and Sabine Pass. Let us not sacrifice the small and poor companies for the interests of the big and rich ones. Within twelve months, or since the development of the first well, over $7,000,000 has been expended in improvements in the Beaumont oil fields; more than 140 miles of casing has been put into wells and pipe lines.

The rich companies have the advantage of the poor companies, who are unable to reach the seaboard. This oil field is within 2 miles of the Neches River, and the poor companies that are unable to build pipe lines and build tanks, if the Congress will pass my amendment, will have an opportunity equal to the rich companies, and then they will have the advantage of the opportunity of the markets of the world, which are to-day denied. To-day there is stored there more than 5,000,000 barrels of oil—stored in tanks in the Beaumont fields.

Now, this appropriation is not sought for Sabine Pass. What we want—and I appeal again to the chairman of this committee—is an opportunity to get to Sabine Pass, and this appeal is for a community that has expended more than $10,000,000 in one year in industrial and manufacturing improvements, and is erecting manufacturing industries upon the banks of those streams that will revolutionize the industrial conditions of this country and may change the geography of the location of the factories of this country by affording cheap fuel for the North, the East, and the West, and by bringing other great manufacturing industries to or near Beaumont, because cheap fuel is the basis of success in all manufacturing and industrial pursuits. The sum asked is a small sum, and this is not for Sabine Pass, but it is for a project worthy of your consideration, and I believe that this House will adopt it if I can get the chairman of the committee to say that he will not object to it.

Mr. Chairman [the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BURTON], with frankness again I say that I invite you to give me a good reason why this appropriation should not be made. If it is dollars and cents, then look to the Treasury. If it is dollars and cents, look to the fairness and liberality of the people of this country who want to pay for it. If you do not consent to the amendment proposed, then give these people an opportunity to help themselves. Let them give what the Government refuses to give. Permit them to appropriate of their own funds and expend it themselves.

Mr. BURTON. Just a word, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman from Texas has asked me to give a valid reason why this should not be raised. I will merely state one. There are at least a hundred other projects in this bill that have equal claims for additional appropriations. Their claims may not have been stated as earnestly or eloquently, but I take it it is the duty of the committee to regard the projects not with reference to the ability with which their claims are presented, but with a view solely and entirely to their merits. I ask for a vote.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COOPER of Texas) there were—ayes 36, noes 64.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I now offer an amendment to insert in this bill, after the words "eight-foot channel," the words "or more."

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state on what line and what page?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. On page 57, line 14.

My object in asking this amendment is this: The bill provides for an appropriation of $79,000 for an 8-foot channel. Should Congress not come to the relief of the commerce and the shipping interests at Orange and Beaumont, I believe the people interested will do so, and I hope the Secretary of War will permit them to supplement the sum appropriated in this bill, and if that is done I do not think they should be limited to an 8-foot channel.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, concededly this amount will not secure 8-foot navigation through the lake, and I can hardly see what reason there is for inserting any such provision as this. Of course the minimum depth is that which determines the navigation, and if there are places where it is only 6 feet there can be no navigation for boats of deeper draft than 6 feet. So there can be no reason for dredging part of it deeper than 8 feet.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. The chairman of the committee [Mr. BURTON] may not have understood the explanation I made. That was to the effect that I expect the citizens of the cities of Beaumont and Orange will supplement the appropriation made by Congress out of their individual purses to get the depth of water there sufficient to give them an opportunity to send their products to foreign markets. Now, if they do that and pay for it out of their own money I do not think they should be limited to an 8-foot channel. What objection can there be to Congress permitting them to dig a deeper channel if they do it themselves?

Mr. BURTON. There is plenty of opportunity for them to work in the Sabine and Neches rivers outside of this. Other improvements will have to be made, and it is almost beyond belief to me that anything should be done there which would require in any part of this lake a greater depth than 8 feet. A through channel could not be secured for any amount in contemplation here.

There is another objection to it, and that is that the project is for a depth of 8 feet, and I do not see what authority we have to vary from the survey and estimates made by the engineer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Texas if it is understood that his previous amendment, proposed to be inserted at this same place, is passed over at this time, or does he desire that disposed of now?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I prefer that it be passed over until I can confer with the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The Clerk read as follows:

Galveston Ship Channel and Buffalo Bayou, Texas: Continuing improvement, $300,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be required to prosecute such improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $700,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated. The amounts herein appropriated and authorized shall be expended upon divisions 1 and 2 in developing in each of said divisions a channel of uniform depth and width between the respective termini thereof.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL] offers an amendment, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 58, line 8, after the words "Divisions A" and before the word "channel," insert the word "similar."

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this is simply a pro forma amendment, to make certain what might otherwise be ambiguous, and to carry out the intention of the committee in making the appropriation.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, whatever opinion anyone may have in regard to this, I understand it to be in the line with the action of the committee, and I have no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Tennessee River: Continuing improvement at Colbert and Bee Tree Shoals by the construction of a lateral canal, continuing improvement, $200,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary for prosecuting the work of constructing said lateral canal, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $400,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment there.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 61, line 24, strike out the words "continuing improvement,"

Mr. BURTON. These words are repeated two lines above.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "river," on page 61, line 22, insert:
"Improvement of mountain section of river, $100,000, according to plans reported to the Fifty-sixth Congress by Major Kingman, of United States Engineer Corps."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, perhaps there is no one in this House——

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman kindly yield to an interruption? I did not quite understand that amendment. What is it?

Mr. MOON. The amendment proposed is on page 61, after the word "river," in line 22——

Mr. BURTON. What is inserted?

Mr. MOON. The proposition is that $100,000 be devoted to the improvement of the mountain section of the river, according to the plans of Major Kingman, of the Corps of Engineers.

Perhaps no one knows better than I do that a river and harbor bill is never reported until it has a sufficient number of votes in its favor to pass it, each and every section of it, under any and all circumstances. Yet there are times when it is proper that a measure of resistance be offered to this bill. I must concede that the river, taken as a whole, has been treated well by the committee. It has received a larger appropriation this time than it has in a great number of years; in fact, the appropriation is greater than the aggregate appropriation has been in a number of years—larger, perhaps, than it ever was. Yet it is felt by the people living on certain portions of the river that they have not been dealt with fairly.

In order that the House may understand fully the question that I desire to present to them, I will state that a day or two since a telegram was received from the Chamber of Commerce of Chattanooga, in which an explanation was asked as to why no more money was appropriated for the mountain section. In reply to that telegram it was stated that the policy of the River and Harbor Committee was to continue the work at one point until entirely completed and then proceed to another, beginning below and going up the river; and it was added that it was this policy for the Tennessee River or nothing. That telegram was signed by myself and gentlemen on the River and Harbor Committee, Mr. BURTON, Mr. REEVES, and Mr. BANKHEAD. In reply to that telegram I have the following, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., March 20, 1903.

Hon. JOHN A. MOON, T. E. BURTON,
WALTER REEVES, AND J. H. BANKHEAD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Chattanooga uses the Tennessee River more than any other city and should not be ignored. Bill as reported and policy outlined in your telegram would give no local relief for twenty years. We respectfully demand an appropriation for the mountain section and the adoption of the project proposed by Major Kingman for its improvement.

NEWELL SANDERS, President,

A. J. GAHAGEN,

TOMLINSON FORT,
A. W. CHAMLISS,
CHAS. A. LYESLEY,
R. S. SHARP,
Committee Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I must concede, because I believe it is the sensible way to proceed, that the committee are wise when they determined in these great improvements to begin with the greatest obstruction at the lower part of the river and proceed upward. As a general policy that is undoubtedly correct. I can not consistently offer any objection to that general policy; but there are exceptions to all general rules, and I am persuaded that this committee in dealing with this particular question have not properly considered the interests of the mountain section.

It is impossible, of course, for me to present to this House in the few minutes I have the necessity for the improvements there. I would not undertake that in a short speech. But it is known to the committee, it is known to the membership of this House, that there is a large commerce between the city of Chattanooga on this river and the main point of obstruction, Colbert and Bee Tree Shoals, and that much work has been done upon the river along that point.

It is necessary that the commerce be preserved, maintained, and increased in the interest of the whole people that live on the banks of this river. The prosperity of three States is involved in the proper consideration of this question. It will take a number of years to complete the removal of the obstructions below. It is clear that there can be no outlet finally to the Mississippi for the commerce above the shoals until the removal of the shoals provided for in this section shall have been completed, yet that intermediate commerce between Chattanooga and Decatur——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the committee to extend my time for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOON. The commerce between Chattanooga and the obstructions at Culbert and Bee Tree shoals ought to be fostered and encouraged. The city of Chattanooga is one of 50,000 inhabitants. It has eight or ten railroads. The freights are very heavy. The main source of competition against the rates charged by railroad companies is this river. The merchants of that city have put a line of boats upon it in order to protect themselves against discrimination in freight rates. The tonnage is heavy. This committee ought to consider the present necessity and the pressing necessities of that situation; and while the rule adopted, while the policy undertaken to be pursued by the committee I concede to be correct as a general proposition, yet this is an exception which I hope the committee will take into consideration.

Having said this much, Mr. Chairman, and realizing that it is impossible for me to discuss this question fully now, and the same having been fully presented heretofore to the committee, and because the House understands the issue, I desire to interrogate the chairman of the Committee of Rivers and Harbors, with his permission.

Mr. BURTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MOON. With the permission of the gentleman from Ohio, I will ask him a few questions. I desire to know, Mr. Chairman, first, if the unexpended balance from the last appropriation is sufficient to keep up the maintenance of the river between Chattanooga and Decatur?

Mr. BURTON. I should be inclined to think so. There is a balance of $8,611.34. That was the amount the 1st of March.

Mr. MOON. I desire to ask the gentleman, inasmuch as I know he feels interested for the present growing commerce in the city of Chattanooga, why it is that some part of the appropriation for the river between Chattanooga and the shoals was not placed in the mountain section and not concentrated in one place.

Mr. BURTON. Because the members of the committee are decidedly opposed to scattering work in that manner. The whole $600,000 being required for Culbert and Bee Tree shoals, that being the next obstruction as you go up the river, it was thought desirable to expend money there first.

Mr. MOON. How much will it take to complete the removal of the obstruction at Culbert and Bee Tree shoals?

Mr. BURTON. Perhaps double the amount appropriated, and it may be more.

Mr. MOON. About $1,500,000?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; perhaps so.

Mr. MOON. Has the committee adopted a policy of improving the river above until you reach the city of Chattanooga, until all obstructions are removed?

Mr. BURTON. We have recommended an appropriation for that which is rather larger than the average appropriation that has been made. We have recommended $50,000 for the Tennessee above Chattanooga——

Mr. MOON. I am not speaking of that. I understand there is $50,000 appropriated for Chattanooga above, and that is sufficient under the present conditions; but after you have completed the Bee Tree Shoals, then do you propose to proceed to the mountain section?

Mr. BURTON. That is a question which future Congresses will have to determine, but this amount of $600,000 was recommended with a view of beginning the work of improving the whole mountain section of the river between Riverton and Chattanooga.

Mr. MOON. I understand from the chairman, then, that it is the policy the committee has adopted to immediately complete the Culbert and Bee Tree shoals, and then at the earliest date pass to Chattanooga and above?

Mr. BURTON. That is a matter upon which we can not outline any policy, because this bill is final as far as it goes.

Mr. MOON. I understand that as far as this Congress goes that is true?

Mr. BURTON. It is based upon the idea that the best manner in which to prosecute the work is by beginning below and working up.

Mr. MOON. Now, getting down to the question I have before the House, I will ask the chairman of the committee if, in his judgment, in order to preserve and foster the commerce now growing larger and to protect the largest city on the Tennessee River against discrimination from freight rates, is it not for the interest of the public that you now grant some sum for improvement between Chattanooga and the Culbert Shoals?

Mr. BURTON. I do not think so.

Mr. MOON. Why is not this an exception, under the peculiar state of facts, to the general rule stated by the chairman?

Mr. BURTON. Because more than 200 miles below Chattanooga you have an insuperable obstacle, and you must remove that obstacle before the river is of any material use to Chattanooga.

Mr. MOON. I understand; but that obstacle is so far down that freights carried from Chattanooga down and to Chattanooga should be cared for and the public protected against discrimination as to freights between Chattanooga and the shoals by proper improvement of this stretch of the river.

Mr. BURTON. What they want is not partial navigation reaching Decatur or some local point, but to get clear out to the mouth of the Tennessee, and in order to do that it is essential that all these obstacles be removed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The question was taken; and the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Improving Cumberland River, Tennessee, above Nashville: For the completion of Lock and Dam No. 1 and for maintenance, $105,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding on page 62, after line 21:

"That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to grant leases or licenses to the owners of land abutting on said river at or near the lock or dam aforesaid, for the use of the water power created by said dam, at such a rate and on such conditions and for such periods of time as may seem to him expedient; and he is also authorized, in his discretion, to issue permits for the construction, maintenance, and operation of inlet and outlet canals and other structures on such plans as he may approve, for the diversion of water aforesaid: Provided, That any lease or license so granted shall be limited to the use of the surplus water not required for navigation, and no structure shall be built and no operations be conducted which shall in any manner injure navigation, interfere with the operations of the Government, or impair the usefulness of any improvement made by the Government for the benefit of navigation, and the right of Congress to alter, amend, or repeal the provisions of this paragraph is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has been drawn by the War Department and submitted to the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I believe it meets with his approval. I venture to say there is no objection to it, and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment proposes to grant the use of water for water power at Nashville. It is an amendment which has not been considered by our committee, but personally I have no objection to it.

Permit me to say that any such privilege as this should be very carefully guarded, so that navigation may not be injured. I think the provision here is carefully guarded, and the sole question is whether such a right should be granted by Congress or not. Upon that question the members of this House are quite as competent to decide as any member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

I take it the gentleman from Tennessee knows best what is desired by his State. So far as the interests of navigation are concerned, I think the amendment is unobjectionable. It provides for proper restrictions under the direction of the Secretary of War, and directs that official to fix the compensation to be paid.

Mr. MOON. I do not rise to offer any serious objection to this amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that unless by unanimous consent debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. MOON. How long a debate has there been on this question?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on an amendment is limited to five minutes in favor and five minutes in opposition.

Mr. MOON. So I understand, but there has been nothing said against this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman rise to speak in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. MOON. What I have to say may be directed against the amendment so far as I may desire to speak in that line. [Laughter.] I do not expect to speak for the amendment, but to submit to the House some reasons why we ought to weigh very carefully the question of adopting the amendment. If the Chair sees fit so to determine, he may count me as against the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is the beginning of the granting of a series of rights or franchises upon navigable streams of the United States that ought to be guarded very carefully. This franchise seems to be an innocent thing; it does not seem to be worth much; but you give to the Secretary of War absolutely the power to give away or sell this privilege. I think the provision ought to be more carefully guarded. There ought to be some provision made for determining, at least, the minimum amount that the Secretary of War shall ask for this privilege. It is probable that the right ought to be first offered to the municipalities that may be concerned. In other words, we ought first to consider the interests of the general public, instead of those of a private corporation, for it is clear that the purpose of this grant is to create electric power to run machinery of factories, etc., in the cities.

I would not have a word to say upon this subject but for one fact that has been recently presented to me, which I think is a very important one to be stated to the House in the consideration of this question. I perhaps would never have thought of raising any question in this matter but for the fact that, as the House will remember, we were discussing a few moments ago the question of building a lock and dam on the Tennessee River below the city of Chattanooga.

I have in my possession a proposition from one of the strongest firms in the United States to turn into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $891,000 in cash, to be expended in the construction of that lock and dam under the direction and control of the Secretary of War, and the only remuneration asked by these people is the identical privilege which by this amendment you propose the Secretary of War shall give away. If this privilege is worth $891,000—substantially $1,000,000—at that place on that river, then if located near the great city of Nashville it is worth perhaps more. This same right or privilege would be worth to its owners, if these financiers of New York be not mistaken, a million and a half dollars.

Is it wise, then, for this House to adopt an amendment no more carefully guarded than this one? I think the wise thing to do would be, not to leave this matter merely in the discretion of the Secretary of War, unguarded, but to make some provision in this bill by which the Secretary of War before granting these privileges shall give the exclusive opportunity to the adjacent municipalities to make a bid upon the proposition, and next (if the cities do not want it) to allow corporations and individuals to compete, and then to submit the proposition to the consideration of Congress before any such rights are sold or given away. The lock and dam are not in my district, but I felt it proper that the House should know what it was doing, if the facts presented are indicative of anything and offered any information worth considering.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not be recognized except by unanimous consent.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then I ask unanimous consent, because this matter is one affecting my own city, and I want to understand it a little more.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be recognized——

Mr. REEVES. For how long?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will indulge me a few moments. I want to find out something about this proposition, as it concerns my people.

Mr. REEVES. If the request be for five minutes, I will not object; otherwise I must. We want to go on with this bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think I can get through in much less time.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the gentleman will proceed for five minutes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I never saw this amendment until about two hours ago, when my colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] called my attention to it. As he introduced it, and stated, I believe, that it was prepared under the direction of the War Department, I would like him to explain the provision to the House. For my part, I have not had a chance to investigate it or to ascertain whether it properly guards the rights of the Government as well as the rights of the people living in the neighborhood of the proposed project. Now, I will ask my colleague whether the amendment has been prepared under the direction and by the authority of the War Department?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I stated that in the beginning, and I repeat it. I called on the chairman of the committee to assist me in the matter, and was referred to the War Department, and the Secretary or War——

Mr. BURTON. I will state it was not drawn by the Secretary of War, but in the Engineer's Office.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Drawn by whom?

Mr. BURTON. It comes from the office of the Chief of Engineers. It was not drawn by or under the direction of the chief personally, but in his office.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Drawn by authority, then, of the War Department?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes; that is right.

Mr. BURTON. I do not know that you could say that exactly, that it was drawn by authority of the War Department. It gave their best form for a bill of this kind to safeguard the rights of the Government.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman will understand that if it is drawn by the War Department or authorized by the War Department it is prima facie evidence that it is properly drawn. That is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, "authorized by the War Department" has a specific meaning in such a case as this. It means that a measure is sent there, considered by them, approved, and transmitted back to Congress here. That is not true of this measure, but so far as the form is concerned I take it to be in just as good shape as it would be if it has gone through that course of reference to the War Department and had been sent back approved.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will ask the gentleman further, is this provision drawn as similar provisions have heretofore been drawn for such purposes?

Mr. BURTON. Quite as strongly in the interest of navigation and, if anything, a little more strongly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You think that the rights of the Government, as well as the rights of the abutting owners, are fully guarded in the first instance?

Mr. BURTON. Of course in a provision of this kind it would be drawn in the first instance to safeguard the rights of the Government.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Of course; that is right.

Mr. BURTON. As regards safeguarding the rights of the Government and the protection of navigation and the protection of works adjacent to the canal and locks, I would say yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, now, just a word. Quite a number of months ago, about a year, I would say, one of my constitnents—I believe he is now a constituent of mine—spoke to me about whether or not such a privilege as this could be had by a grant of Congress, and I stated to him that of course Congress would control the dams and locks, and of course would have the right to control the water and the diversion of it. Since that time, however, I have not seen the gentleman, nor has he conferred with me, nor do I know anything about this further than what you have heard yourselves here to-day, together with the fact that my colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] states to me privately that parties who are interested in this matter come here in my absence last summer and investigated this matter, with the result that they now make this request and ask this privilege from Congress.

Inasmuch as those who better understand what it is—that is, the chairman of the Committee on Harbors and Rivers and my colleague who introduces the amendment and reports it—think that all the rights of the Government, as well as those of the abutting owners, are properly guarded, I shall not make any objection.

Mr. MOON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MOON. Do you think it better to grant this privilege to a private corporation than to give the preference to the city of Nashville to use it if it desires?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will state, as a general proposition, I think the latter entirely right and good policy, but fortunately I think the city of Nashville has her own lighting plant.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just a few moments more, Mr. Chairman. I hope the gentleman will indulge me just a couple of minutes.

Mr. REEVES. It will have to be very brief, because I am going to insist on the rule. I want to be courteous, however.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am very sorry to see my friend so very urgent about the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, there was no objection to my proceeding for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois to object.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. On the contrary, the gentleman did not object, but said that he wanted me to hurry through, and that I will proceed to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois if the Chair was correct in understanding him to object?

Mr. REEVES. My statement was if it is the matter of a minute I will not object; I want to be courteous——

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman asked for two minutes.

Mr. REEVES. Then I object to it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman objects to a matter that involves the rights of my own people.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And I think it is a great wrong and discourteous——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be in order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I know it, but this involves the rights of my own people and I want to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be in order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I know I am out of order. I generally am when I want to make a speech for my own people, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes appear to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division. Up, gentlemen, up, there is no objection to this amendment. The chairman of the committee does not object.

A division being taken, the Chairman announced—ayes 45, noes 6.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. On day before yesterday I had occasion to present an amendment to the bill, looking to the further progress in the work of the improvement of the river that separates Kentucky and West Virginia, the Big Sandy River. I then offered such reasons as occurred to me for this improvement, perhaps in a very imperfect way, but the basis upon which I proceeded was the engineer's report and the former work done on this stream. I thought it was proper that the progress of the work should go forward.

I can not concur with some of the reasons that seem to be urged here in support of the entire work of this committee and in opposition to every amendment, and while I want to be very distinctly understood by the chairman and the members of the committee in saying that I have nothing in view that would in the least go toward any disbelief in their entire sincerity and the propriety of their motives for the general public welfare in this work, yet it does seem to me that there is perhaps some error in the logic of the situation here. At least, I can not understand it.

It has been urged here by the honorable chairman [Mr. BURTON] that there is a certain standard or a certain scale, as you may call it, by which all this matter can be measured in some way. Now, when it is admitted here that there is a vast deposit of coal on this river, the improvement of which would be a benefit to two States and would furnish a great outlet for coal to the Ohio River, I can not conceive how you can make a standard and say, "We will give so much to this locality to start on, and then we will give a small amount to that other locality over yonder, and that is the standard we will go by and nothing else shall prevail." It has been remarked that if that standard should be interfered with, perhaps if you gave an increase of $2,000 here, you would have to raise the whole standard everywhere else in proportion. I think that is an erroneous idea.

I think, also, there is an error in the proposition that you can take the taxable property of certain counties along a river which it is proposed to improve and in that way arrive at the question as to whether the improvement ought to be made or not. The very effect of the improvement may be to increase the value of that property. I say now before this committee that near the foot of the Cumberland Mountains, 100 miles from the mouth of the Big Sandy River, is the town of Pikeville, that has only about 1,000 inhabitants.

If this river should be improved to that town, in my candid judgment there would perhaps be 10,000 inhabitants there within ten years, and the taxable property of Pike County would be increased perhaps three or four fold. That is one reason why the improvement ought to be made. To say that there is not enough taxable property there and urge that as a reason for not making an improvement is, I think, entirely illogical.

Mr. Chairman, I said I would offer this amendment. I intended in good faith to do so; but seeing that there is a standard erected here that will defeat it, while I shall not cease my efforts at all to get this work done, I will not offer the amendment at the present time, hoping that at some future time we may have this development that, in my judgment, will bring a great public benefit to the entire country, and especially to the Ohio Valley, and untold blessings to the people in the section where this improvement would be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows;

Improving Ohio River from its head to its mouth: Continuing improvement, $400,000, of which amount $21,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in the construction of an ice pier at Maysville, Ky.; $41,000 in the improvement of the Falls of the Ohio near Louisville: Provided, That not to exceed $3,000 of this appropriation, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, in removing the deposits of every description which have accumulated at and near the ice piers now standing at various places along said river.

Mr. IRWIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 63, line 14, insert the words "two hundred" before the words "forty-one thousand;" so that it will read: "Two hundred and forty-one thousand dollars in the improvement of the Falls of the Ohio near Louisville."

Mr. IRWIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee to the following extract from the Louisville Courier-Journal of March 17, 1902:

The fight against Mr. IRWIN has as its mainstay the failure of the Congressmen to get a cent for the improvement of the river here.

Local Republicans claim this is unprecedented, and shows the Congressman is absolutely without influence. It is pointed out that this is one of the most important places in the United States for river improvement, and that it will take many hundreds of thousands of dollars to conclude the work already begun. Despite the fact that this work is unfinished—and to discontinue it for a year or two would involve a great loss to the Government—Mr. IRWIN, it is said, was entirely overlooked by the committee.

I wish to say that I appeared before the Rivers and Harbors Committee several times and was accorded an attentive hearing each time.

The chairman of the committee [Mr. BURTON] has been very kind and courteous on all occasions in which I have spoken about the interests of my district. I asked the committee to call for a survey and estimate of cost of heightening and extending the present cross dam at the head of the Falls of the Ohio, so as to afford a 6-foot stage of water for 50 miles above Louisville, Ky. This was granted, and provision for same is in the pending rivers and harbors bill. In company with Captain Seibert, United States engineer, long stationed at Louisville, I asked, on his statement of the necessities at Louisville, that the Rivers and Harbors Committee incorporate an appropriation of at least $200,000, instead of the $41,000, which is in the bill, to be used for continuing the work already begun.

Now, I do not need to ask the distinguished chairman of Rivers and Harbors Committee to state whether or not the failure to secure a greater appropriation for improvement of the Ohio River is chargeable to my lack of zeal or to the fact that I was simply overlooked as not worth considering, as charged in the article above quoted, because Captain Seibert and myself presented fully the claims of the improvements needed at the Falls of the Ohio, but it would be an obligation to me if the chairman [Mr. BURTON] would state fully the reasons controlling the committee in their action as to the appropriations at Louisville, Ky.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in response to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. IRWIN] that he did his full duty, and did it well, in advocating improvements in his locality. Any criticism alleging that he neglected to look after the interests of his district, or that he was without influence, is entirely without foundation.

I want to say that in the making up of this bill the members of the committee have not allowed themselves to be swayed by influence. We have endeavored to consider every item for ourselves, to judge of what should be done, what amount of appropriation should be made, and then to make up our bill; and it was not because some one of influence in the business world, or in the political world, sent word to us that he would like this or that done that any item was inserted in the bill.

So that the criticism made that the gentleman from Kentucky did not have influence is made along radically wrong lines in the first place. I want to say for him that he came with Captain Sibert, and came along stating clearly the claims of his district and setting forth what could be done in that part of the river. I do not see but that he did as much as anybody could have done.

Now, no appropriation was made for a dam at the falls because there was no estimate and report before us upon which we could base action; and if there is any one rule which we ought to observe with the utmost strictness it is to insert no provision in this bill except it is made in pursuance first of a preliminary examination and then of an estimate. In the first instance a preliminary examination is made. If the report is favorable, it is followed by a survey and detailed estimate, giving the cost.

In some very rare instances we have departed from this rule, but it is only in case of unusual exigency or exceptional circumstances. The reason why the gentleman from the Louisville district could not obtain any appropriation for this dam was that those who prior to his term represented the district had brought before Congress no resolution of a preliminary nature such as our rules require. Thus, if there has been any omission it is not his, but that of his predecessors.

I do not wish to reflect upon them; but that is the plain truth of the matter. Now, then, just a word about the reasons why we should not pass this amendment. It will be noticed by reference to this paragraph that $400,000 is the total amount appropriated for the general improvement of the Ohio River from its source to the mouth. Under this amendment we would be diverting of that amount $241,000 for expenditure in one particular place. Certainly the House ought not to consider that proposition. It should be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "Louisville," in line 16, page 63, the following:

"Twenty-five thousand dollars to complete the levee at Shawneetown, Ill."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee I will detain it but for a very few moments. This levee at Shawneetown, Ill., has been constructed by appropriations made by the Federal Government, some by the State government, and by the city of Shawneetown itself. The exact amount appropriated by the Federal Government I can not say at this time. Appropriations have been made, however, by piecemeal and without any estimate as to what the work would cost.

I shall not attempt to conceal from the committee the fact that the Government has been unfriendly to appropriations and works of this kind. While this levee has been and is of substantial benefit to the harbor of Shawneetown, it is of a special benefit to the citizens themselves. I understand that objection is made by the Government and by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to appropriations which are supposed to be for the protection of private property.

In this particular case I desire to call the attention of the committee to this fact, which I think distinguishes the levee at Shawneetown from that of other cases considered similar to it. Shawneetown is one of the oldest towns in the State of Illinois. It was where the Government land office was located for several years. The town was laid out by the Government itself and the lots sold to the people. I think it stands upon a different footing from a place where a town site has been selected by the people themselves. This levee to-day is in an incomplete and unsafe condition. It was partially built in 1898, at the time that Shawneetown was visited by a very destructive flood which produced great loss of life and property, and in which some forty or fifty people were lost.

The people to-day, of course, depend upon that levee in case of great floods, and I think to leave it as it is really places them in a worse condition than if there was no levee there at all, because, as in the case of 1898, if there should be a break in the levee, as there is likely to be, it would certainly prove very destructive to life and property. A careful estimate made by those familiar with the work and its cost shows that it will require $25,000 to widen the base of that levee, to riprap it, and make it complete, in order not only to protect that harbor, the city, and the people there, but to preserve the benefits of the money already expended by the Federal Government, by the State, and city itself.

I appeal to gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber to give this proposition their support. Of course, there is no estimate by the Government to complete the work, for the reason that the appropriations for this work have been made without any survey or estimate and the work completed so far as the appropriation would reach. In a talk with Major Mackenzie I learned that they simply go ahead and expend the money and make the best job they can without making any report as to what further should be done in regard to it. This appropriation, after a hearing before the Senate committee one year ago, was incorporated in the bill by the Senate committee, and if the bill had passed last year this $25,000 would have been diverted from the appropriation for the Missouri River to Shawneetown levee.

It does not increase the total appropriation in the bill, but simply diverts that amount for this levee; and, owing to its present unsafe condition, the amount of money that has been expended on it by the citizens and the State as well as the Government, and as this amount that is asked will make it safe and protect the people, the harbor, and the amount that has already been expended, I trust that this committee will give it their support.

Mr. BURTON. There is a principle involved in this amendment that the House ought to understand. The gentleman moves that $25,000 be appropriated for levees on the Ohio River at Shawneetown. This bill has been very carefully prepared, and there is not, outside of one stretch of river which I will mention, a single appropriation for levees or for bank protection. We regarded the omission of these items as a distinct advance on some prior bills. We have endeavored to exclude, with the utmost care, any appropriation for levees except on the Lower Mississippi.

Now, as regards the lower Mississippi, whatever we may think of the policy of national aid to levee construction there, it is a policy which has been adopted and pursued by the Federal Government for more than twenty years. In some places these levees are constructed on one side of the river, so if corresponding levees are not made on the other side works constructed by the Government would cause very considerable damage because of the unusual overflow that would result on the other side.

True, we have made a general appropriation or recommendation for the Mississippi below Cairo, and a considerable share of the amount will be expended for levees. Very likely if this came to us as an original question the committee would have recommended against it. But it is not an original question. In prior bills Congressmen now and then have been fortunate enough to secure appropriations for levees for the protection of banks along the Upper Mississippi and Ohio and also the Missouri rivers. Such appropriations are always likely to be wasted, and I know of none in which there is quite so great a danger of a steal.

If you trace the history of them, as a general thing the money has been expended for shoreing up some railroad pier, or protecting the banks where some railroad has its roadway, or helping somebody who has no valid claim, on the principle that "To him that hath shall be given." We desire by one radical step to cut all that out, and wherever in this bill there is any provision for riprapping, or anything of that kind, there is coupled with it a provision to the effect that the money shall be expended if "it is necessary for navigation," or "so far as it is necessary to relieve navigation," or something of that kind.

Now, should this item go in, in plain justice the bill ought to be recommitted to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and we ought to put in two or three millions which we have considered very carefully and omitted.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if there is any apprehension on the part of the committee, or on the part of the gentleman, that because there might be a special appropriation for the Ohio River at this point, there would have to be inaugurated a general system of levees along the stream? Does the gentleman have any such idea as that?

Mr. BURTON. I do if you do justice. I do not if you intend to show partiality or select one location and favor it to the expense of all the rest.

Mr. WHITE. Does the gentleman think the Ohio River stands on the same footing, requiring levees to protect a large and extensive territory, like the Mississippi, so that if you made a special appropriation for some one point on the Ohio, it would involve a general erection of levees along the banks of the stream?

Mr. BURTON. There is no difference in principle between a levee costing $25,000 and one costing $5,000,000.

Mr. WHITE. Then, if there were special reasons why a levee should be erected to protect a city from damage, or anything of that kind, it could not be done because of the apprehension that it might inaugurate a system of levees?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, the precedent that it would make is not all. It should not be done because it is not right to do it.

Mr. WHITE. Then the gentleman thinks it is dependent upon precedent and not upon the circumstances of each particular case?

Mr. BURTON. It depends upon breaking down a very bad precedent that we are very anxious to break down.

Mr. WHITE. Can not we have exceptions to the general rule of the committee?

Mr. BURTON. Not without the committee pointing them out to the House and asking them not to show a partiality which the committee does not think it best to show.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Just one moment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I just want a moment to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the objection which the chairman of the committee makes to this appropriation is not upon the merits of this particular case, but upon the general principle of appropriation for levees. I think I have said that there are special reasons why this should be made an exception, since the work has been entered upon and is incomplete.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There is no exception in this case; there are other localities whose claims are quite as strong, if not stronger. There are cases where the damage would be many times as great and where the claims are equally as great. I want to say another thing about the Lower Mississippi. However objectionable the construction of levees there may be, the abutting communities and landowners have paid more than one-half of the expense of constructing those levees. This is a proposition that the United States shall do it and pay the expense out of the Federal Treasury without any assistance from the parties who are to receive the benefit by this protection of their private property.

In this connection I may use again an illustration which I stated here, I think, a year ago. Ever since I was admitted to the bar I have, as trustee, had charge of a valuable tract of land embracing 40 acres. It is upon a navigable stream, and the current washes away the banks from time to time. Sometimes 2 or 3 acres are washed away, and sometimes a couple are added to this tract. Now, I will not say that I would like to have the United States pay the expense of riprapping to protect against erosion by that stream, because I do not think it would be right; but it would be just as proper for me to come to Congress and ask it as to ask the adoption of the proposition now before us.

The only thing for us to do, gentlemen of the committee, and I trust it will be done in no uncertain manner, is to vote that we do not expect in the future to allow railroad companies or anybody else to come here and influence Congress to protect banks or piers that should be protected by themselves. I do not say that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is in any such interest, but he will find——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. The gentleman will allow me to say that it is not.

Mr. BURTON. I presume it is not; but I want to say to the gentleman that those who will benefit by such a policy as this contemplates will be those who are strong in their influence, who can make some special showing. In the past funds appropriated in this way have gone very largely for the benefit of railway and other corporations, where certainly they should not have gone.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected, there being—ayes 39, noes 62.

The Clerk read as follows;

Improving Ohio River: Continuing construction of Locks and Dams Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, $275,000, of which amount $175,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in completing Lock and Dam No. 6: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be required to prosecute the construction of Locks and Dams Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5 for an amount not to exceed $300,000, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

Mr. BURTON. I offer an amendment to the paragraph just read.

The Clerk read as fallows:

After the word "appropriated," in line 4, page 65, insert:

"An examination at and below Pool No. 1 in said river shall be made with a view to securing increased depth and additional harbor facilities for the city of Pittsburg; and the estimate of the cost thereof shall be submitted."

Mr. BURTON. The object of this amendment is to give this survey the preference which will belong to it by reason of being inserted in the body of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Muskingum River, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $10,300.

Mr. BURTON. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration the river and harbor appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. TELLER. I present a resolution of the senate of Colorado, praying that the good offices of the Government of the United States be tendered in the settlement of the dispute between Great Britain and the Boers. I ask that the resolution may be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Senate resolution No. 13. By Senator Rush.

Whereas the tradition of our nation and the sentiments of our people from the inception of our Government have been most ardently in favor of any and all peoples struggling for liberty, as evidenced by our active sympathy earnestly expressed in the cases of Poland, Hungary, Greece, and the South American Republics; and

Whereas the present efforts of the South African Republics for the right of self-government enlist the sympathy of the entire world for their heroism and self-sacrifice and form a noble counterpart to our own endeavors of a century and a quarter ago and for the same glorious object; and

Whereas the policy adopted with reference to Boer women and children, whereby the latter are being practically exterminated, is so pitiable that their condition appeals to the humanity of the world at large and constrains us to solemnly protest in the name of Colorado against such policy, which can be but an abiding sorrow amongst all civilized peoples for generations to come; and

Whereas the history of Great Britain has in many ways been glorious and beneficial in its influence on mankind because of the justice, humanity, and mercy practiced by the English people on many notable occasions, yet these recent examples of oppression and cruelty must inevitably detract from this noble heritage, lessen her influence among the nations of the earth, and necessarily alienate from her those peoples who have been and still desire to be her friends: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate of the State of Colorado, In view of the deplorable situation and in the name of that justice, humanity, and mercy of which England has furnished the world so many notable examples, and in the name of millions of God's people who prize their liberty, we hereby appeal to the President and the Congress of the United States to make dignified and earnest protest against the further continuance of these pitiable conditions, to the end that liberty may not be taken from a free people nor a single republic perish or be destroyed, and to tender the good offices of this Government to secure this desired result; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, duly signed by the governor and attested by the secretary of state, be forwarded to the President of the United States and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

D. C. COATES,
President of the Senate.
JAMES B. ORMAN,
Governor of the State of Colorado.

LIMITATION OF "CONSPIRACY."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Presiding Officer has received a memorial from Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, protesting against the last bill, the Chair supposes it is called the conspiracy bill or the injunction bill, presented by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and as that measure has been reported to the Senate, he asks that the memorial and the letter of the attorney of the Federation may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. I think that would introduce a very awkward practice. We very frequently deny like requests to print memorials and especially to print arguments in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then he asks that it may be printed as a document.

Mr. HOAR. I would suggest that it be referred to the Judiciary Committee. The memorialists may be quite sure that the Judiciary Committee will consider with the highest respect the desire of a gentleman representing so important an association in this country and that undoubtedly they will find some way to do in substance what he desires, which is to give the Senate an opportunity to see it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is there any objection to printing it as a document?

Mr. HOAR. I do not know.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should really like to see it printed as a document.

Mr. HOAR. I have no doubt that will be the report; but it seems to me that if we permit any citizen, however highly respected, to have communications printed, either as a document or in the RECORD, we can not deny it to every other citizen. Therefore there should be in all such cases a request from a Senator. Now, my suggestion was that the memorial be referred to the Judiciary Committee, and I made the statement that it would undoubtedly be treated with the greatest respect. I suppose the committee would report in favor of granting the request, but if the Senator from Oregon knows enough of the general matter to make the request that it be printed as a document, I think that entirely comes within a reasonable rule of proceeding.

Mr. MITCHELL. I quite agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that the request should come from a different source in order to have it printed either as a document or in the RECORD. In this case the request is that it be printed in the RECORD. I ask that it be printed as a document.

Mr. HOAR. That is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the memorial and the accompanying letter be printed as a document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say that I interposed, not with the least purpose of disrespect to Mr. Gompers, but to preserve an orderly and regular proceeding in the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate passed a bill (S. 4366) granting a pension to John Y. Corey. It went to the House of Representatives, but that body passed a separate bill granting a pension to the same soldier, but at a different rate. I now report back the bill (H. R. 10404) granting a pension to John Y. Corey, with an amendment, and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read to the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twelve" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Y. Corey, late of Company B, Eighth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 4366) granting a pension to John Y. Corey.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no amendment pending now.

Mr. ALDRICH. If there is no Senator ready to speak upon the pending bill I should be glad to call up the war-revenue repeal bill and have it read. If we dispose of both measures to-day the Senate could readily adjourn over until Monday. However, I do not want to interfere with the discussion of this bill.

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection at all, if no one is ready to speak, to laying the bill aside temporarily for a while in order that the Senator from Rhode Island may call up the bill which he has in charge. Of course, if any Senator is ready to speak on the bill before the Senate, I shall want to have it proceeded with.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am quite willing to have it understood that as soon as anyone desires to proceed with the discussion of the bill for the protection of the President it shall be taken up.

Mr. PATTERSON. How long will the reading of the revenue repeal bill occupy?

Mr. ALDRICH. Very few minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10530) to repeal war-revenue taxation, and for other purposes. If there be no objection——

Mr. HOAR. The pending bill is laid aside informally, not displaced?

Mr. ALDRICH. Informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Massachusetts can move to take it up at any moment he pleases in the morning hour, and it would come up as unfinished business afterwards.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the bill has been taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been.

Mr. HOAR. So it will not require a new vote. The Senator from Rhode Island asked that it might be laid aside informally with the statement that at any time if any Senator desired to proceed he would consent. I want to have it stand in that way, if the Chair has no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be temporarily laid aside and the revenue-repeal bill taken up by the Senate.

REPEAL OF WAR-REVENUE TAXATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10530) to repeal war-revenue taxation, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the committee amendments be considered and acted upon as the reading proceeds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee shall first receive the consideration of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 1, page 2, line 2, after the word "tax," to strike out the words "of one dollar and sixty cents;" in line 3, after "imposed," to strike out "thereon" and insert "by law," and in line 6, after the word "barrel," to insert "as authorized and defined by section 3339 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;" so as to read:

That there shall be paid on all beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquor, brewed or manufactured and sold, or stored in warehouse, or removed for consumption or sale within the United States, by whatever name such liquors may be called, in lieu of the tax now imposed by law, a tax of $1 for every barrel containing not more than 31 gallons; and at a like rate for any other quantity or for any fractional part of a barrel, as authorized and defined by section 3339 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 22, after the word "law," to strike out "of 12 cents per pound;" so as to read:

That upon tobacco and snuff manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or use, there shall be levied and collected, in lieu of the tax now imposed by law, the following taxes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 4, line 3, after the word "tobacco," to insert "and snuff;" so as to read:

That in addition to the packages of smoking tobacco and snuff now authorized by law there shall be packages of 1½ ounces, 2 ounces, 2½ ounces, 3 ounces, 3½ ounces, and 4 ounces; and there may be a package containing 1 ounce of smoking tobacco.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 4, to strike out all after line 7 to the end of the section in the following words:

And provided further, That on all original and unbroken factory packages of smoking and manufactured tobacco and snuff held by manufacturers or dealers at the time such reduction of tax shall go into effect, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a drawback or rebate of the full amount of such reduction of tax, but the same shall not apply in any case where the claim has not been presented within sixty days following the date of the reduction; and no claim shall be allowed or drawback paid for a less amount than $10. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this section into effect.

And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized to employ ten agents, to be known and designated as internal-revenue agents, in addition to the number now authorized in section 3152 of the Revised Statutes as amended, and the existing provisions of law in all other respects shall apply to the duties, compensation, and expenses of such agents.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 4. That on all original and unbroken factory packages of smoking and manufactured tobacco and snuff held by manufacturers or dealers on July 1, 1902, upon which there has been paid a higher tax than that provided for in the preceding section of this act, there shall be allowed a drawback or rebate equal to the full amount of the difference between such higher tax and the tax imposed by this act, after making the proper allowance for discounts and rebates heretofore authorized, but the same shall not apply in any case where the claim has not been presented within sixty days after July 1, 1902; and no claim shall be allowed or drawback paid for a less amount than $10. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations and to precribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this section into effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6 (7), page 6, line 14, after "That," to insert "section 4 of said act of March 2, 1901, and," and in line 21, after the word "repealed," to insert "except paragraph 3 of Schedule A of said act of March 2, 1901;" so as to make the the section read:

SEC. 6 (7). That section 4 of said act of March 2, 1901, and sections 6, 12, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, Schedule A, Schedule B, section 27, 28, and 29 of the act of June 13, 1898, and all amendments of said sections and schedules be, and the same are hereby, repealed, except paragraph 3 of Schedule A of said act of March 2, 1901.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 7, in the following words:

SEC. 7. That section 30 of said act of June 13, 1898, and amendments thereof, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 30. That the tax or duty imposed by section 29 of the act of June 13, 1898, above referred to, shall be due and payable in one year after the death of the testator and shall be a lien and charge upon the property of every person who may die before this act shall take effect for twenty years or until the same shall within that period be fully paid to and discharged by the United States; and every executor, administrator, or trustee having in charge or trust any legacy or distributive share, as aforesaid, shall give notice thereof in writing to the collector or deputy collector of the district where the deceased grantor or bargainer last resided within thirty days after he shall have taken charge of such trust, and every executor, administrator, or trustee, before payment and distribution to the legatees, or any parties entitled to beneficial interest therein, shall pay to the collector or deputy collector of the district of which the deceased person was a resident, or in which the property was located in case of nonresidents, the amount of the duty or tax assessed upon such legacy or distributive share, and shall also make and render to the said collector or deputy collector a schedule, list, or statement, in duplicate, of the amount of such legacy or distributive share, together with the amount of duty which has accrued, verified by his oath or affirmation, to be administered and certified thereon by some magistrate or officer having lawful power to administer such oaths, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which schedule, list, or statement shall contain the names of each and every person entitled to any beneficial interest therein, together with the clear value of such interest, the duplicate of which schedule, list, or statement shall be by him immediately delivered, and the tax thereon paid to such collector; and upon such payment and delivery of such schedule, list, or statement said collector or deputy collector shall grant to such person paying such duty or tax a receipt or receipts for the same in duplicate, which shall be prepared as hereinafter provided.

"Such receipt or receipts, duly signed and delivered by such collector or deputy collector, shall be sufficient evidence to entitle such executor, administrator, or trustee to be credited and allowed such payment by every tribunal which, by the laws of any State or Territory, is, or may be, empowered to decide upon and settle the accounts of executors and administrators. And in case such executor, administrator, or trustee shall refuse or neglect to pay the aforesaid duty or tax to the collector or deputy collector, as aforesaid, within the time hereinbefore provided, or shall neglect or refuse to deliver to said collector or deputy collector the duplicate of the schedule, list, or statement of such legacies, property, or personal estate, under oath, as aforesaid, or shall neglect or refuse to deliver the schedule, list, or statement of such legacies, property, or personal estate, under oath, as aforesaid, or shall deliver to said collector or deputy collector a false schedule or statement of such legacies, property, or personal estate, or give the names or relationship of the persons entitled to beneficial interests therein untruly, or shall not truly and correctly set forth and state therein the clear value of such beneficial interests, or where no administration upon such property or personal estate shall have been granted or allowed under existing laws, the collector or deputy collector shall make out such lists and valuation as in other cases of neglect or refusal, and shall assess the duty thereon; and the collector shall commence appropriate proceedings before any court of the United States, in the name of the United States, against such person or persons as may have the actual or constructive custody or possession of such property or personal estate, or any part thereof, and shall subject such property or personal estate, or any portion of the same, to be sold upon the judgment or decree of such court, and from the proceeds of such sale the amount of such tax or duty, together with all costs and expenses of every description to be allowed by such court, shall be first paid, and the balance, if any, deposited according to the order of such court, to be paid under its direction to such person or persons as shall establish title to the same.

"The deed or deeds, or any proper conveyance of such property or personal estate, or any portion thereof, so sold under such judgment or decree, executed by the officer lawfully charged with carrying the same into effect, shall vest in the purchaser thereof all the title of the delinquent to the property or personal estate sold under and by virtue of such judgment or decree, and shall release every other portion of such property or personal estate from the lien or charge thereon created by this act. And every person or persons who shall have in his possession, charge, or custody any record, file, or paper containing, or supposed to contain, any information concerning such property or personal estate, as aforesaid, passing from any person who may die, as aforesaid, shall exhibit the same at the request of the collector or deputy collector of the district, and to any law officer of the United States in the performance of his duty under this act, his deputy or agent, who may desire to examine the same. And if any such person, having in his possession, charge, or custody any such records, files, or papers, shall refuse or neglect to exhibit the same on request, as aforesaid, he shall forfeit and pay the sum of $500: Provided, That in all legal controversies where such deed or title shall be the subject of judicial investigation the recital in such deed shall be prima facie evidence of its truth, and that the requirements of the law had been complied with by the officers of the Government: And provided further, That in case of willful neglect, refusal, or false statement by such executor, administrator, or trustee, as aforesaid, he shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $1,000, to be recovered with costs of suit. Any tax paid under the provisions of sections 29 and 30 shall be deducted from the particular legacy or distributive share on account of which the same is charged."

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 8. That all taxes or duties imposed by section 29 of the act of June 13, 1898, and amendments thereof, prior to the taking effect of this act, shall be subject, as to lien, charge, collection, and otherwise, to the provisions of section 30 of said act of June 13, 1898, and amendments thereof, which are hereby continued in force, as follows:

"SEC. 30. That the tax or duty aforesaid shall be due and payable in one year after the death of the testator and shall be a lien and charge upon the property of every person who may die as aforesaid for twenty years, or until the same shall, within that period, be fully paid to and discharged by the United States; and every executor, administrator, or trustee having in charge or trust any legacy or distributive share, as aforesaid, shall give notice thereof, in writing, to the collector or deputy collector of the district where the deceased grantor or bargainer last resided within thirty days after he shall have taken charge of such trust, and every executor, administrator, or trustee, before payment and distribution to the legatees, or any parties entitled to beneficial interest therein, shall pay to the collector or deputy collector of the district of which the deceased person was a resident, or in which the property was located in case of nonresidents, the amount of the duty or tax assessed upon such legacy or distributive share, and shall also make and render to the said collector or deputy collector a schedule, list, or statement, in duplicate, of the amount of such legacy or distributive share, together with the amount of duty which has accrued, or shall accrue, thereon, verified by his oath or affirmation, to be administered and certified thereon by some magistrate or officer having lawful power to administer such oaths, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which schedule, list, or statement shall contain the names of each and every person entitled to any beneficial interest therein, together with the clear value of such interest, the duplicate of which schedule, list, or statement shall be by him immediately delivered, and the tax thereon paid to such collector; and upon such payment and delivery of such schedule, list, or statement said collector or deputy collector shall grant to such person paying such duty or tax a receipt or receipts for the same in duplicate, which shall be prepared as hereinafter provided.

And in case such executor, administrator, or trustee shall refuse or neglect to pay the aforesaid duty or tax to the collector or deputy collector, as aforesaid, within the time hereinbefore provided, or shall neglect or refuse to deliver to said collector or deputy collector the duplicate of the schedule, list, or statement of such legacies, property, or personal estate, under oath, as aforesaid, or shall neglect or refuse to deliver the schedule, list, or statement of such legacies, property, or personal estate, under oath, as aforesaid, or shall deliver to said collector or deputy collector a false schedule or statement of such legacies, property, or personal estate, or give the names and relationship of the persons entitled to beneficial interests therein untruly, or shall not truly and correctly set forth and state therein the clear value of such beneficial interest, or where no administration upon such property or personal estate shall have been granted or allowed under existing laws, the collector or deputy collector shall make out such lists and valuation as in other cases of neglect or refusal, and shall assess the duty thereon; and the collector shall commence appropriate proceedings before any court of the United States, in the name of the United States, against such person or persons as may have the actual or constructive custody or possession of such property or personal estate, or any part thereof, and shall subject such property or personal estate, or any portion of the same, to be sold upon the judgment or decree of such court, and from the proceeds of such sale the amount of such tax or duty, together with all costs and expenses of every description to be allowed by such court, shall be first paid, and the balance, if any, deposited according to the order of such court, to be paid under its direction to such person or persons as shall establish title to the same.

And if any such person, having in his possession, charge, or custody any such records, files, or papers, shall refuse or neglect to exhibit the same on request, as aforesaid, he shall forfeit and pay the sum of $500: Provided, That in all legal controversies where such deed or title shall be the subject of judicial investigation, the recital in said deed shall be prima facie evidence of its truth, and that the requirements of the law had been complied with by the officers of the Government: And provided further, That in case of willful neglect, refusal, or false statement by such executor, administrator, or trustee, as aforesaid, he shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $1,000, to be recovered with costs of suit. Any tax paid under the provisions of sections 29 and 30 shall be deducted from the particular legacy or distributive share on account of which the same is charged."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10 (11), page 16, line 19, after the words "provided for," to insert "in the preceding section;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10 (11). That this act, except as otherwise specially provided for in the preceding section, shall take effect July 1, 1902.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add the following as an additional section to the bill:

SEC. 12. That the repeal of existing laws or modifications thereof embraced in this act shall not affect any act done, or any right accruing or accrued, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced in any civil cause before the said repeal or modifications; but all rights and liabilities under said laws shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if said repeal or modifications had not been made. Any offenses committed and all penalties or forfeitures or liabilities incurred prior to the passage of this act under any statute embraced in or changed, modified, or repealed by this act may be prosecuted or punished in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I had desired to move an amendment to this bill, but I doubt whether I ought to do it unless it have the approbation of the committee. I will state, therefore, what I had in mind, and ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether, in his judgment, such an amendment would be in place here.

It is very well known, Mr. President, that the law for raising the revenue for war purposes imposed a tax on legacies or devises to charitable institutions, including institutions of education, libraries, and similar institutions. The effect of that was that if anybody desired to give a sum of money to lighten the burdens of Government by accomplishing so far from private sources what the Government must do if individuals did not, he could only do it at the cost of paying 10 per cent for other Government purposes.

In other words, the law as enacted taxed any individual if he wished to give his estate to the public. That, I think, struck the country as very unreasonable and unjust, and it was repealed by the law of last winter so far that it was enacted that the tax should not be imposed in future, and also that any tax which had been assessed but not paid should not be collected.

The effect of that was to leave in the Treasury moneys that had been paid by persons who had been diligent and prompt in obeying the law as it then stood by paying devises or legacies to institutions of learning and put a reward upon a delay. I was entirely in favor of that provision; it was absolutely right as far as it went; but it seemed to me then and seems to me now that we ought to refund to the institutions concerned—of course it all goes to public objects—the taxes that have been so promptly paid.

I desire to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if in his opinion such an amendment would find an appropriate place in this bill. Of course I do not undertake to commit the chairman or his committee in regard to the policy one way or the other, but I simply wish to learn whether it would be in accordance with his desire to have that amendment proposed now. I shall not propose it if the committee think it out of place here.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, without entering upon a discussion of the question as to what should be done in the case the Senator from Massachusetts has cited, it seems to me that it must be apparent to all the Senate that such an amendment would be manifestly out of place upon this bill. This is simply a bill for the repeal of war-revenue taxation, and it contains no other provisions of any kind. So I feel bound by the unanimous expression of the committee to resist all amendments of every nature.

Mr. HOAR. Under those circumstances, Mr. President, of course I shall not propose the amendment now.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I should like to be heard upon the bill providing for the protection of the President, unless it is the intention to pass the pending bill now. I have no desire to interfere with the Senator from Rhode Island, if such is the intention.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senator from Colorado to allow this bill to proceed to the stage of final passage, and then I promised the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who wants to be heard upon a certain feature of the bill, that he should have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question. As I understand it, this bill repeals all war-revenue taxes imposed by the law passed in 1898.

Mr. ALDRICH. All of them.

Mr. CLAY. Except as to bucket shops?

Mr. ALDRICH. That tax was imposed in 1901.

Mr. CLAY. I think the Senator from Rhode Island is correct as to that.

Mr. ALDRICH. It repeals absolutely all the war-revenue taxes imposed in 1898. It retains only the tax upon bucket shops, which was imposed in 1901.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. BACON. I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Rhode Island. I have not had time to read the bill; it is quite a long one; and I wish to ask whether there is any particular provision in the bill as to the time the repeal of these taxes is to take effect?

Mr. ALDRICH. The act is to take effect upon the 1st of July, 1902, as to everything except the repeal of the duty on tea. The repeal as to that takes effect on the 1st of January, 1903.

Mr. BACON. That is the only exception?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the only exception. As to the repeal of all the other taxes, the act takes effect on the 1st of July next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. ELKINS. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island if this bill has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Finance?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a unanimous report of that committee.

I ask now that the vote upon the final passage of the bill be deferred until after the vote upon the anarchy bill, so called, so as to enable the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to make some remarks on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, owing to the peculiar nature of the bill under consideration and the interest the people generally take in it, I think that if the bill as it shall finally be put to a vote does not meet the views of Senators so that they may vote for it, every Senator so circumstanced should state as clearly as he can the objections he has to it, which prevent him from giving the bill his support.

With the main objects of the bill I am in entire accord. I want to see a law upon the statute books that will provide that one who kills the President or the Vice-President of the United States shall be indicted and tried in the Federal courts—not that I have fear of any miscarriage of justice in the State courts and under State laws, but for the sole reason that in quite a number of the States the death penalty is not imposed for murder, and I think it would be a calamity to have such a man as the murderer of the late President sentenced simply to imprisonment for life. He would always be in the public eye; he would always prove an incentive to those who are in sympathy with him to extol him as a martyr; the press would seek him and would be filled from time to time with descriptions of the man, his doings, his habits, and his words.

Such a result as that would, in my opinion, tend very greatly to incite weak-minded and vain men to crimes of a similar character. When the bill accomplishes that end, when it provides for the trial of one who murders the President or the Vice-President in the Federal courts, then I think the true purpose of legislation of this kind will have been accomplished.

I do not desire to dwell upon mere generalizations. I desire to recur to the features of the bill which I can not support and which I know a number of other Senators can not support. In the first section the language is:

> Shall * * * willfully and maliciously kill or cause the death of the President.

There has been much controversy between Senators as to the effect of language of that kind—"maliciously kill or cause the death"—some Senators contending that that is a description of murder at common law; others that it is not a description of murder at common law, and therefore confusion would be transmitted to the courts through such a law when a person charged with the offense should come to trial.

It seems to me that if there is language about which there is no controversy, and which has been used time and again by Congress in denouncing the unlawful and felonious killing of individuals within territory that is under the jurisdiction of the United States, that language should be employed, and thus remove all controversy over the meaning of words.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment? Perhaps it may save him some little debate.

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I am perfectly willing, speaking for one—and I think there will be no objection anywhere—if it will remove such doubt as the Senator suggests, to have the word "murder" used in this bill, and then to add to it something which has been furnished me, which I believe is in the handwriting of the Senator himself and drawn by him.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; most of it.

Mr. HOAR. I have added a sentence or two, to which I think the Senator will not object. The purpose of the amendment is to add these words:

> And any person indicted under the provisions of this section may be convicted of manslaughter, or of assault with intent to kill, if the facts, in the opinion of the jury, do not warrant such conviction and do not warrant a conviction for murder. And any person found guilty of manslaughter or such assault hereunder shall be imprisoned not more than twenty years.

That is the Senator's precise language, except that I have added "or of assault with intent to kill," to cover the case of manslaughter, which is, I believe, in all the State laws, so far as I know. In all the States an indictment for murder will warrant a conviction of manslaughter or of assault with intent to kill.

I beg the Senator's pardon for the interruption. If the insertion of that amendment will remove the Senator's objection, I shall be glad to agree to it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, that language removes my objection to that part of section 1. The use of the term "murder" instead of "maliciously kill or cause the death of" makes it perfectly clear, and on the trial of a person accused of this offense the courts would have the volumes of judicial decisions with which to safely guide the jury in determining the guilt or innocence of the accused.

As to the number of persons included in section 1, I agree with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and with several Senators upon this side that it is wholly unnecessary to include within the purpose of this measure others than the President and he who is next in succession to him as President of the United States.

The provisions of the bill that I am particularly opposed to are those which declare that advising or counseling or threatening the death of the President or Vice-President is a crime to be punished by imprisonment for a long term of years. My objection to those provisions are fundamental. I say, without fear of successful contradiction, that the Congress of the United States has never declared that the mere advising or counseling of any crime is a crime, and no State legislature has ever declared that the counseling or advising or any unlawful act is a crime.

That I may not labor under a misapprehension, I would ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether or not the following is the purpose of the provisions to which I refer, namely, that if one shall advise or counsel the murder of the President or Vice-President, whether that advice or counsel be acted upon or not, nevertheless, so advising is a crime to be punished by imprisonment?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I can only answer for myself. Speaking for myself, I think ordinarily that is a greater crime than that of the actual doer of the deed; that the crime is complete, and should be deemed complete when the wicked advice is given, and that it should be punished.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, if one aids or abets a crime, if one advises or counsels a crime, and the crime is committed, he is then punishable without language of this kind. If the President of the United States should be killed and it could be established that any person had advised or counseled that killing, or had aided or abetted that killing, he would be equally guilty with the principal as an accessory before the fact. Therefore, I think I was not mistaken when I concluded that the object of this provision was to make counseling or advising this offense a crime, although the thing that was advised or counseled was never committed, and no attempt was made to commit it.

I say again that no act of Congress can be found, and no act of a State legislature can be found, which has declared to be criminal the simple advising or counseling of a criminal act if no step is taken thereafter toward carrying into effect the counsel or the advice.

As I suggested, if one aids or abets or if one counsels or advises, and the evil act is done as a result of that aid or abetting or counseling or advising, then he who counsels or advises is punishable as an accessory before the fact.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to what one of the most eminent writers upon criminal law has said upon provisions of this character. I am not only sustained in my position by the absence of legislation of this character, but by the deliberate judgment, expressed in strong language, by the best writers upon criminal law that the jurisprudence of our country has produced; and I take it that, unless there is some unusual and extraordinary reason, the experiences of the past and the deliberate judgment of those who have devoted a lifetime to controversies of this nature should be a strong and sure guide to any legislative body. I call the attention of the Senate to what Mr. Wharton, in his first volume on Criminal Law, says upon questions of this kind:

> Mere words, unless they are libelous, seditious, obscene, or provocative of breaches of the public peace, are not the subject of penal judicial action. Even when they express illegal purposes they are often merely speculative; are uttered often by weak men as braggadocio, and always belong to a domain which criminal courts can not invade without peril to individual freedom and to the just and liberal progress of society.

Turning to another section, I find the subject treated upon more at large. I read from section 179 of the same volume:

> But is a solicitation indictable when it is not either (1) a substantive indictable offense, as in the instances just named, or (2) a stage toward an independent consummated offense? And the better opinion is that, where the solicitation is not in itself a substantive offense, or where there has been no progress made toward the consummation of the independent offense attempted, the question whether the solicitation is by itself the subject of penal prosecution must be answered in the negative.
> For we would be forced to admit, if we hold that solicitations to criminality are generally indictable, that the propagandists, even in conversation, of agrarian or communistic theories are liable to criminal prosecution; and hence the necessary freedom of speech and of the press would be greatly infringed. It would be hard also, we must agree, if we maintain such general responsibility, to defend, in prosecution for soliciting crime, the publishers of Byron's Don Juan, of Rousseau's Emile, or of Goethe's Elective Affinities. Lord Chesterfield, in his letters to his son, directly advises the latter to form illicit connections with married women; Lord Chesterfield, on the reasoning here contested, would be indictable for solicitation to adultery.
> Undoubtedly, when such solicitations are so publicly and indecently made as to produce public scandal they are indictable as nuisances or as libels. But to make bare solicitations or allurements indictable as attempts not only unduly and seriously extends the scope of penal adjudication, but forces on the courts psychological questions which they are incompetent to decide, and a branch of business which would make them despots of every intellect in the land. What human judge can determine that there is such a necessary connection between one man's advice and another man's actions as to make the former the cause of the latter? An attempt, as has been stated, is such an intentional preliminary guilty act as will apparently result, in the usual course of natural events, if not hindered by extraneous causes, in the commission of a deliberate crime. But this can not be affirmed of advice given to another, which advice such other person is at full liberty to accept or reject.

It seems to me that that language might well have been prepared with special reference to the sections of the bill now under discussion. Let me see, Mr. President, whether the language here used comes within the description of this eminent law writer. Section 3 begins:

> That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, aid, abet, advise, or counsel the killing of the President or Vice-President of the United States—

I meet a friend. He may be the most loyal man within the limits of the country; he may be the devoted admirer of the one who, for the time being, is the occupant of the White House. My suggestion to him would no more have effect upon his mind than would the falling of the dew upon the back of an elephant; yet if I say to him, Smith or Jones, "I think you should kill the President of the United States," under this bill I am indictable for a heinous crime, and must be punished by a long imprisonment in the penitentiary.

The law does not intend, Mr. President, to punish anything but that which is an unlawful act or the equivalent of an unlawful act. The nearest we approach to a departure from that is in the crime of conspiracy; and even in defining that crime, where there is more than advice, where there is more than suggestion, where the minds of two men meet upon a proposition to commit an unlawful act—it may be to murder the President of the United States—under the law of conspiracy, as it is found in the statute books of Congress to-day, no offense has been committed. Conspiracy is thus defined in section 5440 of the Revised Statutes:

> SEC. 5440. If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, all the parties to such conspiracy shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $1,000 and not more than $10,000, and to imprisonment not more than two years.

There must not only be a meeting of the minds, the agreement of the parties, but the conspiracy to do the particular crime; but before an offense is committed, even where the conspiracy exists, one of the parties to the conspiracy must commit some overt act, do some act in the way of the complete fruition of the plans they had adopted.

But, Mr. President, this is not even to be a conspiracy. There is to be no act to follow. The crime is complete when one may advise or counsel another to commit the offense mentioned, although, as suggested a short time ago, there never was the slightest probability that he who was advised would commit it or that he would even attempt to commit it.

Mr. President, I take it that if this bill is placed upon the statute books it will not have a tendency to suppress anarchy or anarchists. Either this bill is aimed at the anarchist, or it is aimed at nobody, or it is aimed at everybody. Anarchists are usually very careful and very prudent in formulating their conspiracies. If you can prove the conspiracy, and any overt act has been committed to forward its purpose, then the conspirators are indictable and triable. But the number of anarchists in this country, thank God, is small, while our population numbers seventy or eighty millions of souls.

But such a thing as this is entirely possible. In the heat of a political campaign some man with an ill-regulated temper, who is given to the use of abusive language upon slight pretext, in the heat of debate, or in the privacy of conversation, may be induced to utter an expression indicative of a desire that the President or Vice-President should be murdered. Whoever hears a suggestion of that kind may proceed, under this bill, to a district attorney and induce an indictment, and, if it can be established that he uttered the words, though without any evil intent, the words themselves will be taken by the court to indicate the purpose charged in the statute, and he must be consigned to prison for many years.

But that is not all, Mr. President. In times of great political excitement men, apparently without cause, become easily incensed sometimes against those who have been their friends, or against political enemies. They may decide to furnish a terrible example, or to make political capital, or to secure some salve to private malice, and without language to justify it, may proceed to the district attorney and charge the object of his malice with having uttered threats against the life of the President, or with advising some one to compass his death. What is there for the district attorney to do but to bring the matter before a grand jury, to secure an indictment, and to put the accused upon his trial?

There need be no act proven; no act toward the commission of the thing threatened or advised. It remains a mere question of dependence upon the memory of the one who may make the accusation or the malevolence that may actuate one to the extent of inventing a charge against the person he is aiming at.

Mr. President, instead of suppressing anarchy, every provision such as this creates anarchy. Such provisions are calculated to create a reign of terror. They place the good name and the liberty of any good citizen at the will of any evil-minded and evil-disposed person. Those who have been engaged in the practice of the law know that the easiest method of establishing a false claim is by proof of alleged statements by a defendant. This is the most difficult kind of testimony to overcome, however false the statements may be.

I have had cases where a number of evilly disposed persons have combined to overwhelm a client by a proof of declarations. A half a dozen would testify to a declaration at one time, and another, another, and another, and all that could be interposed against this accumulation of alleged declarations was the simple denial of the accused himself.

There is not nearly so much probability of convicting an innocent person of a conspiracy where something more than proof of mere statements or declarations is required. If, in addition, there must be an act done, then there is a combination of difficulties in the way of one who seeks to convict one of such a crime. But where one may be indicted and tried for an offense that consists wholly of words spoken, you have opened the door to persecutions that will come nearer creating anarchy than any body of anarchists can create.

We can not expect to overcome every evil that exists in the country. We can not bridle men's tongues so that the words they utter will be measured by our ideas of propriety. We can not erect a standard of moral conduct and force every other citizen to reach that standard or suffer some legal penalty. We must submit to evil. We must realize that we are in the midst of evils, but to evade them we must not fly to evils that are of far greater moment. It is far better that some ill-bridled tongue in some village community or in some populous city be permitted to say that in his judgment the President of the United States should die, or to advise some friend of his to kill him, than to open the door to a pandora box of evils which, in my judgment, will force the American people before a law of this kind is long upon the statute books to demand its repeal.

I have an idea that it may be a century before another President will be assassinated. It may be years and years and years before anybody will conspire to make away with another President of the United States. But it is likely to be next year or the year following or the year following that, with this law upon the statute books, that some individual, to gain political advantage, to overcome the influence of some political enemy, or to wreak some private revenge, will appear before the United States attorney to charge someone with having advised or counseled the killing of a President. We are liable, from the time a law of this kind is placed on the statute books, to hear of charges of crimes of this character, when without it the probabilities are we would live generations without the press of the country being called upon to give currency to any such charge.

It is for these reasons that I can not give my support to the provisions found in sections 3 and 5 of this measure.

Let me now call attention to section 5. It is as follows:

That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, by spoken words, or by written or printed words, uttered or published, threaten to kill, or advise or counsel another to kill the President or Vice-President of the United States, etc.

I can imagine, Mr. President, unless by the mere fact of some one becoming President he is stripped of all the weaknesses to which human flesh is heir, that some man, with ample grounds for anger against the President of the United States, may threaten in his own home or in his village or city to kill the President. There may be this mere declaration in a moment of anger, incited by a sense of injury suffered, but with no finger raised to carry the threat into effect, and yet under the provisions of this bill he is liable to indictment and to a long term of imprisonment for the words. "Threatening" is even worse, so far as the abuses that may follow are concerned, than are the words "counsel or advise."

What is the definition of the "advise" or "counsel," taken from the Standard Dictionary? Let us see. "Advise; to offer an opinion to, by way of counsel." If one offers an opinion by way of counsel to anybody that the President should be killed, he has committed a crime. Another definition: "Give suggestions or advice to concerning a course or act."

All that one has to do is to reflect, not alone upon the possibilities of the abuse of such a statute, but the probabilities of its abuse. These sections are denounced by every law writer. They are provisions that the sound judgment of every great judge has pronounced against, and that must convince every reflecting lawyer are liable to result in persecutions as groundless as they may be malevolent.

In the amendment I have prepared I have attempted to overcome these difficulties. I believe that he who murders the President or Vice-President should be hanged; that he who commits an assault with intent to murder the President or Vice-President should be punished commensurately with his crime; that he who enters into a conspiracy to murder the President or Vice-President should pay the just penalty, and that accessories before or after the fact should be treated as principals, and tried and convicted whether the principals have been tried or convicted or not, and also that those who are engaged in a conspiracy, each and all of them, should be tried and convicted, even though other members of the conspiracy may have escaped.

It seems to me that when provisions effectuating such results are placed upon the statute books, Congress has done all that it legitimately may do in a country where freedom of speech and the freedom of the press are among the most cherished rights secured to American citizens.

The first section of the measure I have prepared is as follows:

That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, murder the President or Vice-President of the United States, or the official next in succession to the President under the Constitution and laws of the United States, shall be punished with death; and an accessory before or after any such offense shall be deemed a principal and be punished with death; and any such accessory may be indicted, tried, and punished, although the other party or parties to such offense has not or have not been indicted or convicted.

Then upon the subject of manslaughter section 2 provides:

That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, kill any of the official persons mentioned in section 1 under such circumstances as to constitute the killing manslaughter, he shall be imprisoned not more than twenty years.

Upon the subject of assault or attempts to kill section 3 provides:

That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States, or any place subject to its jurisdiction, assault any of the official persons mentioned in section 1 with intent to murder the person so assaulted, he shall be punished with death, or, in the discretion of the court, with imprisonment during his natural life, or for a period not less than ten years.

It is accepted throughout Christendom that where a homicide by reason of the attendant circumstances does not amount to murder, but is only manslaughter, a less penalty than death should be inflicted within the discretion of the trial judge, and that is what is intended by the section I have read.

The next section relates to conspiracy. It reads:

SEC. 4. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, conspire to murder either of the official persons mentioned in section 1 shall be punished by imprisonment not more than twenty years; and any person who has conspired as aforesaid may be indicted and convicted separately, although the other party or parties to the conspiracy have not been indicted or convicted.

And the other sections are those contained in the bill reported by the Senator from Massachusetts without change of any kind.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that there is any necessity now, or that there has ever been in this country, to resort to unusual and extraordinary measures to preserve the Government of the United States. A President may be assassinated, and all that it results in is the loss of the life of the man, and the sorrow and gloom which pervade the world by reason of his death; but so far as the Government is concerned, it is as safe an hour after the fatal shot as it was the hour before.

I venture the assertion that if the President, Vice-President, and every member of his Cabinet and every member of the Senate and the House of Representatives were in the twinkling of an eye stricken from off the face of the earth the Government of the United States would still live, unimpaired and unimperiled. So deep seated is the love of order in the American heart, so completely are the American people wedded to the institutions of the country, that with every official stricken down, naturally, instinctively, and without any undue disorder the people would assemble, and within a time which would seem magical all of the vacant positions would be filled and this Government would be moving on as though a finger had never been raised against it.

So all we are called upon to do is to provide an unerring punishment for those who may take the life of our President, or assault him with intent to do the deed, or who conspire for the purpose of depriving him of life. But in doing this we should not depart too far from the provisions that are made to restrain and punish other citizens of the country for like offenses against other people.

If we make this punishment uniform throughout the country, and unerring and certain, if it is provided beyond escape that such an offender shall be properly tried in a Federal court, and wherever the offense is proven that the penalty of death shall follow, and if we provide for the trial in a Federal court, with full and ample punishments, of conspiracies to effect such results, and all assaults with intent to commit such offenses, we have done all that the American Congress, representing the American people, are called upon to do, and that is all I am willing to do.

That the bill provides for the punishment by death of those who murder some other officials than the President or Vice-President does not present insuperable objections to me. The objections I can not surmount are those to which I have at length called attention. When we invent new offenses and punish men merely for words spoken—it may be in the privacy of their own homes, or in the field standing at the plow, or when holding the implements of their trade—we are striking a blow at good order, we are making sad inroads upon the right of free speech.

No man execrates more than I do he who even in the heat of temper advises the killing of any person, especially the President of the United States; but simply to prevent a thing of that kind I do not think it is at all necessary to place it in the power of the evil-minded to create hundreds of criminals where none would exist without the law.

These provisions will not reach the anarchists; they will not prevent their assembling, nor insure their punishment. They will not prevent the devices of those who seek to overthrow all government.

Mr. RAWLINS. Before the Senator concludes I wish to ask him a question. I am in harmony with the provisions of the amendment proposed by the Senator. I wish to call attention to this point. Suppose there is an indictment under this bill against an individual for assault with intent to murder the President, and the evidence tends to disclose a case of assault with intent not to murder but to inflict bodily harm. The person could not be convicted or punished. The same suggestion would apply to assault and assault and battery on the President. It might be embraced in the higher charge, but there are no provisions for punishment either in the bill or in the proposed amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON. It seems to me that where the circumstances attending an assault are such as to indicate that the assault was not made with the purpose to take life, but simply to inflict a personal injury, then we may well leave the prosecution of any such offense to the local tribunals. I can well understand that a President or Vice-President may provoke an assault. He may give such provocation as that in anger one might strike at the President with a weapon that was not deadly in its nature and was not calculated to produce death, and from the very nature of the weapon used it would be perfectly clear that the assailant did not attempt death. Under such circumstances the laws of the different States are practically as one. Whether the offense would occur in the District of Columbia or in an adjoining State or in any State the law that punishes an assault and battery with intent to commit a great bodily injury would amply meet the occasion.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator has had much experience in the administration of criminal law. It has occurred to me that it would tend to the humane administration of the law to obviate the difficulty I suggest, because if a person should be indicted for an assault on the President with intent to commit murder and the evidence would only warrant a conviction of assault with intent to do bodily harm, and the jury were told they could not convict under that evidence for a lesser offense, the jury would be more inclined, rather than set the defendant free, to render a verdict for the higher offense, while if they were permitted to consider the different degrees all the way down we would be more likely to obtain exact justice.

There is another suggestion in that regard, that as the Federal courts take jurisdiction of the protection of the person of the President, it might for the time being, if not wholly, exclude the interference of the State or local authorities. For that reason it occurred to me that it might be wise to cover the whole category, from the lowest to the highest degree.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have not the slightest objection to giving the Federal courts jurisdiction of attempts at personal injury to the President or the Vice-President, which would in their attendant circumstances fall below the crime of manslaughter. The principle is precisely the same. Where you say that a Federal court, in the case of an injury to the President, may indict the offender for manslaughter, there is no reason why, if the offense does not amount to manslaughter, he should not be convicted of the intent to commit great personal injury.

So far as these matters are concerned, there is nothing vital in any of them. The vital objections to this bill are that it creates offenses simply out of words spoken without any result following, words which of themselves do not disturb the peace and words which of themselves do not constitute substantive crimes, such as the subornation of perjury, the interference by advice with the performance of the duties of a judicial officer.

Those are substantive offenses, because in every case there is something more than mere counsel or words; but the evil in this measure is that a Senator or a Representative or a citizen, however high or low, may be accused of having in the privacy of his own home counseled or advised the taking off of a President, and he may be punished by long imprisonment, although it was never possible that the person advised would do the act and that no attempt had been or would be made to commit it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. I ask him whether he does distinguish in principle, and if so, how in principle, between the provisions of this bill and the United States statute reported in the penal code by the three commissioners, now on our table, and adopted from the New York penal code. I will read the sections:

SEC. 346. A person who instigates, aids, encourages, or does any act to further a pugilistic encounter within the meaning of the section last preceding, or sends or publishes a challenge or acceptance of a challenge for such an encounter, or carries or delivers such a challenge or acceptance, or trains or assists any person in training or preparing for such an encounter, is punishable by a fine not to exceed $500 or by imprisonment not to exceed one year, or both.

SEC. 347. Any words spoken or written, or any signs directed or made to any person, expressing or implying, or intended to express or imply, a desire, request, invitation, or demand to engage in any fight, such as is mentioned in the two sections last preceding, shall be deemed a challenge within the meaning of the section last preceding.

My question is whether, in his judgment, the Senator is quite warranted, with this lying on our tables, in saying that we have gone back to the dark ages with this legislation, and next, what I said before, if it be reasonable and proper to say that a person who instigates another man to fight, and by any words or acts encourages him to it, shall be punished, is it so absolutely horrible to punish a man who in that way tries to promote the murder of the President of the United States?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the offenses that are referred to in the statute (and if I had the book I would perhaps answer it more intelligently) fall practically on the margin line between what are denominated substantive offenses and offenses that it may be attempted to create simply by advice or counsel. It is recognized by the books that the sending of a challenge is a breach of the peace. If A sends a challenge to B, or B accepts the challenge, then there is a breach of the peace so imminent that the law denounces it in many of the States; and that is recognized by the author from which I read as one of the substantive offenses which does not come within his denunciation.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I ask for my information. I am sure there must be some answer to my question, which I do not at this moment, however, see. Does not the Senator consider the murder of the President to be a breach of the peace?

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, certainly. The Senator from Massachusetts hardly felt that he was under a necessity to ask that question to get the answer.

Mr. HOAR. I did. I put it, if the Senator will pardon me, in all seriousness.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me ask the Senator if to commit a robbery is a breach of the peace?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will any statute be found that makes it a crime to advise or suggest to somebody to go and commit a robbery?

Mr. HOAR. I should think very likely there would be. There ought to be.

Mr. PATTERSON. None can be found. There is a class of offenses, such as challenging to duel and prize-fight combats, where to bring the parties together would necessarily result in a breach of the peace. That legislatures have denounced and made criminal; but that is not in line with what is attempted in this bill. Here is an offense probably by but one individual. A says to B, "I advise you to go and commit that particular offense." It does not require anybody to cooperate with him to commit the act. In other words, if it is robbery, if it is larceny, if it is murder, if it is any cognate offense simply to advise or counsel its commission, if it is never committed or attempted it is not to be treated as a crime; and so says Mr. Wharton.

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I want to explain my difficulty, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I asked the Senator, who thought we had gone back to the Dark Ages for this proposal, why it was that it was so objectionable to provide that a man who should instigate or counsel another to murder the President should be punished, while at the same time we punish the man who instigates or counsels a person to send a challenge or accept one, or the person who instigates or counsels another to engage in a prize fight, without regard to the fact whether the advice is taken or the counsel is acted upon. To that the Senator answered that a prize fight is a breach of the peace, and that seemed to be his distinction, as far as I understood it. That is what puzzles me, because, in the first place, I do not understand why it is not a breach of the peace to murder the President, and, in the next place, I do not understand how, if both be a breach of the peace, it makes a difference in the principle.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me call the attention of the Senator to Wharton on Criminal Law. I ask his attention to the cases by which the statements of the author are supported, and perhaps that will enable Senators to discriminate between offenses of that character, the fighting of duels, of fistic combats, where two or more are brought together for the purpose of engaging in a fight. Section 179 commences as follows:

Are solicitations to commit crime independently indictable?

The Senator will agree that that question is directly pertinent to the investigation we are now making.

Are solicitations to commit crime independently indictable?

But let me also suggest to the Senator that you may make this a crime. If this law is enacted you have made that which was never a crime before a crime. If some State legislatures have gone beyond the confines that have been marked out by courts and legislatures in the past they do not necessarily stand as precedents for the present. But I want to meet the Senator upon the ground he himself has laid down.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps before the Senator proceeds he will allow me to read one more provision from this penal code, which is copied from the statute of my own State.

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly,

Mr. HOAR. It is as follows:

SEC. 262. Whoever willfully, in any manner, advises, encourages, abets, or assists another in taking the latter's life, is guilty of aiding suicide, and shall be imprisoned not less than seven years.

Mr. PATTERSON. I take it that wherever that law has been made applicable you will find that it has been made applicable to an accomplished offense; that is, where a prize fight has been fought, where one has committed suicide, and then by reason of aiding, abetting, or counseling, or advising one has become an accessory to it, he has been prosecuted and punished.

Now, let me, reading this author, show how the discriminations are made. The question is, I quote, "Are solicitations to commit crime independently indictable?" The Senator admits that all that this section denounces is a solicitation to commit crime.

I continue to read:

They certainly are, as has been seen, when they in themselves involve a breach of the public peace, as is the case with challenges to fight and seditious addresses. They are also indictable when their object is interference with public justice, as where a resistance to the execution of a judicial writ is counseled.

I found the case referred to to support that proposition. It was one in which an officer was about to execute the writ, and in the presence of the officer the person who was accused advised resistance, and resistance followed. I continue:

Or perjury is advised.

In that case the perjury had been committed. It is distinctly stated in the opinion which is the basis of this language, by the author, that conviction could not have followed, although he was indicted for subornation of perjury, unless the crime itself, the substantive crime of perjury, had been established.

Now, again:

Or the escape of a prisoner is encouraged.

That is where a prisoner was induced to escape from the custody of an officer and he actually made his escape, but was subsequently recaptured.

Or the corruption of a public officer.

This is where a person was indicted for bribing a public officer. He had induced him to violate his duty, and to do so had tendered him a bribe.

I continue to quote:

They are indictable, also, when they are in themselves offenses against public decency, as is the case with solicitations to commit sodomy, and they are indictable, also, when they constitute accessoryship before the fact.

Now, I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to this language. After naming the very class of offenses to which the Senator from Massachusetts called my attention——

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator from Colorado a question right at that point?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. The statement which is made is that it was indictable as to the accessories before the fact.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, suppose a man advises another and that other man so advised kills the President.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then he is a principal.

Mr. MITCHELL. But is not this authority to the effect that in a case of that kind it can be made a substantive offense?

Mr. PATTERSON. As a matter of course. There is no question in the world about that.

Mr. MORGAN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. I want to offer an amendment, to come in at the close of any bill that may be prepared by a Senator on this side, which, I think, covers the ground which the two Senators now addressing each other have in mind. If the Senator will indulge me, I will read it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. It is as follows:

The advocacy or encouragement of the assassination of an officer of the United States, or the executive head of a foreign government, that is evidenced by any act or declaration that is so intended is a crime against the United States, and is punishable by imprisonment at hard labor for a period not to exceed fifty years; and it shall not excuse the act or declaration that is made criminal by this act that it is not directed at any particular individual, but includes and is directed at any person who may hold such office.

I merely call attention to it that the Senator may know I shall offer this amendment, to come in at the end of the bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am glad the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] called my attention to the language I have quoted, because it will help clear up confusion that exists in the minds of some Senators at least. Where one advises another to commit an offense and the offense is committed, or counsels it and the offense is committed, or the attempt is made by virtue of the counsel to commit the offense, he may be an accessory before the fact, but the fact itself is the crime, and if there is no crime there can be no accessory to that crime.

The point that I am making against the measure is that if the Senator from Oregon should lose the placidity that is always with him, if perchance he should be so incensed at some President, whether of his own party or another, as to in the privacy of his own house suggest that he should be killed, he would be indictable, although he had no idea of committing the offense and although the person to whom he might make the suggestion never had any thought of committing it.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Colorado a question for information?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I have listened with very great interest to the Senator's argument and I am anxious to understand it fully. Suppose that one of the authors of this new cult of anarchy should, as the woman did whose name I forget——

Mr. HOAR and others. Miss Goldman.

Mr. VEST. Suppose Miss Goldman should advocate the killing of the President or any of the heads of the Government, and do it in a public address, and no one should act upon that advice, could Miss Goldman be punished under his argument?

Mr. PATTERSON. I think so.

Mr. VEST. What for?

Mr. PATTERSON. For the use of language calculated to disturb the peace. That would be a seditious utterance in public.

Mr. VEST. That is exactly the point.

Mr. PATTERSON. And the probable or the possible outcome is to incite the hearers of the individual to the commission of violence.

Mr. VEST. That is the very point to which I am coming. Then, if I understand the Senator from Colorado, if the bill were amended so as to use before the words "counsel and advise" the words "in any public address or publication," would it meet his objection?

Mr. PATTERSON. Then I could not, from the standpoint of usual and ordinary legislation for the preservation of the public peace, make any objection to it. The objections that I am now making would not go to an occasion of that kind. No injustice could then be done, Mr. President, for if A or B or C from the public rostrum advises a crowd to commit a crime, whether it is the assassination of a President or robbery or any felony, he is doing that which is calculated to disturb the public peace, and thereby he has committed a substantive offense that is indictable at the common law.

But what I object to is that under the provisions of this bill a man may in his own parlor, talking to a single individual, be guilty of this offense, although he never contemplated doing the act and it was impossible for the person he addressed to commit the act. If the results would be confined to actual cases of deliberate advice, although it would be in violation of well-settled principles of jurisprudence, having in mind our political institutions, there would not be so great an objection, because it might by some show of possibility be said that a man who advised the assassination of the President even in private should be punished for it.

But, Mr. President, I refer to the possibility of the evils that may flow from such a measure. A may appear before a district attorney and swear that B advised him to assassinate the President, and B may be indicted upon that single testimony, and he may be put upon his trial, and the only witness appearing against him be the person who made the charge. The charge may be as false as hell, and yet the person be convicted. It is against the possible and probable evils that bristle all over and all around this provision that I am raising my voice.

I want to reread for the benefit of the Senator from Massachusetts, who was not here, I think, when I first read it, this paragraph from Wharton on Criminal Law, for the purpose of showing how well supported I am in the position I take:

But is a solicitation indictable when it is not either (1) a substantive indictable offense, as in the instances just named, or (2) a stage toward an independent consummated offense? And the better opinion is that where the solicitation is not in itself a substantive offense, or where there has been no progress made toward the consummation of the independent offense attempted, (3) the question whether the solicitation is by itself the subject of penal prosecution must be answered in the negative; (4) for we would be forced to admit, if we hold that solicitations to criminality are generally indictable, that the propagandists, even in conversation, of agrarian or communistic theories are liable to criminal prosecution; and hence the necessary freedom of speech and of the press would be greatly infringed.

It would be hard, also, we must agree, if we maintain such general responsibility to defend, in prosecutions for soliciting crime, the publishers of Byron's "Don Juan," of Rousseau's "Emile," or of Goethe's "Elective Affinities." Lord Chesterfield, in his letter to his son, directly advises the latter to form illicit connections with married women. Lord Chesterfield, on the reasoning here contested, would be indictable for solicitation to adultery.

Undoubtedly, when such solicitations are so publicly and indecently made as to produce public scandal, they are indictable as nuisances or as libels. But to make bare solicitations or allurements indictable as attempts, not only unduly and perilously extends the scope of penal adjudication, but forces on the courts psychological questions which they are incompetent to decide, and a branch of business which would make them despots of every intellect in the land.

What human judge can determine that there is such a necessary connection between one man's advice and another man's actions as to make the former the cause of the latter? An attempt, as has been stated, is such an intentional preliminary guilty act as will apparently result, in the usual course of natural events, if not hindered by extraneous causes, in the commission of a deliberate crime. But this can not be affirmed of advice given to another, which advice such other person is at full liberty to accept or reject.

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that the books recognize the distinction between the fighting of duels and the fighting of fistic combats and mere advice or counsel to commit a felony, such as murder or robbery. In every case whether the logic may be good or whether the line of demarcation may be clear it is not for me to say, but that the line has always existed is beyond a doubt. I again challenge a Senator to find a statute where punishment is prescribed for mere advice or counsel to commit robbery, or advice or counsel to commit larceny, or advice or counsel to kill somebody, and where the counsel or advice was not given in public.

I say that no such law can be found, and if it does exist it transcends the clear injunctions that are laid upon all legislative bodies by the ablest writers upon criminal law that have lived in this country or in Great Britain.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Colorado will pardon me, I have exactly the answer to that last suggestion of his which he challenged me to find. It is not robbery or murder, but it is the same thing—where the thing is never acted upon, the thing is done by one man in secret. This is the United States law—the old law:

Whoever entices or procures or attempts or endeavors to entice or procure any soldier in the military service of the United States, or who has been recruited for such service, to desert therefrom.

Then the same thing follows about sailors. It is true this is not a robbery or a murder in this section, but I can not understand the reason why it should be proper to punish a man who in his own house in secret endeavors to entice a soldier or sailor to desert, although the soldier or sailor scorns the advice and the thing is done in secret, proved by the testimony of one man, and it is so dreadful a thing to punish the endeavoring to entice or incite a man to murder the President of the United States. The fact that one of them is now the law and the other is not of course is what makes it proper to pass this law. But any reason for a distinction I can not understand.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me ask the Senator why he does not make the advising or counseling of the commission of all crimes, of murder generally, of robbery, of arson, or of other felony, criminal?

Mr. HOAR. Because I am not at this time making a general criminal law or penal code.

Mr. PATTERSON. Here and there you will find acts of that character, but you will discover that they are in the nature of misdemeanors of such a slight and insignificant character that they do not and can not rise to the dignity of offenses of this magnitude. I can well understand that anyone who procures a soldier to desert is committing an offense, if it has been made an offense by the statutes of the United States. But the language of the act goes farther than the words counsel or advise. It requires more. It is an "attempt" or "endeavor" that there constitutes the offense. But, in any event, it is not impossible that laws violative of this principle may have found their way to the statute books. But you find no such law made applicable to any of the great offenses as they exist either at the common law or as they exist by statute.

Mr. HOAR. May I answer that question by citing one right in point that I have open here also?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. It is the old law, "Crimes against the existence of the Government."

SEC. 5334. Every person who incites, sets on foot, assists, or engages in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States, or the laws thereof, or gives aid or comfort thereto, shall be punished by imprisonment not more than ten years.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir; but there he must have incited the rebellion. You can not be said to have incited an act unless the act itself is committed or put in operation. The rebellion must have occurred before it can be said that anybody was incited to enter upon it.

Mr. HOAR. There, again, I respectfully differ with my friend.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then I can only submit the differences between us to a discriminating Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. Suppose a man hires another to kill a particular man and pays him for doing it, ought not that to be an offense, though the man was not killed?

Mr. PATTERSON. If one hires another, there is an overt act.

Mr. HOAR. So is this.

Mr. SPOONER. Is not advising another to kill an overt act?

Mr. PATTERSON. I will make this statement in reply, that there has been no provision made in any State against an act of that kind; there is no prohibition; but if the attempt is made, if the killing follows, then the one who hires him to do the act is an accessory before the fact. And again, if one hires another to commit the act, the employer and employee are guilty of a conspiracy, for the two minds have met upon the agreement to murder.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course, but suppose one advises another to shoot the President, ought that not to be an offense?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I thought I had made myself clear. I say no, not because the advice is not morally wrong, not because it is not highly culpable in the field of morals, but because, if you make the simple counseling or advising to do a criminal act a crime, then the wrongs that may be perpetrated under such a law are of far greater magnitude than to allow counsel of that kind to go unpunished. It is the abuse that such a law is sure to encourage that causes me to hesitate and decline to vote to put it upon the statute book.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. Would the Senator be satisfied with section 3 provided the words "advise or counsel" were stricken out and the word "or" inserted between the words "aid" and "abet?"

Mr. PATTERSON. I would not hesitate a moment, for then there would be no objection in the world to that provision, because if you aid and abet a killing, there must be a killing.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to have the Senator's definition of what he understands may be included in the word "abet."

Mr. PATTERSON. To aid, to assist.

Mr. MITCHELL. Suppose, for instance, to illustrate exactly what I mean, somebody kills another, and it turns out that a third person had advised and counseled the killing; would that be aiding and abetting?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly he would be an accessory before the fact; he would be a principal to the killing.

Mr. MITCHELL. What is the objection, then, to making that which is an offense when the crime is committed a substantive offense?

Mr. PATTERSON. Simply because, replying to the honorable Senator from Oregon, the courts and law writers have denounced legislation of that kind, and because its liability to abuse is so great that it would be better to suffer the evil that follows from permitting the evils it punishes than to bring upon our heads the multitude of evils that such legislation is certain to produce.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator does not deny the right or power on the part of Congress?

Mr. PATTERSON. No, sir; I do not deny that. Congress can pass any law, but, as a matter of course, it is for the Supreme Court to say whether it is properly done. I have very grave doubt whether this bill is constitutional, but I do not place my opposition to it upon the mere question of constitutionality. I place it upon the ground that it is evil legislation—legislation that must be fraught with the worst possible results to the peace and quietude and to the rights of American citizens.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I gave to this bill, when in the Committee on the Judiciary, my most cordial approval, and I am glad of an opportunity to emphasize my support of it here in the Senate. The bill has been drafted deliberately and with great care by the learned and distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. HOAR].

It seemed to me, when the bill was reported, that it would pass the Senate substantially without debate. The purpose of it was so manifest, its provisions so clear and comprehensive, that it seemed to me that no one could or would challenge either the power to enact it or the policy of its enactment.

I have been amazed, Mr. President, by the apparent party division which has occurred in the discussion of this measure. With a very few notable exceptions, the two sides of this Chamber are now distinctly arrayed for and against the general provisions of the measure. Sir, it has seemed to me that this were not a bill to arouse partisan feeling or sentiment—that it would not and could not reasonably become the subject of party difference. There is nothing in it that seeks to advance the interest of any party in the United States. Its purpose is the advancement of the good of all.

It is a singular fact that in the consideration of a penal measure such as we have before us Senators should divide upon partisan lines with respect to it. It has seemed to me, as the debate has progressed during the last few days, that there is a conflict here between those who adhere to the doctrine of States' rights, if I may use the expression, and those who liberally construe the powers of the Federal Government; that there is a contest between the advocates of States' rights and those who believe in the supreme Federal authority within its appropriate sphere.

The suggestion has frequently been made that crimes such as are contemplated in this measure should be cognizable in the criminal courts of the State where the particular crime described may be committed. Mr. President, it has seemed to me that the crimes denominated in this measure are essentially crimes for the congizance of the Federal jurisdiction.

Some question has been raised as to the constitutional warrant for this measure. I have no sympathy with respect to that feature of the debate. It seems to me that the power of self-preservation is inherent in the national sovereignty. When the fathers of this Republic adopted the Constitution they did not intend to put any limitation upon the power of the Congress of the United States to enact whatever measure it should deem essential for the preservation of the life and integrity of the Government. The President of the United States is the representative of the sovereign power of the Government, and any blow struck at him is in the strictest sense a blow against the Government itself.

It has been suggested, Mr. President—and the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] was the first to make the suggestion—that this bill is repugnant to our democratic theory of government; that it is unequal in its operation; that it is discriminating between citizens of the Republic, who should stand before the law upon a plane of absolute equality.

The honorable Senator, whom I regret to observe is not in the Chamber, said that Congress should not take cognizance of crimes committed against the President as an individual, but should only take notice of those that might be committed against him as the official representative of the United States.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. With very great pleasure.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask the Senator if he believes that Congress has any constitutional power to punish the offense of the murder of a private individual within any State of the Union?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That question does not arise here. We are not dealing with crimes against private individuals, but with crimes against public officials.

Mr. CULBERSON. Then, Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator to differentiate, if he pleases.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will do it immediately; and if I do not satisfy the Senator——

Mr. CULBERSON. If the Senator does differentiate, I suggest to him that he will probably find that there is something in the position of the Senator from Georgia that the killing must be not simply of an individual, but of some official of the Federal Government, and possibly in the capacity of or because of or by reason of his official position.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The inquiry of the Senator is a very natural and very proper one. Mr. President, I can not dissociate the individual citizen, who is clothed with all the powers and functions of the Chief Executive of the nation, from the official himself. I do not believe there is a duality in the Chief Executive office. From the time when the President of the United States takes the oath of his high office upon the eastern portico of this Capitol until his term expires under the Constitution he is clothed with all of the attributes and the functions and the responsibilities of the Presidency of the United States.

From the beginning of his term to the close he is the President, no matter where he may be or what he may be doing. This bill, I would suggest to the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], is not for the benefit of the mere individual; it is a bill primarily in the interest of the Government of the United States. We seek here by law to put about the Chief Executive office, for the benefit of the people of the United States, all the protection which in our wisdom may seem essential. Whether waking or sleeping, the incumbent of the great office of the Presidency is the representative of the Government of the United States; he is the very incarnation of supreme Federal authority.

There is no intermittent incumbency. After the President takes his oath he has no power to divest himself of the functions and prerogatives of the Presidency for one single moment of time. So we are, Mr. President, here dealing with the President; not with the individual.

Mr. MCCUMBER. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Certainly; with very great pleasure.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Does the Senator also hold that an assault with intent to kill committed against the Attorney-General, while there are seven persons above him who may hold the position of President in the event of the death of the President, is a blow against the sovereignty of the United States?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I think it is.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Then that would apply equally to members of the Supreme Court, would it not?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I would say that Congress has the power——

Mr. MCCUMBER. I admit the power.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I then say to my honorable friend that it is a question of policy, in my judgment.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I simply wish to get the position of the Senator as to whether an assault of this character while the President is still living, while all the persons who would succeed to that office in the event of his death are still living, and where even the death of the Attorney-General would not in any way affect the matter of the person upon whom the office would devolve—whether that could honestly be construed as an assault against the sovereignty of the United States?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It is theoretically possible that the killing of the Attorney-General might disturb the Presidential succession.

Mr. MCCUMBER. But only upon the assumption, if I may disturb the Senator again——

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It is no disturbance.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Only upon the assumption that all of the other seven, who would precede the Attorney-General, would be killed almost at the same time. Is not that correct?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MCCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Is it not possible that they might all be killed at the same time in some calamity or by some conspiracy? Is not that possible?

Mr. MCCUMBER. There is a bare possibility of it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. And it is against that bare possibility that we propose to interpose this great law.

Mr. MCCUMBER. If that be true, as I stated, the assault against the Attorney-General would have to be made almost at the same time; and that, while it is a bare possibility seems to me to be so remote as to be hardly worthy of consideration.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I suggest that was the very plan when Lincoln was assassinated. It was carried out by the attack upon Mr. Seward; it was carried out by one of the conspirators going to Secretary Stanton's house, and finding General Grant with him, seeing there were two men to attack instead of one, he went away without committing the deed; and another, Atzerodt, had been assigned to attack Vice-President Andrew Johnson.

Mr. MCCUMBER. My question was whether or not a simple assault upon the Attorney-General alone, where there is no assault or attempted assault upon any of the other members of the Cabinet who would precede him in holding this official position, could be construed, standing by itself, as an assault against the sovereignty of the United States?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I think it is within the absolute competency of Congress to so determine.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I have no doubt or question of the ability of Congress to enact such legislation.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Then it becomes merely a question of policy.

Mr. President, the people of the United States are interested in this question. They are interested in preventing, so far as possible, any assault upon the executive department which might result in times of great turmoil and passion in the absolute overthrow of the Government itself. It is within the range of my vision improbable, but it is not impossible.

Who would have dreamed that the crime could have been committed which was committed in the city of Washington in 1865? Who is there that could have anticipated the blow that was aimed at the head of the Government in 1881 in the city of Washington? Who, Mr. President, on the face of the earth could have foreseen the unspeakable tragedy at Buffalo?

We find, sir, within the limits of the past few months a magnificent evidence of the self-restraint of the American people. This proposed law is not conceived in passion; it is a deliberate utterance. It has seemed to the American people that now is the time to throw about the Chief Executive Officer of the United States all of the reasonable safeguards which our highest intelligence can suggest.

The Senators on the other side of the Chamber say the law will be ineffective; that it will accomplish no good; that it would not have prevented the three great tragedies to which I have alluded. It might not have prevented them; it will not prevent all crime in the future, Mr. President; but that it will be an additional safeguard and go some way toward preserving from violence and attack the occupant of the Presidential office there can be no possible doubt.

One of the distinguished Senators in opposition said yesterday that the bill suggested imperialism. How frequently we have heard that word in the last few years! In season and out of season it has been invoked. It never occurred to me, Mr. President, that in the contemplation of this penal measure the word "imperialism" could possibly enter into the debate. But here it is. In what does the imperialism consist, and where in this measure, drafted by the able and distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], is there lurking any suggestion of imperialism? It is in the seventh section, and what is that? Is this section a strange, unnatural, and unreasonable provision? Let us see. I find nothing occult about it; I find nothing strange about it. In the language of that section—

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to select and detail from the Regular Army a sufficient number of officers and men to guard and protect the person of the President of the United States.

Would there have been the same criticism about it if there should have been a detail of detectives from the Secret Service? Would there have been any suggestion of imperialism had the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts so drafted the bill as to authorize the Secretary of War or any other Cabinet officer to designate private citizens for the protection of the person of the President? No. The mere fact that the detail is to be made from the Army of the United States is made the basis of the charge of imperialism.

Mr. President, I have not that fear of the Army of our country which seems to possess our friends in opposition. During the few years of my presence here I have heard the Army arraigned and held up to the condemnation of the world as being a grave menace to the liberties of the people of the United States. When the Secretary of War, under the authority granted by the section of the bill just read, shall detail officers and men from the Army he will detail men of capacity, not tyrants, not our arch enemies, but men sworn to obey the law, men who, out of their love for the Government, are willing and ready always to lay down their lives that it may not perish or suffer dishonor.

One of the opposing Senators—I believe it was the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK]—said yesterday that this section was repugnant to our democratic theories of government; contrary to the genius of our institutions; that the President would be surrounded by bayonets, and that there would be on all occasions the manifestation of military power and military display. No, Mr. President; that is unnecessary under the carefully guarded and wise provisions of this section.

The author of this bill, in order to guard against that very charge and that very possibility has written here the significant words "without any unnecessary display." And furthermore—

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to make special rules and regulations as to dress, arms, and equipment, and duties of said guard, and shall publish only such parts of said rules and regulations as he may deem proper.

The detail may be appareled in civilian dress; they may attend the President or they may not, in the wise discretion of the Secretary of War. When there is need for protection it will be furnished as it is furnished now by another Department of the Government, and if there be at any time great peril—and we can see but a little way into the future—here upon the statute books is the authority placed in the hands of the Secretary of War to make such adequate provision as in his judgment is necessary to save the people from the loss of the President of the United States.

Mr. President, the measure is a brief one, and it seems to me an eminently judicious and wise one. There are no harsh provisions in it. There is no suggestion of cruelty in it, as was indicated by the honable Senator from Colorado. It deals with as grave and serious a subject as can engage our attention. There is no precedent for it. Now is the time to make a precedent. The supreme power is in the Congress of the United States. The bill will not accomplish all. It will not be an absolute insurance against assault upon the President and others in the line of succession; but we may indulge the hope that it will in some measure better safeguard the President who, by the suffrage of his countrymen, has become the embodiment of the majesty and power of the great Republic.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, nobody seems inclined to take the floor just now, and I should like to put on record by itself what I think I have said before with respect to the theory on which the committee went in including the Cabinet officers. We considered that when the law settled what was the necessary precaution in having at hand to succeed to the Presidential office other officials in case the Presidency and Vice-Presidency were both vacant, it settled what officer should be surrounded with such securities, whatever they were, as we thought fit to give to the executive power of the Government.

If the matter had rested as the Constitution left it before Congress had passed any law, with the President and Vice-President alone, we should have stopped there in enacting this security, but as with the almost universal acceptance of the people we have concluded that there should be seven high officials besides upon whom that office might devolve, we have included them, so that if there should be another and successful conspiracy like that against Lincoln, or another and a successful conspiracy like the Thistlewood case, where they expected to destroy the whole Cabinet, there should be a punishment for it, if it were aimed against all the persons whom we had provided might succeed, or if without conspiracy there were an attempt at the same time to destroy each one of these officials.

Now, suppose Lincoln had been slain and Johnson had been slain, as that most dangerous conspiracy purposed, and Stanton had been slain. One of the conspirators went to Stanton's house. It was intended to strike down the Cabinet. Finding Grant with him, who had gone in just before to the room where Stanton was alone, the ruffian retreated without accomplishing his purpose. That is not unlikely in times of great excitement and turmoil. So it seems to me that whenever we say there shall be an officer ready to take the Executive office in case those coming before him fall, we ought also when we come to say that the crime against the Executive office shall be treated as a crime against the Government of the United States, the same limitations should apply; and that is the theory on which the committee went.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, replying most briefly to the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts in reference to the theory upon which section 1 was made a part of this bill, I only wish to observe that while the theory as expressed by him is certainly most commendable, we must judge all acts from the standpoint of their natural operation, and when I see such a wide divergence between the theory and the operation of this bill, I can hardly allow the theoretical conclusion of the committee to bind me in supporting the bill if the operation is entirely antagonistic to it.

Mr. President, in all sincerity I asked the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] the simple question whether or not he considered a mere assault with intent to kill, without even endangering or taking the life of the Attorney-General, an assault against the Government itself, as against our sovereignty. His answer was predicated upon the theory that the Attorney-General and all of those who would take precedence in falling into this official position in case of the death of the President would all be wiped off the face of the earth substantially at one time. The question I presented, however, was the simple one whether or not an assault upon the Attorney-General, such as is provided in section 2 of the bill, which is punishable by death, while all of the other officers were still in existence, would be either a blow against the sovereignty or could be construed as in any way endangering the line of succession.

There can be but one answer to that question, and that is a negative answer. An assault to-day upon the Attorney-General or the Secretary of the Interior, simply with intent to kill him, where that attempt is not carried into effect, would not in any way affect the matter upon whom the office would devolve, because the President would still hold it. I speak of this, certainly, not from a partisan standpoint. I am sorry I can not agree with the majority upon this side of the Chamber, but my objection is not to the constitutionality but the advisability of section 2 of the bill. I have noticed that nearly all those persons who have spoken on the subject confined themselves to the President. I agree with them there. I agree with this bill so far as it seeks to protect the life of the President, but it does seem to me to be unjust, it does seem to me more or less inhumane when a mere assault with intent to kill one person, seventh in the line of succession, not carried into effect in the slightest degree, results in the gallows for that individual. But I object to it more particularly because it raises one class of citizens above another in the operation of all of the laws of the United States, and on that ground alone, and so far as it pertains to section 2 alone, I find the bill objectionable.

Mr. HOAR. The Attorney-General may not be seventh in the line of succession. He may be first after the Vice-President. The person who may succeed is only the Cabinet officer who has been appointed, by the advice and consent of the Senate, and has taken the oath. This condition is likely to happen in time of disturbance, at the coming in of a new President. For instance, take the case of President Hayes. Suppose the Attorney-General is the only member of the Cabinet who has taken the oath——

Mr. MCCUMBER. I can answer that.

Mr. HOAR. And the Vice-President has not taken the oath; that he is sick. The Attorney-General might be second.

Mr. MCCUMBER. If all of the lives of the others have been destroyed——

Mr. HOAR. They have gone out.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Whether they have gone out or otherwise, by a violent death by reason of the act of any person, he may be punished by death. If, on the other hand, he goes further than that, and if all the rest have gone out, if you can possibly conceive of a condition of that character, then if a man kills the Attorney-General he will be punished by death under the first subdivision, and if he simply makes an assault it does not destroy the line of succession, and therefore we need not impose such a heavy penalty as the death penalty for a mere assault, say, with intent to kill.

Mr. HOAR. The object of this bill is to suppress the crime against the Government by making a serious impairment or endangering of its operations, and if it be proper to punish the crime of attempting to kill the President, then the question is whether you should go beyond that, and if so, how far? Now it seems to me that you should go beyond it to include all the persons whom the law includes as entitled to the succession in any contingency, making seven persons besides the President and Vice-President. The case of President Hayes's succession excited great public feeling. There was at the time a threat by a very worthy and enthusiastic gentleman to bring a hundred thousand Kentuckians here to stop that performance.

Now, suppose after the old Cabinet had gone out and President Grant had gone out, too, and the Vice-President, those attempts had been made. There might very naturally have been a time when President Hayes's Cabinet had not got here from their various places of residence and that nobody but the Attorney-General would be here. Some unexpected thing always happens in such cases. Instead of speculating on what is probable or what may happen, it seems to me the statesmanlike and the business-like way is to say we will have so many persons ready to take it up, and then we will protect them alike by what we deem sufficient legal securities.

I think one of the most comforting things that was said to the people in my part of the country when President McKinley died, and there was a terrible feeling of insecurity and danger to the Republic, nobody knowing how far the anarchists' schemes might spread, that "you can not endanger this Republic. There are nine strong men, of whom you have destroyed but one. Eight in succession are ready to take up the burden and carry out the policy which the American people have indorsed in their recent election." Now, that was a comforting thought. I think the fact that our strand did not consist of one or two or three threads only, but that there were nine, was a comforting thought.

That being true, is it not also true, if that is a reasonable arrangement, that whatever security is proper and constitutional and reasonable and republican for one of these, should be provided for them all? It is very likely that at a time when these offenses are most likely to happen one of the latest on the list in the succession statute may be the only man who stands between the Presidency and the interruption of the executive power.

Mr. McCUMBER. But, Mr. President, according to the terms of this bill it does not stop in its operation at the mere matter of the Attorney-General or any of these other officers being killed because they would be next in succession, and it seems to me if that is the intention of the framers of this bill it should be limited to the cases where such killing would operate to break the line of succession. A mere assault upon the Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary of the Interior to-day would neither endanger nor would it operate to break the line of succession in any way whatever, and hence if that is the object, why not word the bill so that it will correspond with the object as expressed by the Senator from Massachusetts?

But he goes further and makes the mere assault upon any of these other persons, independent of whether or not it affects the succession, a crime punishable by death, and to that extent places them entirely upon a different standing from other American citizens without the virtue of a necessity in order to protect the succession. That is the effect.

Mr. HOAR. If it were not for my profound respect for the Senators who are convinced by the argument, I do not think I should let the notion that we ought to put into this bill that a crime is committed "because of the official character of the person" impress me very seriously. Suppose somebody burns a United States court-house or post-office or puts a bomb in it. He means to destroy the thing, and he knows that the destruction of the thing will give injury to the property of the United States. Did anybody ever hear that you should put into the criminal law that if he did it because it was a court-house of the United States or because it was a post-office of the United States he was to be tried in a Federal court, and if he did not, he should be tried in a State court? The man knowingly and maliciously does or tries do what is an offense against the Government.

In the case of the Secretary of the Interior or the Attorney-General, he tries to destroy, and knows he is trying to destroy, one of the legal safeguards which Congress in its wisdom deems necessary to the Presidential office. We say that anybody who strikes at any one of them shall be punished for an offense against the people of the United States. The man, Mr. Knox, is not taken into a class, but the great office, which is what we are protecting, the Constitution and laws have made something different from the position of a private citizen.

Neither the Senator from North Dakota nor I claim any distinction from our neighbors and friends when we go home. But nobody can arrest either of us here or when we go or come for a debt, and no court can seize upon us for trial or punishment for anything but treason or felony or breach of the peace. Does the Senator from North Dakota think he is in a class or that I am in a class or that the republican framers of the Constitution meant to create a class when they said that when the Senate is in session or I am going or coming to or from attendance here my creditor should not take me for debt, and that no court should call upon me as a witness or should punish me for contempt or should imprison me for any offense, even perjury or assault, however heinous, unless it were a felonious assault, because I was in a class? It is because the office of Senator of the United States is necessary for the welfare of the American people and the functions of that office shall not be interrupted by anybody. That is what the Constitution did.

Now, the proposed law says that there shall be no interruption in the Executive function, or as little interruption as the law of humanity will admit, for the protection of the American people. If a man is sentenced to be hung to-morrow in Providence, R. I., and some evidence come which shows he was an innocent man, so that there should be a respite or a pardon within an hour to save the man's life, the law says that man shall not go to his death because we can not have a President of the United States for a week. If news come by telegraph that our legation in China is in deadly peril and that men, women, and children are in danger of having their throats cut by a barbarous mob, this law says there shall be somebody in Washington who in fifteen minutes can order our troops from the Philippine Islands to go to the rescue, and we shall not wait a week.

How many men are we to have ready to succeed, one after another, that that great power and function may not fail? The Congress of the United States, lately on the fullest consideration, said there ought to be nine. If there ought to be nine men ready, counting the existing President, there ought to be nine men whose lives shall be safe against criminals who try to strike at the security of the Government, and those nine should be protected by law as far as possible. If the law be reasonable, it is reasonable in its application to everyone. If the law be unreasonable, it is unreasonable in its application to anyone.

But I can not see, as I said before, any foundation for the suggestion that there is a class. Did Grover Cleveland and Benjamin Harrison, when they passed out of that portal, constitute a class? They went back as equals to the equal citizenship from whence they came. But when they are in that building, clothed with the Presidential office, it is the dignity and the majesty of the American people which is theirs, and which we are bound in their persons to protect.

We protect the flag from outrage. Is one bit of bunting or one bit of silk any better than another? Not at all. But when you put the Stars and Stripes on it and it floats at the head of a regiment of American soldiers it is the dignity and authority of the American people of which it is the symbol. Then if a man aim a blow or a shot at it, if he would tear it or rend it or soil it or haul it down where it is rightfully representing freedom and justice and the doctrine of the United States Constitution, he is committing the one intolerable and inexpressible outrage which it is possible for any man to commit. Is it any less an intolerable and inexpressible outrage when a man strikes at the dignity and authority of the American people as it is clothed and embodied and represented in the person of the living citizen whom the American people themselves have selected and chosen as their honored and lawful representative?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair). The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there are no further amendments the bill will be reported to the Senate. The Chair understands that the unanimous agreement was that no vote should be taken before 4 o'clock. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. ALDRICH. If there is no one to speak further upon the pending bill, I ask that it be informally laid aside and that we may proceed with the further consideration of the revenue repeal bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island? The Chair hears none.

REPEAL OF WAR-REVENUE TAXATION.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10530) to repeal war-revenue taxation, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the final passage of the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, this bill comes to the Senate with the unanimous report of the Committee on Finance. It involves wiping off the statute books the special taxes levied or provided for the war with Spain. There is one item in it differing from all others, inasmuch as it is a tariff item. If it were not that any strenuous effort which I might have made in regard to this tariff item might have provoked a tariff debate and in some measure jeopardized the repeal of these war taxes I would not have consented to let the bill reach its present stage without offering an amendment. I do not propose to offer an amendment, but I desire to present briefly to the Senate some reasons why section 50 of the old law, which is repealed, ought to remain upon the statute books.

I will say in this connection that, while I doubt whether even at the next session of Congress there will be any tariff legislation or an attempt at tariff legislation, I shall at the very earliest opportunity seek to have section 50 of the war-revenue act, or something similar to it, remain upon the statute books or be reenacted. Section 10 of the bill under consideration provides:

That section 50 of the act of June 13, 1898, be repealed, to take effect January 1, 1903.

As to the other items in the bill I believe the repeal is to go into effect on the 1st of July next. Section 50 of the act of June 13, 1898, reads as follows:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon tea when imported from foreign countries a tax of 10 cents per pound.

I will state the reasons why I think a duty on tea is a perfectly proper and legitimate and, in fact, one of the most legitimate tariff duties we have, and it ought to be continued.

In the first place, if we remove this duty on tea, which we are going to do unless we should reenact the law next December, the tea now in the country will be immediately enhanced in value to the amount of the remitted duty. This is about $9,000,000, and the owners of that tea—the importers—will be benefited to that extent, which is a vicious thing to do.

The next reason is that, having lost this $9,000,000 revenue which we derive, we will to that extent reduce the source of income which may be in the near future very necessary. We are discussing here, or intend to discuss at some time, I hope, an act for the construction of an isthmian canal. But without discussing any ulterior uses of money in the Treasury, it is always a handy thing to have plenty of it there and not be facing a deficit, as we were some few years back. When we receive into the Treasury an amount which causes nobody any damage and which indirectly, by reason of certain conditions, may prove the means of creating a new industry or of establishing diversified agriculture in the South, I think it appeals or should appeal very strongly to the good sense of the Senate. It is well understood——

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator allow me a question for information?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. PETTUS. Does the Senator intentionally say that if we repeal this duty the tea now in the United States will be enhanced in value? If so, I should like to know it. That is what he said, but I thought perhaps it was a slip.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suppose there is tea in bond upon which the duty has not been paid. The Senator will not pretend to deny that at the expiration of the period named that tea thus held will get the benefit of the remitted duty before it reaches the consumer.

Mr. PETTUS. But the Senator spoke of increasing the value of the tea on which the duty had been already paid to the amount of $9,000,000. He said that that tea would be increased in value.

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not speak of the tea upon which the duty had already been paid, because I do not think that that will be the effect. I am speaking of the tea that is in the country. I did not intend to convey the idea that taking this tax off was going to increase the value of the tea, because I do not believe that. That is an absurdity. What I intend to say, and what I thought I did say, is that by taking this tariff off of tea of 10 cents a pound the tea that is now in the country and in bond would go to the consumer at practically the same price, and the importers or the owners of it would get the advantage of the $9,000,000. That is all I wish to say.

It is stated by those who are most familiar with this subject that the tariff on tea has improved the quality of the imports and has not in the least degree raised the price, and that we simply have by reason of this tariff tax obtained an improved or better quality of tea than we ever had before when we were getting it free of duty. I have here the official statements of several tea experts employed by the Government. Mr. William Penn Nixon, collector of customs at the port of Chicago, under date of December 30, 1901, says:

Replying to the letter of the Treasury Department dated the 14th instant, herewith inclosed, asking for information in regard to tea, for transmission to Mr. George Hewlett, chairman of the board of tea experts, I have the honor to say that I have consulted with the tea examiner relative to the subject-matter, and to report that in his opinion the tea imported since the imposition of the 10 cents per pound duty has been of higher grade, on the average, than that imported prior thereto. It has also eliminated, to a great extent, the attempted importations of teas of very low grade, which was common in 1897 and previous years.

There are two other similar statements from the Government collectors which I will ask to have inserted as bearing upon this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The matter referred to is as follows:

From Mr. I. McGay, United States examiner of teas, port of New York, N. Y., dated December 19, 1901:

"In compliance with your request to be informed as to the quality of teas now being imported into this port as compared with previous years, I have to state from my personal knowledge that the class of teas now being entered at this port for consumption, and more especially importations of the past four years, are of much better quality, on the average, than that of previous years, and that more pure, good teas are now being imported than at any time since the enactment of the law of March 2, 1897."

From Mr. C. Toohey, United States examiner of teas, port of San Francisco, Cal., dated December 20, 1901:

"The Department has requested me to advise you as to the quality of teas now being imported into this port comparing favorably or not with imports of former years. I beg to state that the qualities have improved steadily, so that there are seldom causes presented at this time for rejections by the regular importers through this port."

Mr. TILLMAN. So it follows, if I am not in error, that this duty on tea has secured for the Treasury $9,000,000, and it has obtained for the consumer the better quality of tea, and it has not raised the price a particle.

Now, then, if that be true, it seems to me that we are getting a benefit here to the consumer and getting a benefit to the Government. The tariff is purely a revenue tariff, which my friends on my left must, of course, consider as a very necessary and desirable quality in any tariff, and which ought not to be objectionable to my friends on my right when no other interest is injured and one little baby of an industry is possibly benefited. It is for the reason that I desire to present to my friends the protectionists in this Chamber that phase of it that I have concluded to speak at all.

Every government in Europe, at least all the principal European governments, has found it a legitimate and proper source of taxation. The Russian Government levies 45 cents per pound, and it is well known that by reason of the high quality necessary for tea to be able to bear that burden the Russians have the best tea in the world. The Chinese and all the other tea growers send their best tea to Russia. The duty on tea in France is 21 cents; in Germany it is 11 cents; in Austria-Hungary it is 20 cents; in Spain it is 28 cents; in Portugal, 48 cents; in Norway, 24 cents; in England, 8 cents. None of those countries make any tea. They regard tea as a proper and legitimate source of taxation.

Mr. President, to show that this tariff on tea has been of no injury to anybody, but that in spite of it the consumption has increased, I will give here the withdrawal from the bonded warehouses for the last four years:

From June 13, 1898, to June 30, 1899, when the war revenue went into effect, there were withdrawn from bonded warehouses 48,934,990 pounds. There was supposed to be of the estimated stock of free tea—that is, tea that has come in without any duty at that time—25,000,000 pounds on hand, making something like 73,000,000 or 74,000,000 pounds for the consumption of that year.

The withdrawals for the next twelve months, from July 1, 1899, to June 30, 1900, were 79,976,745 pounds.

From July 1, 1900, to June 30, 1901, it was 83,613,402 pounds, and for the six months from July 1 to December 31, 1901, 43,525,936 pounds, or an estimated average of 87,051,972 for the current year, showing that the tariff has not decreased consumption. According to our experts it has increased the quality. We have $9,000,000 which seem to have dropped out of the sky, you might say, or rather has come to us without any harm or injury to anyone. The price has not gone up.

So why do you repeal this duty on tea? The only reason that I can see is because it was mixed in with the war-revenue bill, and we are endeavoring, as we all desire to do, to get rid of all the war taxes, at least this batch—I believe this is the last lot. But I do not propose to obstruct or bring into the discussion a tariff debate which would be prolific in amendments offered to this bill to repeal the tariff on this and to change the tariff on that and to do all kinds of things which some of us think ought to be done. Even on the other side of the Chamber, I think Senators will acknowledge that we have some articles upon which the tariff is too high and which they would be willing to lower if they were in the business just now of tariff tinkering.

There is another aspect of this matter. Away back, along in the administration of Mr. Le Duc, Commissioner of Agriculture at that time, an effort was set on foot in South Carolina to test the practicability of making tea in that climate and in that country by one of our distinguished scientists, I will say, because there is no better chemist in the United States, I expect, than Dr. Charles U.

Shepard. He has devoted his time and money and attention to this subject. Being a kind of retired business man, having quit his profession actively, and having plenty of this world's goods, he took up the culture of tea as a fad.

After the expiration of Mr. Le Duc's term, and the indifference with which two or three of his successors had treated the experiment, he pursued it with great ardor, and four or five years ago he had so far succeeded that the Senate, at my suggestion, appropriated a certain amount of money in the Agricultural appropriation bill to lend Government aid to his experiments with machinery and the methods of manipulation, so as to demonstrate, if possible, the practicability of the land in our section of the country being made profitable by tea culture and the use of negro children as laborers in picking the leaves.

I submit the following letter from Dr. Shepard on this subject:

OFFICE OF SPECIAL AGENT TEA CULTURE,
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT AGRICULTURE,
Pinehurst, Summerville, S. C., February 20, 1902.

MY DEAR SIR: I would most respectfully ask your assistance in defeating the repeal of the war tax on foreign teas so wisely and welcomely established by yourself. Under its kind assistance, and that of Congress in providing funds for experimentation in tea culture, the hope of successfully launching a new industry in the Southern States has favorably progressed. In this immediate neighborhood a tea estate of 1,000 acres is being gradually established, and foreign capitalists are seeking to invest $200,000 in another.

In addition to numerous smaller undertakings, correspondence with the officers of some of the leading trunk lines of the South and Southwest leads me to believe that they will locate large experimental tea estates along their railroads.

But the repeal of the tax on foreign teas will deprive American growers of assistance equivalent to the difference in the cost per pound of tea between the local and oriental price of labor, and not only discourage those who have embarked in this industry which promised so well for them, as it also did for idle hands and waste places in the Southern States, but prevent others who are now favorably considering the project from attempting to follow them.

Yours, very respectfully,

CHARLES U. SHEPARD,
Special Agent for Tea Culture.

HON. BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

I have here the last report of our present able and most practical Secretary of Agriculture, a man whose common sense appeals to the respect of everyone who comes in contact with him, and this is his official statement as to the present status:

In my last report attention was called to the efforts being made by the Department in the production of tea. For several years Dr. Charles U. Shepard, a public-spirited citizen of Summerville, S. C., has been experimenting with a view of obtaining information as to the practicability of producing American tea, and his efforts promised so much of value that it seemed proper for the Department to render assistance in certain directions. To this end arrangements were made with Dr. Shepard whereby certain machinery, etc., were to be furnished in order to settle some questions pertaining to the commercial production of tea.

Throughout the work the question of labor has been an important one; but through Dr. Shepard's efforts there has been adopted a method for utilizing the labor of colored children. What Dr. Shepard has accomplished in this matter in his region could undoubtedly be brought about in other sections of the South, where much idle labor is awaiting proper utilization. Dr. Shepard has established schools on his place, and in these the children are received and educated, and at the same time are taught to pluck tea and perform other work in connection with the production of the crop. For such work fair wages are paid, and in this way interest is maintained.

The experiments so far conducted have shown that tea may be produced in the United States in two ways: (1) By families in their gardens, as was demonstrated years ago to be entirely feasible, and (2) on a commercial scale, after the manner followed by the British East Indian tea establishments and the beet-sugar industry.

The work at Summerville was started with a view of ascertaining whether under favorable conditions tea plantations could be made to yield as much as the average oriental production, and whether the crop could be marketed at a fair profiit. The results obtained have been affirmative, the crop of 1900, although not so large as expected early in the season, exceeding that of any previous year by at least 12 per cent, and the entire product being sold before it was all gathered to a prominent Northern distributing house at a price that gave a fair profit.

As further evidence that tea can be profitably grown in the United States, capitalists are already making preparations to begin the work in certain parts of the South on a more or less extensive scale. A company with a capital of $50,000 is being organized, and will endeavor to secure a location having soil and climatic conditions adapted to the growth of tea, and where labor, such as Dr. Shepard utilizes, can be secured.

From what has already been accomplished it has been shown that a good grade of tea can be grown and put on the market in bulk at a cost not exceeding 15 cents per pound. Under average conditions an acre will yield 400 pounds of marketable tea, and this, at 15 cents per pound, would make the expense of growing it $60 per acre. The tea should sell in bulk for at least 30 cents per pound, and the profit on this basis would be 100 per cent. Besides the cost of marketing, however, there are other expenses to be considered, namely, the salary of a superintendent and the interest of the money invested in the plant, which would, of course, cut down the profits.

The Secretary does not mention anything about the interest on the money invested in the land itself. He continues:

From the foregoing it seems that the commercial possibilities of tea production in this country can no longer be questioned, but there are still many points to be settled, especially as regards the improvement of the product. During the past year experiments have been undertaken for the purpose of determining the effect of irrigation on tea and of shading the plants from the direct rays of the sun. Work has also been inaugurated with a view of reducing the cost of the preparation of tea, especially the green tea. The experiments in irrigating and shading, which will be continued, have given promising results, the shaded plants giving nearly double the yield of the unshaded, and a much finer grade of leaf.

In the future special attention will be given to the manufacture of pure green tea. This subject is now claiming the attention of both inventors and planters in the British colonies, as they begin to realize the hopelessness of bringing American tea drinkers to use the black tea instead of the green. The manufacture of green tea in the United States can be made successful only by the invention of machinery which shall take the place of expensive hand labor and prevent the waste which accompanies the latter. These questions are all being investigated by the Department, etc.

Mr. President, the point to which I desire to attract the attention of Senators is that we have in South Carolina and necessarily in the whole Southern belt a very large negro population. In this especial neighborhood, where Dr. Shepard's tea plantation lies, the relative proportion of whites and blacks is about seven to one—seven negroes to one white person. Along the entire coast belt in my State, where this tea will be grown, if ever, that is about the proportion of negro people to white people.

Merely alluding in passing to the possibilities of the utilization of this labor, which is now running to waste and largely in a very pauperized and miserable condition, I will pass on to the other phase, to which I ask the especial attention of the Republicans in this Chamber. That party has stood almost since its organization for protection to American industries, for the assistance of all the infant industries that are promising, that would enable Americans to produce what Americans consume. If there is any one subject upon which Republicans all are dyed in the wool, it is probably the protective idea.

You have carried that theory to such an extent that, notwithstanding it is contended—and I think with great truth and force—that protection has gone mad, and that we are now not satisfied with giving the infants the bottle, but that after the infants are grown and have become giants any effort to take the bottle away or to take away the beef or whatever other food they feed upon and grow so fat raises a howl; and when, by reason of the fact that they are protected against foreign competition, they have come together in combinations, organizing trusts to monopolize the American market and force the consumers to pay the combination or monopoly any price they see fit to charge, which shall not exceed the cost price plus the tariff and plus the transportation charges, nothing seems to be farther from the thought of the Republicans in this Chamber than any reform of the tariff which shall give the consumers of the United States relief from these overgrown tariff infants that have become such gluttons.

But here is a poor, little, measly Southern tariff baby, with only one protected citizen, so far, one South Carolinian, who is getting 10 cents a pound protection, but whose efforts in a scientific way have so far demonstrated the practicability and successful inauguration of a new industry there, and it is proposed to strike that from the statute books and leave on those books all of these other trust-protected industries or schedules.

Having called your attention to the fact that we have a little baby in South Carolina that might, with your assistance and benevolence, yield some aid and comfort to those little colored children in the way of calico frocks, handkerchiefs, ribbons, and a little better food, and in time enable capital to go into those lands, which are now selling for from only one to five dollars an acre, and by training the negroes in planting tea, have that region blossom like the rose; and notifying you that, whenever an opportunity offers, if I am in this Chamber, I propose to press for a tariff both on tea and on coffee—although we have not any coffee plantations down there, yet we have got some in Porto Rico, we are going to have some in the Philippines, and we have got some in Hawaii—but as a Democrat, desirous of having a revenue tariff mainly, with incidental protection, I will let this bill come to a vote and subside for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT BUFFALO, N. Y.

Mr. DEPEW. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 3148) for a marine hospital at Buffalo, N. Y., which was favorably reported this morning by the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PETTUS. I want to suggest to the Senator from New York that I think he has got a few words in the bill which are too broad. The bill provides that the State of New York shall cede jurisdiction over the proposed site to the United States "for all purposes." That is never done in these cases. The jurisdiction is ceded to the United States, but not for all purposes. I merely suggest to the Senator from New York that he leave out of the bill the words "for all purposes.

Mr. DEPEW. This is a House bill, and if amended it will have to be returned to that body.

Mr. PETTUS. Such words are never inserted in bills of this character. The States always maintain the right to execute process and things of that sort. It is sufficient if jurisdiction is ceded to the United States, but if ceded "for all purposes" it would not be possible for the State to exercise any jurisdiction whatever.

Mr. DEPEW. The State of New York is perfectly willing and anxious to have the United States have this land for all purposes.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, if you have a United States building in which the United States has exclusive jurisdiction "for all purposes," then anybody may go there to escape a constable or to commit any small offense day or night. You will have a little Alsatia in a populous city, because you have nothing but United States law and United States authority there.

Mr. DEPEW. Then, Mr. President, I will move to strike from the bill, on page 2, line 1, the words "for all purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 1, after the word "same," it is proposed to strike out "for all purposes;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise procure a suitable site, and cause to be erected thereon, at the city of Buffalo, N. Y., a suitable and commodious building for a marine hospital (the plans and estimates for said building to be prepared, examined, and approved in accordance with the law in such cases made and provided), at a total cost which shall not exceed the sum of $135,000 when finally completed: Provided, That no money appropriated for said building shall be used until a valid title to the site selected shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of New York shall have ceded jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be and remain the owner thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MARY F. KEY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11145) granting an increase of pension to Mary F. Key.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary F. Key, widow of Richard S. Key, late of Company D, Palmetto Regiment, South Carolina Volunteer Infantry, war with Mexico, and to pay her a pension of $16 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, in section 3, page 2, line 11 of the bill, the word "instigate" should be stricken out and the words "aid, abet" substituted. That change was ordered by the Senate wherever the word "instigate" occurs, but it seems to have escaped the notice of the clerks. I ask unanimous consent that that modification be now made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, section 3, line 11, after the word "shall," it is proposed to strike out "instigate" and insert "aid, abet."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill, as a new section, the following:

SEC. —. The advocacy or encouragement of the assassination of an officer of the United States, or the executive head of a foreign government, that is evidenced by any act or declaration that is so intended, is a crime against the United States, and is punishable by imprisonment at hard labor for a period not to exceed fifty years. And it shall not excuse the act or declaration that is made criminal by this act, that it is not directed at any particular individual, but includes and is directed at any person who may hold such office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" have it.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment may be again read. It has not been printed, I believe. I hope we shall have order in the Senate when it is being read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment of Mr. MORGAN.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, under the rule I believe five minutes' debate is in order, but I rise really for information. I have listened with very great care to the reading and endeavored to grasp the scope of that amendment. I desire to ask the distinguished author of it whether the purpose of that amendment and the effect of it, if adopted, would be to make it a crime to advocate the assassination of any officer of the United States of any one of the departments?

Mr. MORGAN. That is right.

Mr. BACON. In other words, to make it a crime to advocate the assassination of any officer either of the legislative, executive, or judicial departments of the Government.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir; that is the intention of it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not know what the effect of that amendment will be, but apparently it is to enlarge this bill very much beyond the scope of what anybody during this debate has thought good policy, even though we might have the power to enact it. I think I shall vote "nay" on it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, when I first heard that amendment read I thought it provided a penalty of fifteen years and not fifty years, and it struck me that there was no great objection to it; but the more I think of it the more it seems to me that it is not wise to go beyond this bill for the protection of the Executive office and go into the general question of protecting all the officers of this Government and foreign countries. We want to have such a provision in a separate measure, well considered, and containing, very likely, a good deal more than this provision. I think the putting into any penal legislation a provision that the maximum penalty shall be fifty years' imprisonment will strike the public rather unpleasantly. So I shall vote against it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts if there is not pending before the Judiciary Committee a bill dealing with this general subject which will receive consideration?

Mr. HOAR. There is pending a bill for that purpose, covering the whole matter of anarchy and the overthrow of all public authority.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I feel very much more concerned in repressing anarchy and assassination than I do in punishing somebody who has committed the act itself. We are much more concerned in that. This country has got to be a sort of place of refuge for men who come here and concoct anarchy and assassination and proclaim it from the house tops; they organize societies, and, under the existing law, unless you can trace up a conspiracy to commit a special murder upon a special person they entirely escape all punishment and all recognition as criminals.

Now, there are some anarchists in this country to-day, avowed and open-mouthed anarchists, who ought to be locked up for life. Yet if the Senator from Massachusetts objects to locking a man up for life and wants to lock him up for fifteen years only, I will amend this amendment, with his permission and the consent of the Senate, so as to reduce the extreme penalty to fifteen years.

But this amendment, Mr. President, if we will put it into this bill, will show a purpose on the part of the Congress of the United States to stop this business of cultivating anarchy in secret meetings and in public meetings also, which is now pervading the whole of large neighborhoods in this country, doing enormous mischief and bringing us into a state of suspicion with foreign governments.

The assassination of the late King of Italy seemed to be directly attributable to a combination that was formed in New Jersey. That is the opinion of the world, and I share in it; I believe in it. We ought, therefore, to protect foreign executive officers, the heads of governments, against the machinations of the people who find shelter in this free, liberal Republic of ours. Republican institutions are terribly disgraced when they become a resort and place of refuge for anarchists and assassins.

Now, this bill is entirely harmless as to any person who does not intend by the promotion of anarchy, either by act or by word, to commit any mischief whatsoever. A person might perhaps theorize upon the subject of anarchy; but if he has an intention in doing so and in advocating anarchy to make a specific application of it to any officer of the United States Government, he is a criminal, and ought to be so held under the laws of the United States, and ought to be convicted and locked up, I would say, for life. That is my opinion of such a person as that.

This bill furnishes no protection whatever to the judiciary. Do we not remember the terrible trial that we had in the Neagle case in California, where a judge's life was threatened and was actually assailed, or about to be assailed, when a person arose who was an attendant upon that judge and shot the man to death who proposed to assassinate him? Shall we give no shelter to the judiciary of this country, the most exposed men of the land, those who continually come in contact with criminals? Why do we protect our Presidents and Vice-Presidents and members of the Cabinet, and leave the Supreme Court and the Federal judiciary entirely unprotected and unprovided for?

We will not do this country justice, Mr. President, to pass this bill without some provision like that which I have offered. It is very true it has not been considered by a committee, but it is so simple a matter that I can scarcely consider that any lawyer in this body or any person else, even though he be nonprofessional, would want to know anything more about it than merely a statement of the proposition. I have no particular desire to advocate it, but at the same time I think it is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, by inserting "fifteen years," if the Senator from Massachusetts insists upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is modified by changing the term of fifty years to fifteen.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I rose to call the attention of the senior Senator from Massachusetts to the modification, and to ask, therefore, whether the Senator accepts the amendment?

Mr. HOAR. I should like better to have this particular matter dealt with in the bill now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary, which will be a comprehensive one on that subject, but I do not see any objection, particularly, to this amendment now. I am quite indifferent to it. I shall not resist it personally. I am not authorized to accept it for the committee, but I shall not resist it.

Mr. MORGAN. I withdraw the request for the call of the roll if the President pro tempore will put the question to the Senate on a viva voce vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments?

Mr. BACON. I have offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute. Of course, it is not in order if there are other amendments to the original text of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there amendments to the original text of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] has offered some amendments which have been printed. He was called from the Chamber suddenly a few moments ago and asked me to present these amendments on his behalf. There are several, and all of them to the same purpose, and I take it they can all be voted on in gross without objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN], through the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], submits amendments, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Between the words "willfully" and "kill," in line 5 on page 1, insert the following, to wit: "feloniously and of malice aforethought" and strike out the following words in said line, to wit: "or cause the death of."

In lines 8 and 9 on page 1, strike out the words "cause the death of" and insert in lieu thereof the following, to wit: "feloniously and of malice aforethought kill and murder."

Between the words "the" and "killing," in line 3 on page 2, insert the word "felonious;" and in line 8 on same page, between the words "the" and "killing," insert the word "felonious."

In line 18, page 2, strike out the words "threaten to kill or."

In line 19, page 2, between the words "to" and "kill," insert the word "feloniously."

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I hope the amendments will not be adopted. The tendency of legislation in many of the States is to get rid of the word "felonious." They have made in various States new definitions, making the fact whether or not it is a felony depend upon the punishment. We abandoned it in Massachusetts in the year 1852, now fifty years ago. I was myself a member of the legislature, and introduced and carried through the measure striking out the word "felonious" in criminal pleading. The objection is that where you use the word "felonious" you can not join in the same indictment any other form of offense which is not felonious. There are in many jurisdictions provisions about felony; for instance, that the prisoner who is under bail may appear by his counsel and be absent himself, and may plead by counsel unless the matter be a felony. The word does not add anything or subtract anything from the substance of the offense, but it only brings in a great many ancient common-law refinements in modes of procedure which have been found exceedingly embarrassing.

I am not prepared to debate the question without refreshing my memory by looking at the authorities; but I am quite sure that nothing good will be accomplished by it and that a great deal, if not of mischief, at least of inconvenience, will result.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendments were rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any further amendments?

Mr. BAILEY. On behalf of my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON], who has also been unexpectedly called from the Chamber, I desire to submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas submits, on behalf of his colleague, an amendment. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SECTION 1. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, willfully and maliciously kill the President of the United States or the official next in succession to the Presidency under the Constitution and laws of the United States, or who shall willfully and maliciously kill the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, shall be punished with death.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, attempt to commit either of the offenses mentioned in the foregoing section shall be punished with death.

SEC. 3. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, advise or counsel the killing of the President of the United States or the official next in succession to the Presidency under the Constitution and laws of the United States, or shall conspire with any other person to accomplish the same, or who shall advise or counsel the killing of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, or shall conspire with any other person to accomplish the same, shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding twenty years.

SEC. 4. That any person who has conspired as aforesaid may be indicted and convicted separately, although the other party or parties to the conspiracy are not indicted or convicted.

SEC. 5. That any person who shall willfully and knowingly aid in the escape from punishment of any person guilty of either of the offenses mentioned in the preceding sections shall be deemed an accomplice after the fact, and shall be punished as if a principal, although the other party or parties to said offense shall not be indicted or convicted.

Mr. HOAR. I trust the amendment will not be adopted. It strikes out a great deal of the virility of the whole measure. The reasons have been very thoroughly debated. It does not provide the persons in the line of succession except the Vice-President, and it leaves out altogether the care for the person of the President. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. BATE. Before we vote upon the amendment, I desire to move an amendment to the amendment to strike out the word "death," the last word in the second section, and to insert in lieu thereof "imprisonment not exceeding twenty years."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 12, strike out the word "death" where it occurs at the end of the line and insert "imprisonment not exceeding twenty years."

Mr. BATE. That it may be understood, I will state that it is in the section in which the word "attempt" is used. It makes the penalty death for the attempt. I am opposed to that, and that is the reason why I offer the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. I now ask that the amendment offered by me may be placed before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, willfully kill or cause the death of the President or Vice-President of the United States, because of his official position or with the intention to destroy the Government, or any department thereof, or of impairing the execution of its constitutional powers, or who shall willfully and maliciously cause the death of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, shall be punished with death.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, attempt to commit either of the offenses mentioned in the foregoing section shall be punished with death.

SEC. 3. That any person who shall, with the intent aforesaid, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, aid or abet the killing of the President or Vice-President of the United States, or shall conspire with any other person to accomplish the same, or who shall aid or abet the killing of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, or shall conspire with any other person to accomplish the same, shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding twenty years.

SEC. 4. That any person who has conspired as aforesaid may be indicted and convicted separately, although the other party or parties to the conspiracy are not indicted or convicted.

SEC. 5. That any person who shall willfully and knowingly aid in the escape of any person guilty of either of the offenses mentioned in the preceding sections shall be deemed an accomplice after the fact, and shall be punished as if a principal, although the other party or parties to said offense shall not be indicted or convicted.

SEC. 6. That in all cases arising under this act the presumption of law shall be that the killing or causing the death of the President or Vice-President of the United States, or the attempting to kill or cause the death of either of said officers, was because of his official position, and with the intent to destroy the Government, or a department thereof, and to impair the execution of its constitutional powers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BAILEY (when Mr. CULBERSON's name was called). My colleague is unavoidably detained from the Chamber. His regular pair is with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES], but by an arrangement it has been transferred to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. DEPEW (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEITFELD] has a general pair with my colleague [Mr. PLATT of New York]. We have exchanged pairs, and the Senator from Idaho and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FOSTER of Washington (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN]. I transfer the pair to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SIMON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I do not know how he would vote, and I will take the liberty of transferring the pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DRYDEN (when Mr. KEAN'S name was called). My colleague is necessarily absent. He is paired with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. BAILEY (when the name of Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi was called). The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] has been called from the Chamber, and he requested me to state that he is paired regularly with the Senator from Washington [Mr. FOSTER] and that the pair, by agreement and for convenience, had been transferred to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SIMON]. The Senator from Mississippi requested me to state that if present he would vote for any bill or amendment which sought to punish any offender who killed the President or any of the officers intended to be protected by this bill, by reason of their official position, and that he would vote against any proposition which did not recognize that distinction. In accordance with that statement, if he were present he would vote "yea" on this amendment.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. QUARLES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. I transfer the pair to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a regular pair with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. I understand a mutual agreement has been made whereby the Senator from Washington stands paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]. The pair will remain during the voting. So I shall vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK]. I voted, and I now observe that he is absent. I therefore transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. DIETRICH] and will let my vote stand, and I will vote on subsequent roll calls.

Mr. ALLISON. My colleague [Mr. DOLLIVER] is necessarily absent, and is paired on all questions regarding the bill with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay." I do not know how the Senator from Mississippi would vote.

Mr. BAILEY. In view of the statement of the Senator from Iowa, I desire to state that if the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] were present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 49; as follows:

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, murder the President or Vice-President of the United States, or the official next in succession to the President under the Constitution and laws of the United States, shall be punished with death; and an accessory before or after any such offense shall be deemed a principal and be punished with death; and any such accessory may be indicted, tried, and punished, although the other party or parties to such offense has not or have not been indicted or convicted.

SEC. 4. SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to select and detail from the Regular Army a sufficient number of officers and men to guard and protect the person of the President of the United States without any unnecessary display.

And the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to make special rules and regulations as to dress, arms, and equipment and duties of said guard, and shall publish only such parts of said rules and regulations as he may deem proper.

That the additional expenses of such guard so detailed shall be paid out of the Treasury, on accounts to be certified by the Secretary of War to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN]. If he were present, he would vote "yea." I transfer my pair to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SIMON], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. QUARLES (when his name was called). I desire to renew the statement regarding my pair and its transfer made upon the last vote. I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I desire to state again that I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 18, nays 45; as follows:

YEAS—18.

So Mr. PATTERSON'S amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments?

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all of section 7 and insert:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to employ such number of competent, experienced, and discreet men in the secret-service division of his Department as he may deem necessary to guard and protect the person of the President of the United States and to prevent the consummation of designs and conspiracies against his personal security, and to cause them to be so disposed as at all times to assure as effectually as possible the security of the person of the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. I have an amendment that I desire to offer as a substitute for section 7.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out section 7 and insert the following:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to employ a sufficient number of persons to guard and protect the person of the President of the United States; and he shall make all necessary rules and regulations as he may consider necessary as to equipment and duties of said guard, and shall publish only such parts of said rules and regulations as he may deem proper.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I believe that amendment will accomplish all that is sought or desired by the seventh section. It will not be objectionable, as the seventh section is, because of the use of the Army to perform a purely civil function. It is contrary to American doctrine that the Army should be used except in case of war or in case of extreme violence by large forces. I believe this is better adapted to accomplish what the friends of the bill see fit than the section as it stands in the bill.

I wish to say, however, that, as much as the seventh section is objectionable to me, I propose to vote for the bill, even if this amendment is voted down. I have voted for several amendments to-day that I believed would have greatly improved the bill, but the majority do not seem to be in accord with my views on that subject. I am anxious that some bill shall be passed covering this question. Although I am not satisfied with some features of the bill, I expect to vote for it on its final passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Amend section 2 by striking out all of said section after the word "commit," in line 2 on page 2, and inserting in lieu thereof the words:

Such offense against the President of the United States shall be punished with death.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BACON. Let us see what is the connection. We do not know what is the full purport of the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the clause read as it would read if amended as proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The section will be read as it would stand if amended.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 2, after the word "commit," insert:

Such offense against the President of the United States shall be punished with death.

So that if amended section 2 would read:

That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, attempt to commit such offense against the President of the United States shall be punished with death.

Mr. HOAR. The amendment proposes to leave out everyone except——

Mr. McCUMBER. It simply leaves out everyone except the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HOAR. On the passage of the bill I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when Mr. CULBERSON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] is unavoidably detained from the Senate and is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. ALLISON (when Mr. DOLLIVER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. DOLLIVER] is necessarily absent from the Chamber. If he were present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY].

Mr. FOSTER of Washington (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SIMON] and I vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. Otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. DRYDEN (when Mr. KEAN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. KEAN] is absent and is paired with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. PETTUS (when Mr. MORGAN'S name was called). The senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is absent. He is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9206, known as the oleomargarine bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is that the regular order of business without a motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Vermont makes the motion now.

Mr. BAILEY. Without a motion, I desire to inquire what would be the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. PROCTOR. It is the first bill on the Calendar, at the point reached when the Calendar was last under consideration.

Mr. BAILEY. Then it would be the regular order whenever the Senate proceeded to consider the Calendar?

Mr. PROCTOR. It would be.

Mr. BAILEY. It would be the regular order of business?

Mr. GALLINGER. Under Rule VIII.

Mr. HOAR. Would it not be under the restricted rule as to five minutes' debate, or under Rule VIII?

Mr. BAILEY. I am seeking for information.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Chair if this motion were not made and the bill came up as the first on the Calendar, whether it would not be under the restriction of Rule VIII. So this motion brings it under the general rule of debate.

Mr. CULLOM. It takes it up for consideration without any limitation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What was the inquiry of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether, in the absence of the motion submitted by the Senator from Vermont, this bill would be the regular order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, I desire to inquire of the Chair, if this motion should be voted down what would be the regular order of business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is inclined to think it would be No. 1 on the Calendar. There is no Calendar under Rule IX now; it is all Calendar under Rule VIII; and the first bill under Calendar Rule VIII, passed over without prejudice, is the bill to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia." The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill which will be read by title.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado will state it.

Mr. TELLER. I understood somebody to state—I have not had a chance to look at the RECORD—that this bill is No. 1 on the Calendar, and would come up at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; it is the first bill at the point which has been reached in the morning hour under Rule VIII. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BATE. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont a question about the bill. Does he propose to go on and consider the bill at once?

Mr. PROCTOR. The motion is to take it up for consideration and to make it the unfinished business of the Senate.

Mr. BATE. Not with a view of proceeding with it now?

Mr. PROCTOR. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 9206) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter; also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALDRICH. Pending that, I hope the Senator from Illinois will permit me to make a motion which I think will have general acquiescence. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois withdraw his motion for that purpose?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 24, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 21, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment to bill H. R. 8587 and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, from the Committee on War Claims, asks to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8587, that the House nonconcur in the amendment of the Senate, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know if this is the $3,000,000 amendment that the Senate put onto a little bill of the House involving a few hundred thousand dollars that went over there.

Mr. MAHON. I will say to the gentleman that this is the omnibus bill which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, who made a unanimous recommendation that the House nonconcur in all Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. PAYNE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I believe that that bill ought to be thoroughly discussed in the Committee of the Whole House, and every one of these large claims thoroughly understood by the House before the bill goes to a conference. If the bill goes to a conference, it comes here on a conference report, subject to the previous question, with little time for debate and little time for the House to understand these claims, and therefore I feel compelled to object to the request.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. CALDERHEAD rose.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Yes.

Mr. MAHON. I would like to make another request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will submit it.

Mr. MAHON. This is the day that belongs to war claims. That committee has but one day in a month. I do not want to get in the way of the river and harbor bill, but I think we are entitled to some consideration, and I ask unanimous consent that next Wednesday be given to the War Claims Committee in place of to-day, at which time we can consider this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that next Wednesday be assigned to the War Claims Committee in place of this day.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills.

Mr. MAHON. If the gentleman wants to consider this bill in the Committee of the Whole, I will give him a chance.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills?

Mr. MAHON. No; I am now cutting out a day for an appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, let Wednesday take care of itself when we reach it.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report to the bill (H. R. 9227) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Shafer.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed insert "sixteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. A. CALDERHEAD,
J. N. W. RUMPLE,
J. A. NORTON,

E. W. CARMACK,

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12346, being the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12346, the river and harbor bill, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Detroit River, from Detroit to Lake Erie, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 712, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, and designated as "Plan A," $500,000, of which amount the Secretary of War may expend $10,000 in the said river north and west of Grosse Isle for the deepening of the channel to Wyandotte, Mich.: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,250,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment I desire to offer to this section, but for the purpose of accommodating a member of the committee I ask unanimous consent that I may bring it up at the close of this section and discuss it at that time.

Mr. BURTON. I have no objection, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks that the amendment which he desires to propose may be deferred until the reading of the section is concluded. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Black River, at the mouth, and Rouge River, Michigan: For maintenance, $7,500.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer. In line 10, after the word "river," there be inserted the words "also the harbor of Monroe."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. I also move, Mr. Chairman, that there be inserted as an amendment after line 11, the words which I will send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, after line 11, insert "improving Clinton River, Michigan. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized in his discretion to use any sums heretofore appropriated and now unexpended in extending the channel up to the entrance of the old Clinton and Kalamazoo Canal."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I would say in explanation of that amendment that there is a small balance on hand—about $4,000—to the credit of the Clinton River, and this upper portion of the river seems worthy of improvement; so that the amendment can do no harm, and may do some good. I ask its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Saginaw River, Michigan: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $50,000: Provided, That one-half of said amount may be expended above and one-half below the county line between Saginaw and Bay counties, and of the amount to be expended above said county line the Secretary of War may expend, in his discretion, not to exceed $5,000, from the amount herein appropriated, for improvement above the Saginaw County line, in dredging Shiawassee and Bad rivers up as far as St. Charles, in accordance with House Document No. 135, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to that section.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 68, line 19, omit the words "Saginaw County" and substitute the words "said county."

Mr. BURTON. That is merely to make the section a little plainer in designating the boundary lines.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Middle and West Neebish channels, St. Marys River, Michigan, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 128, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, $500,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be required to prosecute said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $4,000,000, exclusive of the amounts herein appropriated and heretofore appropriated for the improvement of Hay Lake Channel. And the Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to first complete the work on said channel between Hay Lake and Mud Lake.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I desire to have read at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend paragraph with reference to St. Marys River, Michigan, page 69, at the end of line 11, by adding the following:

"Subject to the express precedent conditions hereinafter mentioned, the Michigan-Lake Superior Power Company of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., its successors and assigns, after first obtaining consent of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers and their approval of the said canal and remedial works proposed, is hereby authorized to divert water from the St. Marys River into its water-power canal now being constructed at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., for water-power purposes while and so long as such works and diversion of water from said river shall not injuriously affect navigation therein, nor impair or diminish the water levels or any natural increase thereof, either in Lake Superior or in the United States ship canal and locks or the navigable channels, locks, or ship canals connected therewith, whether natural or artificial, now existing or which may hereafter be established or created by the United States for navigation purposes.

"And conditioned further, that said company shall establish, maintain, and operate suitable and sufficient remedial and controlling works in the rapids of said river to the approval of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers; and said company shall maintain and operate said canal and works in accordance with any rules and regulations that may hereafter be recommended by any international commission and that shall become operative. Whenever in the judgment of the Secretary of War the operation of said canal and remedial and controlling works, or either of them, either in themselves or in conjunction with any other canal or canals in the United States or Canada which now or hereafter may exist, is injuriously affecting water levels or the navigation of Lake Superior, the river St. Marys, or other channels, locks, or ship canals connected therewith as hereinbefore provided, he shall impose upon said company such rules and regulations for the operation of said canal and remedial works as may in his opinion be necessary to prevent such injury.

"It shall become his duty and he shall have the authority to enter upon the property of said company and to close said canal in whole or in part to the extent necessary to maintain water levels and to require said company, at its own expense, to remove, add to, or modify said works or any part thereof to the extent necessary to maintain water levels. Neither the Secretary of War, nor the Chief of Engineers, or any officer or other person acting under direction of them or either of them, shall be in any way liable by reason of anything done in the execution of this provision.

"Any remedies provided, however, shall be cumulative and shall be without prejudice to any other remedies, either of the United States or of individuals, for failure of said company to maintain said levels for navigation purposes as herein provided.

"Nothing herein contained shall be held to affect any existing riparian or other rights of any person or corporation or the existing remedies therefor or any action at law or equity now pending. The right is hereby expressly reserved to Congress to alter, amend, or repeal the provisions contained in this paragraph."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The unexpended balances remaining from appropriations for St. Marys River at the Falls shall be expended as follows: Twenty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, at the Sailors Encampment, with a view to avoid collisions and groundings at that point; $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the salaries and expenses of the commission created by section 4 herein; of the remainder, a sufficient amount may be expended for the completion and further improvement of the St. Clair Flats Canal, heretofore referred to and described in House Document No. 234, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session. The balance remaining after the diversions above set forth shall be expended for the widening and improvement of the St. Marys Falls Canal above the locks, in accordance with the project submitted in House Document No. 128, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session. The provision of section 4 of the act approved June 6, 1900, entitled "An act making provision for emergencies in river and harbor works, etc.," giving authority to divert from the fund herein described an amount not exceeding $100,000 to restore and make available a channel formerly used through Lake George Channel, is hereby repealed.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 69, lines 23 and 24, strike out the words "the balance remaining after the diversions set forth," and insert "so much of the balance remaining after the diversions above set forth as may not be required after completing said project."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Wabash River, Indiana and Illinois, below Vincennes: Continuing improvement, $5,000; which amount, together with the unexpended balance of any appropriations heretofore made for the improvement of said river, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in making a survey and estimate of the cost of improving said Wabash River below Vincennes, with a view to the necessities of commerce.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 71, line 18, after the word "commerce," substitute a comma for a period and insert "and in making a proper examination of Wabash River above Vincennes to Perrysville, also of the Little Wabash River to Carmi, and in case of such preliminary examination favorable report shall be made, the Secretary of War may in his discretion direct detailed surveys of the same to be made."

The amendment was considered, and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Reservoirs at headwaters of the Mississippi River, and Mississippi River between Brainerd and Grand Rapids, Minn.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $250,000, of which amount $10,000 may be expended between Brainerd and Grand Rapids. The amount herein appropriated, except as above provided, and the unexpended balance of former appropriations shall be expended as follows: For the necessary renewal and repair of Winnibigoshish, Leech Lake, and Pokegama Falls reservoir; in making a further investigation, including an examination and survey, of the Pine River and Sandy Lake reservoirs, with a view to determining whether or not it is advisable to renew and repair said reservoirs; in making a further investigation, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, which shall include an examination and survey of Willow River in Aitkin County, to determine the causes of and the means of preventing excessive floods in the river between the Government dam at Sandy Lake and Brainerd, and the effect thereof on navigation; in making full and accurate surveys of the flowage lines of Winnibigoshish, Leech Lake, Pokegama Falls, Sandy Lake, and Pine River reservoirs, and in permanently marking such lines on the ground; not to exceed $75,000 for the purchase of the lands or easements therein which are necessarily subject to overflow by reason of the legitimate operation of said reservoirs when completed

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by substitution, in line 2, on page 76, of the word "reservoirs" for "reservoir," making it plural instead of singular.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Missouri River to St. Paul, Minn.: Continuing improvement, $400,000: Provided, That on and after the passage of this act additional contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry on continuously the systematc improvement of the Mississippi River between the points mentioned, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,200,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated: And provided further, That the amount to be expended upon the improvement of said river between the points mentioned shall be limited to $400,000 per year for four years; and of the amount herein appropriated for said portion of said river there shall be expended the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the improvement of Quincy Bay and for removing the sand bar at the steamboat landing at Quincy, Ill., and the further sum of $10,000 for the maintenance, repair, and riprapping of the natural and artificial banks along the eastern shore of the Mississippi River from Warsaw, Ill., to Quincy, Ill., so far as the same will subserve the maintenance of the navigable channel of the river, and the further sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for dredging the channel and harbor and removing sand bars at Hannibal, Mo., and the further sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the improvement of the harbor at Muscatine, Iowa, and the further sum of $14,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the construction of a harbor of refuge on the east shore of Lake Pepin, in the Mississippi River, according to the project reported October 27, 1891, and the further sum of $1,500 for removing the bar in the Mississippi River at the mouth of Fountain City Bay at the foot of North street, Fountain City, Wis. The $10,000 heretofore appropriated by the sundry civil act of March 3, 1899, for the improvement of the Mississippi River at Davenport, Iowa, with the further sum of $5,000 to be taken from amounts appropriated in this paragraph, shall be applied for the construction of a harbor of refuge from ice at a point at or below the said city of Davenport, and other necessary improvements of said harbor. Hamburg Bay is hereby included in and made a part of the general project for the improvement of the Mississippi River.

Mr. JETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "river," in line 6, page 78, "and the further sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated for the maintenance, repair, and riprapping of the artificial and natural banks of the eastern shore of the Mississippi River opposite the mouth of the Missouri River and extending south therefrom."

Mr. JETT. Mr. Chairman, I have learned that it was the policy of this committee to expend no more money riprapping the banks of various rivers of the country; that it was their object only to look after navigation. I see, however, that they have provided appropriations just preceding this making provisions for the riprapping of the banks of certain rivers. I have been of the opinion, and am now of the opinion, that the interests of transportation ought not only to be looked after, but that the landowners along the river should have their interests and property rights protected. I am frank to say that heretofore some money has been expended on the east bank of the Mississippi River directly opposite where the Missouri enters into the Mississippi. Some money has been expended within the last three or four years—somewhere in the neighborhood of $150,000. Much benefit has been derived by the owners of the property on the Illinois side of the Mississippi River by so doing, and the expenditure of $50,000 more would protect the interests there so that for years and years to come the overflow of these bottom lands would not take place.

The expenditure of the small sum that has been expended protects hundreds and hundreds of acres of very valuable farming land, and the fact is that where the channel of the Mississippi River is to-day only a few years ago was a most magnificent and prosperous orchard, and by reason of the fact of the flowing of the Missouri River at this point into the Mississippi it has destroyed hundreds of acres of exceedingly valuable farming land on the Illinois side. The expenditure of this sum of $50,000 more would protect the farming interests here to such an extent that for years and years no more appropriations would be asked at the hands of the Congress. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to take up the time of the committee, but I believe this is a feasible proposition, and is one in which the people of this section of the country are all interested.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Chairman, I think if I had any prejudice one way or the other it would be in favor of this amendment. The truth about it is, however, that where the Missouri River enters the Mississippi River it has been digging out on the opposite side, the Illinois side, and quite a large area of land has been washed down the river. In the bill that passed in 1896 $50,000 was appropriated to riprap and prevent the further destruction of it in that way, and since that time, if my memory serves me right, a similar amount has been appropriated. Of these amounts appropriated there is to-day an unexpended balance, the precise figures of which I can not give, but somewhere between $20,000 and $30,000.

Mr. JETT. I want to suggest to my friend that one reason why that has not been expended is because it is not enough with which to make any headway. It is not enough money for them to proceed with at this time.

Mr. REEVES. The only embarrassment is here, Mr. Chairman. We called before the committee on this very item the engineer in charge of the Mississippi River at this point, and questioned him upon the necessity or advisability of this improvement. He stated to us that the excavation now being made in that way is already as large, or practically as large, as it ever will be; and in the upper part of the excavation there has been, as he stated, an increase of only some 12 feet in three years; that at the lower part of the excavation the digging and carrying out had progressed a little faster, so that a little more had been done. But upon cross-examination by myself in person, in behalf of my colleague (for I wanted him to secure this appropriation if it is necessary), the engineer specifically stated that it was not a necessary improvement in any way for the benefit of navigation.

Now, following the principle we have been trying to follow throughout this bill, of confining our appropriations to such projects as will benefit navigation, there was no equitable or just basis upon which I could present a claim in behalf of my colleague's proposition. If the proposition were to give the money to him personally, I think I would be tempted to vote for it anyhow.

Mr. JETT. Thank you.

Mr. REEVES. But I can not say to this Committee of the Whole that this project is in the interest of navigation in the light of the information given to the committee by the engineer in charge of that portion of the river. Therefore, I did not press it.

Mr. JETT. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that the statement of the engineer that only about 12 feet washout has taken place at the upper part, directly opposite where the Missouri enters the Mississippi, is true, but that is because at that point between $120,000 and $125,000 has been expended; but the force of the water coming out of the Missouri River is so great that it is below this point where the great difficulty is experienced at this time.

Mr. REEVES. I think that the only proper thing to be done here is to let the citizens interested in this project bring it to the attention of the Engineer Department. Let them formulate that which in there opinion is necessary to be done, and submit the proposition to the Corps of Engineers, that we may have their guidance, which is all we can go by.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is so vitally important that I am unwilling to allow it to pass without a word. It is in the same line with the one introduced yesterday in reference to the town of Elizabethport, on the Ohio River. We have in every case, outside of that portion of the Mississippi River below Cairo, excluded appropriations for the mere protection of the banks against erosion. The gentleman's argument in support of this amendment shows clearly what he expects. He says he believes it the duty of Congress not only to protect navigation, but to protect the farming and other lands of owners along the river.

Now, I want to say to the friends of river and harbor improvements, and to the enemies of such improvements as well, that if we undertake to take care of banks that are eroded along the navigable or nonnavigable streams of this country the amount needed to carry out such a policy will in time exceed the total amount expended for the improvement of navigation on the rivers and harbors of this country. Such appropriations would break down your bill. Should this amendment be adopted, then this House, if it acted fairly, ought to recommit this bill to the committee with instructions to put on two or three million dollars more in places similarly situated.

Now, with reference to this particular place, it has already had an appropriation of $100,000, and what does the gentleman say about that? Why, he says that it has protected several hundred acres of valuable land. Well, in order to make the expenditure of money profitable, the amount ought to protect not merely several hundred acres, but several thousand acres, for $100,000 is a pretty penny to pay for a few hundred acres of land.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I trust there may be no hesitation in rejecting this proposition. If riprapping is required in the interest of navigation, it can be done from the general fund.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion? If the theory of the amendment offered by my friend from Illinois [Mr. JETT] should be approved by this House, would it not become necessary to appropriate about two or three million dollars for the Missouri River?

Mr. BURTON. It would; for the Missouri alone.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. JETT, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War shall cause an examination to be made of the Mississippi River at the foot of the Des Moines Rapids, near Keokuk, Iowa, to determine whether a dam constructed at the foot of said rapids would be a benefit or impediment to the navigation of said river.

Mr. BURTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "river," in line 9, page 79, insert "he shall also cause an examination to be made of the locks of the Des Moines Rapids Canal to determine the necessity for and cost of enlarging such locks."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, we propose to insert this amendment upon the request of some commercial organizations representing manufacturers and others, who state that the present locks are not wide enough. I do not anticipate any recommendation that they be widened, because any modification would be exceedingly expensive; but it seemed only fair and just to these gentlemen, in view of the fact that this examination can be made without expense, or practically without expense, that this examination be made.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. BURTON was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Mississippi River from Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, including salaries, clerical, official, traveling, and miscellaneous expenses of the Mississippi River Commission: Continuing improvement, $2,000,000, which shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for the general improvement of the river, for the building of levees, and for surveys, including the survey from the Head of the Passes to the headwaters of the river, in such manner as in their opinion shall best improve navigation and promote the interests of commerce at all stages of the river: Provided, That on and after the passage of this act additional contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry on continuously the plans of the Mississippi River Commission, as aforesaid, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $6,000,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated, which latter amount shall be expended at the rate of $2,000,000 per annum for three years, beginning July 1, 1903: Provided further, That the money hereby appropriated and authorized to be expended, in pursuance of contracts, or otherwise, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in the construction of suitable and necessary dredge boats and other devices and appliances, and in the maintenance and operation of the same, with a view of ultimately obtaining and maintaining a navigable channel, from Cairo down, not less than 250 feet in width and 9 feet in depth at all periods of the year, except when navigation is closed by ice: And provided further, That of the sums hereby appropriated and authorized to be expended the Mississippi River Commission may expend, in its discretion, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, during the period of four years an amount aggregating $620,000 in continuing improvement at New Orleans, La.; Natchez and Vidalia, Miss. and La.; Greenville, Miss.; Helena, Ark.; Memphis, Tenn., including Wolf River; New Madrid and Caruthersville, Mo., and rectification of Red and Atchafalaya rivers, Louisiana: And provided further also, That the Chief of Engineers shall have authority to temporarily remove one or more of the dredges now under the control of the Mississippi River Commission from the river below Cairo to the river between Cairo and St. Louis, and to so operate the same as, in his judgment, will be most beneficial to the commerce of the whole river, and to expend from the sum herein appropriated and authorized to be expended for the maintenance and operation of such dredge or dredges between St. Louis and Cairo a sum not to exceed $50,000 per annum for four years.

Mr. BURTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "expend," in line 23, page 81, insert a comma; and after the word "expended," in line 24, insert "in this paragraph."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask information of the chairman of the committee in regard to this provision beginning on line 8, on page 81. It has special reference to the Wolf River. I notice the sum appropriated and authorized in the proviso is $620,000, and it is to be expended in the manner indicated, part of it at Memphis, Tenn., including Wolf River. What I desire information of the chairman is as to how that amount was arrived at and what proportion of that amount can be expended in the improvement of the Wolf River.

Mr. BURTON. I would ask the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], who made that computation, to answer the question of the gentleman from Tennessee. It is the average amount appropriated, I will say, for the last four years.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, in determining that amount we took the average which had been appropriated for those harbors during quite a number of years in the past. They were about as follows: For the harbor of New Orleans, $55,000; for the harbor of Natchez and Vidalia, $25,000; Greenville, $12,500; Helena, $5,000; Memphis, including Wolf River, $35,000; New Madrid, $5,000; Caruthersville, $5,000; rectification of Red and Atchafalaya rivers, $12,500. That makes a total annual appropriation for those harbors of $155,000, and four times that amount would be $620,000, which is the amount computed, about which the gentleman inquires.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. As I understand the gentleman, in making this appropriation and this authorization the figures were based upon the figures just read by the gentleman.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. They were based upon those figures.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Do I understand further that it is in the discretion of the Commission to expend just what they see proper at any point of this appropriation and authorization?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Well, that would be a matter of construction. That is the way I construe the law, and that is the way, I think, the committee intended it to be construed.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. That is the way the committee so construed it?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. One other question, Mr. Chairman, and I will have done. Do I understand, then, that the engineer at the harbor of Memphis could expend the total amount on the improvement of the Wolf River if the exigencies of the case required it, in his judgment?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Well, I think that would be left entirely to the discretion of the Mississippi River Commission, and not to the engineer. This whole amount would be expended under the direction and supervision of the Mississippi River Commission, and if they should find the exigencies there so much greater than those at any other harbor I imagine they could expend whatever they saw fit, not to exceed in any one year $155,000.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. And the total amount, as I understand you, under this basis, could be expended for the improvement of the Wolf River; that would go to the harbor and Wolf River together if in the opinion of the Commission it was necessary.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Well, I would not like to say that. I am not sufficiently posted as to the relative merits of Wolf Harbor and the harbor of Memphis proper. I think, though, that it will be left entirely to the discretion of the Mississippi River Commission as to just what should be expended on Wolf River and what on the harbor proper.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. That answers the question, because I put it in the form if it was in the discretion of the Commission. This could be expended in the discretion of the Commission.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. That is my understanding.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. With this explanation I ask leave to withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving the Missouri River from the mouth to Stubbs Ferry, Montana: For snagging and maintenance, $80,000; and the Secretary of War shall cause an examination to be made of the lower portion of said river with a view to ascertaining whether navigation can be maintained at a reasonable cost by dredging and the removal of obstacles; also at and near Hermann, West Glassgow, Lexington, and St. Joseph with a view to ascertaining what improvements in those localities, if any, are necessary for navigation.

Mr. CLARK. I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk, and which the chairman of the committee agrees to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 82, line 12, after the word "navigation," insert: "and such dikes or other construction as may be necessary to protect public or private property may be located in said stream and upon the banks thereof by abutting owners and municipalities: Provided, That they do not interfere with the proper navigation of said river: And provided further, That the same are approved by the Government engineer having the improvement of said river in charge."

Mr. BURTON. I wish to state that the committee has no objection to the adoption of that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment to that section, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out of lines 5 and 6, on page 82, the words "eighty thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five hundred thousand."

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, it would not be in accordance with my judgment if I were to say I have strong hopes that my amendment will be adopted. Considering the temper both of the Rivers and Harbors Committee and of this House, I think that the chances for its adoption are not bright.

At the same time, Mr. Chairman, I am not willing to see those hundreds of miles of river traversing the productive country, a portion of which I have the honor to represent, pass entirely out of this bill without entering on behalf of my people my protest. I have moved to increase from $80,000 to $500,000. That is not as much as we should have, in consideration of the importance of that stream; but I present it now, Mr. Chairman, in order that the country may know that our section does not consent that we be dropped from the appropriations by the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and that it may be understood that we do not concede that the Missouri River is not a navigable stream.

Mr. Chairman, they tell us that that river does not now carry a sufficient amount of commerce to entitle it to consideration. Why? Because this committee has not taken proper steps to control the stream. Navigation is not safe because of snags, bars, and other obstructions which the Government ought to remove.

Another reason, they tell us, why the river should not be improved is because we have so many railroads there that carry the commerce and that the river does not carry it. That, I say, Mr. Chairman, is the very reason why the Missouri River should have consideration at the hands of this House. We have better railroad rates along the Missouri River than we have remote from it. Why? Because the railroads know that the stream is there. They know that the Missouri River can carry commerce. They know that in the past it has carried it. They know that even now it would carry it if the railroads were to exact the same rates of freight from us that they do from those districts that do not border upon that stream.

If the Missouri River, without being improved at all, as it is now, serves to reduce the rates charged by the railroads, how much more powerful would it be in that direction if it were properly improved, as this committee sees fit to improve the other streams of the country? We lie there without any member on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. We have nobody on that committee who can say a word in our behalf. The hundreds of miles of the Missouri River, stretching out over that garden of the Republic, find no member upon this Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

That is not only so in this Congress, but it was so in the last Congress, and I do not know how far back. We have nobody there to plead our cause, we have nobody there to press our measures, and by the time the river and harbor bill gets up to the Missouri River, where we have no committeeman, the pork barrel is so full that they have no need of us and we are forgotten. The time has been when members of this House who inveigh against improving the Missouri River could see at any landing a magnificent steamer pass up that great river every day in the week. From St. Louis to Fort Benton the Missouri River carried the commerce of all that great territory before railroads came there. Why does it not do that now?

Why, as I said a moment ago, it is because Congress has permitted the river to be neglected, and for the other reason that the railroad puts down its rate in order to kill off the river transportation; and as long as the river can be kept in such a condition that it will keep our railroad rates down it is immaterial to us whether it carries the freight or whether it be carried by the railroads at such reduced rates as the river causes. It serves a useful purpose in either case, and should be improved along with the other streams embraced in this bill.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I say that that great artery of commerce which nature has given us ought to participate in the appropriations made for these purposes and ought not to be discriminated against by this committee that is expending such large sums of money.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised, and I do not know but I am a little glad to know that the Missouri River has a defender here. Have they lost all sense of humor along the banks of the Missouri that they come in to us and say that it is important to the navigation of the country? The gentleman from Missouri who has just spoken speaks of "pork." If there is any district in the United States that has been gorged with pork it is his own, because it has received appropriations for about $2,650,000, "for the systematic improvement of Reach So-and-so." The systematic improvement! Why, if you were to go out there with a microscope you could not find a trace of the improvement over the whole space where that $2,650,000 was expended.

A man brought up in that kind of surroundings very naturally comes here and talks about pork in a river and harbor bill, because he has been accustomed to see the money wasted. He has seen it in his own district and in his own immediate locality; but the committee thought it was best to stop this foolishness—that is, to take the Missouri River off the books, to recognize the fact that there is no commerce there, that the millions that have been spent there have been wasted, and to confine this bill, as far as possible, to the legitimate purposes of navigation.

I am sorry that the surroundings of the gentleman have been such and that his experience of the expenditures on rivers and harbors have been such as to lead him to call these appropriations "pork." But ought he to stand in our way when we try to make it a legitimate bill? Ought the country to stand in the way? Ought this House not to declare itself on this subject and stop that class of appropriations immediately?

Mr. COWHERD. Before the gentleman takes his seat, will he yield to me for a question?

Mr. COCHRAN. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will yield to my colleague for a moment.

Mr. COWHERD. I should like to ask how many boats the $80,000 appropriated will maintain—whether one or more?

Mr. BURTON. More than one; probably three or four. The expense varies according to the size of the boat and the extent of territory over which it works. I should say $20,000 to $30,000 would be the annual expense of maintaining a boat.

Mr. COWHERD. The boats are there? They will not have to be equipped?

Mr. BURTON. They have an abundance of equipment.

Mr. COWHERD. One other question. I would like to ask the gentleman if it has not been demonstrated by experience on the Mississippi River that the dredge boat will keep open the channel?

Mr. BURTON. I want to state that engineers say that the conditions are altogether different on the Missouri, and they question whether a dredge will give any navigable channel. We have asked for a survey, and that another very thorough investigation be made, but it is very doubtful whether the methods employed on the Missouri will accomplish the same results as on the Mississippi.

Mr. COWHERD. The point I am getting at is, whether keeping the channel dredged would not maintain the current and enable it to take off water at flood times, and in this way minimize the damage to abutting lands.

Mr. BURTON. I doubt very much whether it would. I think that any dredging that might be done will afford very slight relief and would not give any considerable benefit. The overflows are so large and the amount of water so great that the dredging would only be like a drop in a bucket.

Mr. COWHERD. But one reason is that these channels being filled up stop the current.

Mr. BURTON. Dredging might give some aid in the way of protection to the banks, but I do not believe it would accomplish much.

Mr. COWHERD. Your committee would not consent to an amendment to put a dredge boat in before this survey?

Mr. BURTON. We would not think it best. There is to be a thorough survey, and I do not think the engineer would regard it with favor.

Mr. COWHERD. If the gentleman will permit me to ask him one question further, has there not already been a survey at Lexington, Mo., and a favorable report made?

Mr. BURTON. That is with reference to the question of riprapping the banks, I think. We desire a reexamination to be made. We have, however, no confidence that it is required in the interest of navigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I agree neither with the views of my colleague nor with the views expressed by the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. Let us be honest about this thing. The Missouri River carried the traffic of one-fourth of the continent when rivers were the best common carriers. Remove the railroads and it would do the same thing to-morrow. It did this when only trivial sums were spent by the Government in river improvements, and under the same circumstances would be equally useful, even though little attention were paid to it by Congress. A new common carrier now occupies the place formerly held by our great rivers. Trunk-line railroads now parallel the Missouri from St. Louis to Sioux City. We have low freight rates because the river is there. Let the railroads advance rates and maintain them permanently—high rates for a considerable period—and boats would resume the navigation of the river. Neglected entirely, the availability of the river as an efficient restraint upon the railroads will be lost. Gentlemen mention the Missouri as if it were an unimportant stream.

Why, there is a ferryboat at my own town that makes a round trip of 15 miles three times every day. It carries greater tonnage and is a larger boat than can be floated on nine-tenths of the rivers provided for in this bill; there are steamers at other points larger than could be used on the largest river in Arkansas. As for the creeks, inlets, and bays in New England that are so well provided for, you could add them to the tributaries of the Missouri and they would not amount to anything. The gentleman says that the traffic on the Missouri is not great.

A little flotilla of scows with 10-horsepower engines on them—such as figure as steamboats on some of the rivers provided for in this bill—would not amount to anything on the Missouri River. These little scows that are hauling logs and lumber on creeks with channels 3 and 4 feet deep ought not to cut a figure in statistics of tonnage, but they do.

On the Missouri River, before the railroads were built, scores and scores of steamers as fine as ever floated upon the Mississippi were engaged. The river was navigated by these large boats for a distance of about 700 miles. Thence to Fort Benton steamers larger than ever will be used on the majority of the rivers provided for in this bill carried on an enormous traffic.

The railroads reduced freight rates to such a figure that steamers were driven off the river, and thus the people have had, in large degree, the benefits that would accrue from navigation. Let the river be wholly neglected and become entirely unfit for navigation and rates will soon be increased by the railroads. So that this great river has stood as a check upon the railroad corporations as to rates in that region. Only a few years ago we had a meeting at the town of my colleague [Mr. COWHERD] which served notice on the railroads that the Missouri River has its uses, even though few steamboats ply its waters.

The merchants and great shippers of that region subscribed nearly half a million of dollars with which to put steamers on the river, because the railroads were charging extortionate rates on certain classes of goods. The railroads made concessions and the scheme was dropped.

At St. Joseph the river flows for a distance of 3 miles parallel with a populous business center. For this whole distance it is wearing away the banks and destroying property of great value. We say to the River and Harbor Committee: "Look at this destruction of the property." With only a superficial consideration of the circumstances the committee replies: "We do not appropriate money to benefit or save property from destruction. You must do that yourselves." But, gentlemen, the law steps in and prohibits us from making any improvement that will interfere with navigation. The committee says the river is not navigable, and therefore no appropriation will be made for its improvement.

The law says it is navigable and therefore we shall not improve it except in pursuance of the theory that it is navigated. If we were to make the requisite improvements to save the town from injury, regardless of navigation, it would throw the stream west of the drawspan of a railroad bridge. Half a dozen cities on the Missouri River are in that fix. The Government says to us: "You shall not do thus and so; it will impair navigation." Then when we ask Congress to do the work, the answer of the committee is, "No; the river is not navigable." Thus, at a city of 110,000 inhabitants, the business center is endangered, the ancient port threatened with destruction, and yet nothing is to be done, because, forsooth, the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and his colleagues have investigated and found little travel or commerce on the river.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks that he may extend his remarks for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COCHRAN. Now, then, coming right down to it, what are the towns and cities on this river to do? The Government will not permit them to improve a river except upon a scale so expensive that it is not to be thought of. This is on the theory that it is navigable. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors drops the river from consideration on the theory that it is not a navigable stream. Is there any way by which Congress may declare that the Missouri River is no longer a navigable stream?

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COCHRAN. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. Does the gentleman regard it within the power of Congress to declare in express terms that a stream of the size of the Missouri River is not a navigable stream?

Mr. COCHRAN. I have just propounded that question myself. I think not. Therefore I deny the right of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to so determine. I deny the justice of the committee's position, which is, that in reference to great public improvements which are so indispensable, and which we can not ourselves lawfully build, shall be turned down on the theory that the stream is not navigable.

Mr. BURTON. Is not the question rather this: Is there commerce on the river—is there navigation—rather than whether it is capable of navigation?

Mr. COCHRAN. I see appropriation after appropriation here for streams that never have been navigated and streams that never could be navigated, and yet you are making appropriations trying to make them navigable.

Mr. BURTON. I do not recall them. I published a list in the RECORD the other day, and if the gentleman will point them out——

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not say they are on this bill; but that has been the policy of the Government.

Mr. BURTON. I wish the gentleman would point them out.

Mr. COCHRAN. I shall take the time hereafter to do that, and I think I shall photograph some that a cow could jump across. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURTON. I think it is the gentleman's duty to do it. If the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the House have made an appropriation for any stream like that——

Mr. COCHRAN. I did not intend to say that there are any in this bill. I have not examined the bill with reference to this question; but I will say to the gentleman that it is significant that all appropriations made for rivers and harbors from the foundation of the Government down to 1870 are as a mere bagatelle compared with appropriations now made.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to interrupt both gentlemen. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCHRAN. I decline to be interrupted further. I have only three minutes. Now, coming back to the original proposition, is it just, under all the circumstances attending the matter, for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to expunge the Missouri River from the map as a navigable stream as far as practical legislation is concerned? I think I have made it plain that such a course is not justified by the constant reiteration of the statement that the traffic on the river is not large. What difference does it make whether the traffic is large or small if the maintenance of the river as a navigable stream guarantees to the people of a large area freight rates as low as would result from its navigation?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD].

The question was considered; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COWHERD) there were—ayes 25, noes 58.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. COWHERD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 12, page 82, add:

"For improving the same at Lexington, Mo., by removing the bar in front of the city, $15,000."

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, just opposite Lexington, Mo., there is a railroad—in fact, there are two roads. There is a ferry carrying freight and passengers from the landing across the river to the city. Now, in recent years a bar has formed immediately in front of the city, shutting off this landing, so that freight and passengers have to be landed a mile or two farther down and then brought up to the city.

In addition to that, I will say frankly that one reason for asking this appropriation is because this bar has cut off the city from the use of its waterworks. This appropriation was introduced in the last Congress. A survey was made by the Department and an appropriation, if I remember rightly, was recommended, and I will request the chairman of the committee to inform us whether there was not a recommendation from the Department approving the appropriation.

Now, this is a small, wee lamb, and I am very much in hope that I can induce the chairman of the committee to wink at it and let it go through. I realize from the fate of the other amendments to this bill that I need such approval.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I should be very glad to accommodate the gentleman from Missouri and "wink at" this proposition, but although this may be a very "small lamb," yet a number of these "small lambs" make a deal of bleating and form quite a flock.

If we put this provision on the bill there are certainly a dozen other places on the Missouri River for which we should provide in the same way.

Mr. COWHERD. Have they been recommended by the Department?

Mr. BURTON. Their condition is just about the same as your proposition.

Hermann is similarly situated, and in its behalf the demand is most urgent. In that case there is considerable navigation, which is not merely across the river, but along it. The same is true of the gentleman's own city—Kansas City.

The great difficulty with appropriations for the Missouri River has been that by these appropriations certain localities have been favored. I think we ought to stop that policy right now, and whatever amount may be appropriated for this river we ought to appropriate for the whole.

In response to the other gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] I want to say to him and to his constituents that he will have no difficulty in securing any improvements they may desire to make at their own expense. I think I can say that the War Department will be very glad to have his constituents construct dikes to protect their own property if they will do it. We have, indeed, in this bill an express provision—a provision voted in on motion of the gentleman's colleague [Mr. CLARK] for work of that kind. I repeat my request that if the gentleman knows of any stream appropriated for in this bill that has no navigation, or on which there is no possibility of navigation, he will state it to the House. I think it is his privilege and duty to do so. It is possible there are a few which might be pointed out—I have myself designated them—I do not recall more than one or two, however, where only the capability of navigation exists. But those are not like the Missouri, on which we have already spent millions without result. Indeed, with the result of leaving navigation worse than before the appropriations were made.

Mr. COCHRAN. The chairman of the committee has said that the bill authorizes my constituents to make any improvements they may desire to make.

Mr. BURTON. That was offered as an amendment by your colleague.

Mr. COCHRAN. But does not that amendment expressly provide that the improvement so made must not interfere with navigation?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. COCHRAN. If such an improvement, erected at the expense of the citizens, makes navigation impossible, would that be permitted?

Mr. BURTON. Probably not. But there is no difficulty whatever in your making all the improvement you may want to make for the protection of your own property.

Mr. COCHRAN. It is identically such an improvement as I have described that we want to make. In no other way could we protect the property exposed—that is, without expenditures too large to be undertaken by the owners of the property.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed on this subject for three minutes.

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman must, of course, understand that no man can be permitted to use his own property in such a way as to injure the property of others.

Mr. COCHRAN. So I assume. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BURTON. There will be no objection to the gentleman proceeding three minutes by unanimous consent.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, the improvement necessary to be made at St. Joseph, in order to conserve navigation and at the same time to protect private property, would be the mere completion of the work already begun by the United States. The sum required for this improvement would be larger than any community could afford to expend. Disregarding the effect of improvements upon navigation, dikes could be built, at comparatively small expense, which would probably create a sand bar where the drawspan of a railroad bridge now is, and thus close the river to navigation.

What right has the Government to begin the necessary improvement, carry it on to a certain point, rendering subsequent improvements more difficult, and then say, "You can now go on with this work if you please, but you must not impair navigation?"

The same rule would apply with equal justice to every section of the country. Why not say to the people of Arkansas or Maine, Dredge and build locks and dams on your rivers; the Government offers no objection.

They could do it as easily and at as small expense, in view of the benefits conferred, as we the Missouri River.

The plain truth is—and it has become a scandal—that this bill is so organized that where an appropriation is made it is justified on the theory that the river is important as a navigable stream, and where an appropriation is refused, the refusal is justified by the contention that the river is not important for purposes of navigation. Hence we witness an anomalous proceeding. Enough neighborhoods having been taken care of to insure the passage of the bill, no important amendments are permitted. No matter how important the interest, no matter how valid the arguments in support of it, the beneficiaries of the bill are content with it, and so it is to go through as it came from the committee.

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. I really think that he is hardly just to the committee without making a specification of his charges. I challenge him to verify the statement that he has made that it is divided around; and I challenge his earlier statement that there are streams in this bill which have no navigation for which appropriations have been made.

Mr. COCHRAN. I call the attention of the gentleman again to the fact that I have not said that. I have said in general that the history of appropriations of this kind for thirty years has been that the Government has spent enormous sums of money on streams that never have been navigated and never will be, and that after making these expenditures many of them have been abandoned as nonnavigable. I have not examined this bill; it was not necessary.

Mr. BURTON. I think before the gentleman discusses this bill and makes accusations generally against the river and harbor improvement, he should be sure of his facts.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will ask the gentleman a question so as to see if he is sure of some of his facts. What is included in the tonnage which statistics tell us is carried on many of the rivers mentioned in this bill? Is it not lumber and logs?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; and is not that legitimate?

Mr. COCHRAN. Is this tonnage to be taken as evidence of a commerce sufficient to justify appropriations? Lumber and logs may be floated down in rafts and barges—barges that are frequently thrown away at the end of the journey.

Mr. BURTON. Well, I would state——

Mr. COCHRAN. Is that fair?

Mr. BURTON. Does the gentleman desire me to answer the question?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. I should not think that a large amount should be appropriated for any river merely for the purpose of floating logs; but if, as in some cases in this bill, the lumber that is floated down amounts in value to $500,000 or a million dollars, then it is proper to make an appropriation of perhaps $10,000 to make that floating down possible.

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes; to make that floating down possible. I suppose it is necessary in order to float lumber down the Mississippi or the Ohio rivers. Streams were used for this purpose long ago, when the river valleys were Indian reservations, without a white man within a thousand miles. When the tonnage of a river, as relating to its value for navigable purposes, is presented to the committee as the basis of estimates, it seems to me that the utility of the river for the purposes of general commerce ought to be shown. It should be shown that cities and towns along the river use it for the shipment of freight, and not merely that at certain seasons of the year or certain stages of the water some junks are loaded with lumber and coal and floated down, and their contents stated in tons in order to secure the next appropriation. The bill is indefensible on the theory that the tonnage on rivers thus arrived at proves the necessity of these expenditures.

In general, I am in favor of river and harbor improvements, but I doubt if any river and harbor bill that has ever come on this floor has been drawn strictly within the constitutional requirements, by which we are limited to appropriations necessary to promote navigation. No friend of this bill will declare that the vast system of levees and other superficial improvements on the banks of Southern rivers are intended solely to protect navigation. So patent, so plain is it that this is the case, that when these improvements come up for consideration the defenders of these appropriations call attention to the fertility of the vast regions redeemed by the construction of these levees, to the value of the crops grown on them, and to the necessity of their construction for the conservation of the general welfare of the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I believe the gentleman has a motion pending and I can take the floor in opposition to his motion to strike out the last word, because I want the last word in as well as all the others. I take the floor, Mr. Chairman, to call attention of the House again to this small amendment of mine. I am afraid the members of the committee will have lost the purport of it in this general discussion that has gone on about the river and harbor bill. Now, I do think that this amendment should not be voted down because the chairman says there is probably one other place upon the river that is equally as deserving. It seems to me that if both are deserving probably both should be recognized, but as to the other place I am going to let that take care of itself. I call the attention of the House to the fact that this bill provides for a survey on which to base an appropriation hereafter to be made for Lexington. That survey has already been made and the recommendation of the Department already obtained, and it is favorable. Therefore I think if any appropriation is to be made it should be made now.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask the gentleman in what volume that survey is reported. As I recall there was a provision in the bill of last winter for this—the bill which failed.

Mr. COWHERD. My recollection of the matter is that there was a small appropriation made in the last bill that passed; not the one of last winter which failed, but the bill before that, which passed; and the Department, in expending that, reported back to Congress that it was not sufficient to finish the work, and recommended an additional appropriation.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, Mr. Chairman, this amendment is as objectionable as any here. This may seem a small amount, but this bill has been carefully prepared, and a little item like this will be quite as much out of line with the rest of the bill as would an item of $300,000. If we should put in $15,000 here, we ought to do it in a number of other places as well. We have ordered a survey of this locality, and if in pursuance of that survey it shall be reported that some improvements are desirable, why, the question can be taken up at a later time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, which is to strike out the last word of the amendment.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman who offered that formal amendment is not here, but I will withdraw it for him.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The question now is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman from Missouri desires the insertion of another locality there, to be examined. I shall be glad if the Chair will yield to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. In line 10, page 82, between the word "Glasgow" and the word "Lexington," I move to insert the words "Wilhites Bend."

Mr. BURTON. I have no objection to that. I take the gentleman's statement that it is a place that is worthy of examination. I understand the fact to be that it is a place of some importance.

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment which he has just stated, and which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 82, in line 10, after the word "Glasgow," insert the words "Wilhites Bend."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

St. Francis River, Missouri: For improvement of said river from Sunk Lands to Poplin, Mo., according to the report printed on page 2000 of the Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1897, $10,000.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 11, page 84, insert:

"Improving the Colorado River from Yuma, Ariz., to the international boundary line by constructing a levee on the Arizona side of said river to confine the flood waters of the channel, $100,000."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, every amendment offered thus far looking in any way to the protection of the property along the banks of the rivers has met with defeat before this Committee of the Whole House, but this is a case far different from those that have been heretofore presented in that the lands lying south of Yuma, Ariz., on the Arizona side of that river, down to the international boundary line, compose a tract about 20 miles long by 7 miles wide, containing about 90,000 acres of probably the richest land on the face of the earth. Upon it, when properly reclaimed, there can be raised the fruits of the Tropics in the greatest profusion.

Much of this land is Government land. The erection of this levee of which my amendment speaks has a double purpose, the protecting not only of the lands belonging to the United States, and from which they can obtain a revenue, but also the protection of the farms already occupied by industrious pioneers, who have paid the Government for their lands, and, secondly, the proposed work will improve the navigation of the river. From Yuma to the Gulf of California and from the Gulf to the ports of the world the Colorado River is navigable. There are steamboats plying it now and new ones in process of construction for the same trade. For the last sixty years that has been the point of entry to the great middle western territory of the United States.

This levee, if built at the points where the river at times of flood comes from its natural channel and makes false channels, emptying a great flood of water over these lands, will confine the river to its place and save these valuable lands from utter destruction. That is the result which will be accomplished by the expenditure of this amount of money. It can not be claimed by the chairman of the committee nor by any member of it that this is an effort to protect private property alone. Even if it were, I take the broader ground that if the land did belong to the citizens of the United States this navigable stream of the United States should not be permitted to go forth and devastate the land of private owners.

The river is the property of the Government. The land is the land of the individual owner, and the Government has no more right to trespass on him by permitting its river to flow over his land than he has to dam the river against the Government itself. To this extent I disagree with the committee that formulated this bill, for there is more than the mere fact of navigation which ought to be considered in a river and harbor bill, because we have no other means of making an appropriation under our present rules for protecting the land against flood.

Mr. Chairman, this appropriation is very important to those whom I have the honor to speak for on this floor. They have no vote here. I have no right here, further than to plead their cause. Our transportation rates from Yuma are simply ruinous. The only railroad touching that country has no competitor, and it charges "all the traffic will bear." There is no excuse for a River and Harbor Committee of this House, and no defense for any river or harbor appropriation, except that it cheapens transportation by bringing the river traffic in competition with the railroad traffic. Here you have an ideal condition before you demanding action. This great river, when properly confined, gives us a competing line with the railroad. Through it Arizona's product can be cheaply carried all along the western coast from Puget Sound to Cape Horn, and by way of the Panama road lessen our freights to every Eastern port and Eastern city.

For the little sum of $100,000 this great and necessary work can be done. The farmer will be able to get his crops to market with some profit. As it is, he is simply at the mercy of the railroad. Gentlemen, if you knew how hard the life of a pioneer farmer is, and understood the fortitude he daily exercises, the heat and burden he daily bears, you would feel inclined to see that he had at least an equal chance with his more favored Eastern brethren along the banks of the Missouri, the Mississippi, the Ohio, and the Tennessee.

But, as I said before, this amendment involves even more than the question of cheaper freight rates. It involves the homes of these men who are struggling as men have seldom struggled to build homes for their wives and children. They are creating a world in the West. They need and they deserve national aid. No man in my presence, I think, will dare deny that the mighty levees on the Mississippi have been built to protect the great States through and along which it flows from being inundated and destroyed by its mad rush of waters. Untold millions have been so expended and greater sums yet will be dedicated to this very purpose.

I commend such appropriation, but I protest against its local application. We are as much entitled to your aid, if not more entitled, than any other part of the United States. Arizona has been for forty years pouring her contributions into the Federal Treasury, and in all that time has received nothing save the $10,000 with which the levee along the banks of the Gila was constructed, and I distinctly remember that when I placed that item on the river and harbor bill in the House every member of the River and Harbor Committtee opposed it.

The $100,000 which Arizona here pleads for is not one-twentieth of what she has paid into the very Treasury from which she begs this small return. Can I make the case any stronger than these simple facts make it? I have heretofore presented to you through regular channels the resolutions and petitions forwarded me by the people of Yuma County, which petitions set forth their appeal, their just demands, stronger than I can hope to do it. Yet you have been blind to their condition and deaf to their call. Of the hundred amendments offered to the present bill not one has been adopted. Let me hope a better fate for this one. I see my time has expired. I ask earnestly for the adoption of my amendment. Be fair to yourselves by aiding a cause so just.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this requires any extended discussion. This is a proposition to construct, at large expense, levees on the Colorado River. The gentleman says that they have the very richest land on earth. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has cause for congratulation in the fact that at least a hundred times a year they learn that "the richest land on earth" is found in an equal number of different localities. It causes us additional pride in our country to know that the richest land and the finest coal fields and many other superlative things are not confined to any one locality, but exist in multitudes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Are you glad to have fine lands in order to drown them?

Mr. BURTON. That is a matter which nature determines. We do not have control of that. I have no doubt that the stream is an important one, and we have recognized its importance. Notwithstanding the fact that a very few years ago an adverse report was made upon a survey and examination of this river, we have directed that another survey be made, which I think is certainly all that can be asked.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Was not the original survey made from Yuma up the river toward The Needles?

Mr. BURTON. I do not think so; but it is possible that I may be in error.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Was not that survey made from that point up?

Mr. BURTON. I may be in error in regard to it. My authority is a statement from the War Department giving a list of localities ordered to be surveyed in this bill which have heretofore been surveyed. It was made by experts there who had this bill before them. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Upper Columbia and Snake rivers, Oregon and Washington: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $25,250. The unexpended balance of the appropriation heretofore made for the improvement of the Clearwater River, Idaho, is hereby made available for the improvement of the above-named rivers. Of the several sums herein provided for, $28,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in completing the improvement and for maintenance of the Snake River between Riparia and Lewiston, in accordance with the project recommended in House Document No. 127, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, and $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in the improvement of the Snake River above Lewiston.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add a new section to the bill, as follows:

"Columbia River, between Vancouver, Wash., and the mouth of the Willamette River: Continuing said improvement and maintenance, $22,000."

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Chairman, in offering this proposed amendment I certainly have no desire in any way to interfere with the symmetrical harmony of this bill, which has heretofore been alluded to. I believe, however, that good and sufficient reasons exist why an amendment of this character should be favorably considered and accepted by this committee. In the first place, this bill as it now stands makes no appropriation whatever for that particular portion of the Columbia River which lies immediately below the city of Vancouver.

The river and harbor appropriation bill as reported to this House last year contained an appropriation for this particular portion of the Columbia River amounting to $8,000. The Senate added to that $8,000 the sum of $10,000, making $18,000, which amount was accepted in conference. Hence $18,000 is the sum which would have been appropriated for this project a year ago if the last river and harbor bill had not failed of passage. Certainly it does not lie in the mouth of any man to say that there exists less reason to-day for making this improvement than existed a year ago. The city of Vancouver is growing. Its commerce is growing. Its industries are increasing and flourishing. In fact, everything surrounding the city or connected with it is increasing except the appropriation in the river and harbor bill. In this particular there has been a decided "slump."

It is true that in June, 1901, we secured the allotment of $8,000 from the emergency river and harbor fund to be applied at this point. But this $8,000 was for repairing the dike, and not for the dredging of a channel, which is the main project. Now, then, the Chief of Engineers recommended that $22,000 (in addition to the $8,000 from the emergency fund and the other amounts now available) be appropriated at this point, and the amendment which I have offered simply includes the amount recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

The city of Vancouver, in the State of Washington, is located on the Columbia River, about 5 miles above the point where the Willamette River flows into the Columbia. There has been expended by the Government a vast amount of money on the Columbia River and the Willamette River to make them navigable for deep-sea vessels from the mouth of the Columbia up to the mouth of the Willamette and from the mouth of the Willamette up to the city of Portland. The people of Vancouver, through their Representatives on this floor, make the very modest request that a very small portion of the immense sums appropriated for the Columbia River be expended at a point and in a manner to make that stream navigable for deep-sea vessels to the city of Vancouver. And I consider their request in this regard not only exceedingly reasonable, but remarkably modest. Of the millions expended on this river they only ask for an inconsiderable fraction.

This amendment is especially reasonable in view of the fact that it is recommended by the Chief of Engineers, and in view of the further fact that the cost of the proposed improvement is so small, and in view of the further fact that an immense amount of money has been expended on the lower reaches of the Columbia and the Willamette, and, last of all, the fact that the River and Harbor Committee has practically determined to improve the Upper Columbia River at The Dalles and Celilo and its tributary, the Snake River, flowing in above The Dalles and Celilo. Therefore this proposed improvement just below the city of Vancouver contemplated by my amendment will lie directly in the path between the improvements on the Upper Columbia River and those on the Lower Columbia.

I will allude briefly to one additional reason, and then I will conclude. The statement is sometimes made that there is no deep-sea commerce at Vancouver now to justify this proposed expenditure. That is true, and it is likewise true that there can not be any deep-sea commerce there until the channel is so improved that deep-sea vessels can come up to the city of Vancouver. It is likewise true that there would not be any deep-sea commerce at Portland, Oreg., to-day if the Government had not spent millions and millions of dollars to dredge out a channel to that city. And yet it is one of the peculiarties of the advocates of this river and harbor bill that those who lift their voices in favor of a channel to Portland likewise array themselves against a channel to Vancouver.

The city of Vancouver is one of the splendid little cities of the State of Washington. Although a city of several thousand inhabitants and having in its outskirts the largest military post in the State of Washington, this city has up to this period in its history been totally without railroad facilities of any kind. But since the date of the Engineer's reports (which constitute the data from which the River and Harbor Committee make their estimates) the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad has been completed to the city of Vancouver, and in the near future that point, in my judgment, will offer as splendid facilities for deep-sea shipping as the city of Portland offers, and it is a number of miles nearer to tide water. For all these reasons I think the committee ought to give this proposed amendment their favorable consideration.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Chairman, the committee carefully considered this proposed project on at least two or three different occasions and concluded that it ought not to recommend the appropriation asked for. Briefly, this is the condition: Vancouver is on the Columbia River 5 miles above the mouth of the Willamette River. Portland is on the Willamette a short distance above its mouth. The two rivers, coming together, converge so that Vancouver is directly across from Portland, and is not more than 6 or 8 miles distant, or approximately that. There is a splendid harbor at Portland, a city of nearly or quite 100,000 population, and it is so near that it is not possible to establish and make of any service another deep harbor at that short distance from Portland.

The business in that region of country is at Portland, and, in the very nature of things, must be. Now, to expend money to make a deep-water harbor within 6 or 7 miles of Portland seemed to the committee to be an unworthy attempt to establish another deep-water harbor.

My friend says that there is no deep-water traffic there because the deep water is not there, and that is true. But if the deep water was there I think it would be one of those cases, Mr. Chairman, where we say that there is a splendid dam site, but no mill at the dam site.

There is no business to come there; it is at Portland, and centers there because of the very means of transportation. In the opinion of our committee it was a useless experiment to attempt it, and, frankly stated, a profligate expenditure of money, and therefore we rejected it, and we trust the committee will follow in our wake.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN] is recognized.

Mr. CUSHMAN. In response to the remarks made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REEVES] regarding the profligate waste of public money, I desire very briefly to call to the attention of this House, and likewise to the attention of the gentleman himself, his own remarks, made to this House on Monday last, March 17, when he was addressing the House on the general topic of river and harbor improvements as contemplated in this bill. Bear in mind, now, he was speaking on the subject of "the profligate waste of public money." The gentleman was speaking about the mouth of the Columbia River. I quote from page 3105 of the RECORD:

> And we are doing much for that river in this bill—nearly a million of dollars to be expended at the mouth of the river—and some critic of this kind of legislation may rise up after a while and point to the mouth of the Columbia River as one of the places where we have most foolishly expended money. I for one have grave doubts as to whether or not the project at the mouth of the river, at an expense in round numbers of $4,000,000, will not be a total failure when finished.

Now, I simply say that any committee that is willing to expend $4,000,000 on a project at the mouth of a river where they say it is likely to be a total failure when it is finished ought not to shy at a proposition to expend $22,000 at a point on this river where it is conceded that the improvement when made will be permanent.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Chairman, if I may conclude the debate on this matter, I used the language quoted only three or four days ago, and I am perfectly willing to stand by what I said. But the gentleman from Washington must recognize this difference, that there are nearly 2,000,000 tons of freight on the Columbia River, and whether this proposition is a failure or not, we must make the effort to find an outlet for it.

Mr. BURTON. And it is an outlet for an empire?

Mr. REEVES. Yes; it is an outlet for an empire, and that condition does not exist at Vancouver. There is nothing at Vancouver but an Army post, practically speaking. The very nature of its environment is such that there can not be, because across the way 5 or 6 miles is situated a city of 100,000 population.

I repeat, for the benefit of my friend, if it is any benefit to him, that in my judgment some future critic of river and harbor legislation may rise up and say we wasted the money at the mouth of the Columbia River. The reason of it is that there does not appear to be currents and cross currents enough to carry away the sand that is brought down through the river, and therefore the bar that we are trying to get over may simply be moved out further into the ocean; but the plan adopted is the best the engineers of the Army could give us, and we must take care of the 2,000,000 tons of freight. The gentleman must realize that these conditions do not exist at Vancouver.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. CUSHMAN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURTON) there were—ayes 18, noes 25.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Improving Cowlitz and Lewis rivers, including the North Fork of the Lewis River, Washington: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $9,500.

Mr. BURTON. I offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> After the paragraph just read insert:
> "Willapa River and Harbor: The balance on hand to the credit of this improvement may, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in snagging and otherwise improving the North and Nasal rivers."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I observe that the amendment mentions the North and Nasal rivers. Does it include also the Willapa River?

Mr. BURTON. The balance on hand is for improving Willapa River and Harbor. It is not necessary to specify the river, as the project already includes it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not so understand.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BURTON, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Improving Puget Sound and its tributary waters, Washington: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $15,000, of which amount $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in removing the log jam in Nooksack River.

Mr. BURTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> After "Nooksack River," in line 20, page 89, insert:
> "And the Secretary of War may modify the existing plans for removing the said lock dam; provided that the cost thereof is not increased."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Improving the Okanogan and Pend Oreille rivers, Washington: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $10,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> In line 25, page 89, strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-five;" so as to read $25,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have troubled the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors so much, and he has been so uniformly kind, courteous, and patient, that I have considerable hesitation in offering this amendment. But these two projects, now combined into one, are projects that the honorable chairman of this committee did not have the privilege of visiting while he was in the State of Washington. We regret this very much, because we feel satisfied that if he had visited and investigated personally these projects he would have placed in this bill an amount similar to that placed in the bill at the last session of Congress.

The estimate of the engineer for the improvement of the Okanogan River is $15,000. The estimate made for the Pend Oreille River is that $10,000 should be expended by the local engineer during the coming fiscal year. These amounts were appropriated in the last bill. We think that $25,000 ought now be appropriated, so that the work upon the Okanogan River may be completed. The engineer in his report states:

The country adjacent to the Okanogan River is rapidly developing and filling up with settlers, and it is important that the improvement should be completed as early as practicable.

He also states that the improvement, until it is completed, will be of comparatively little benefit. I know as a matter of fact that that country is rapidly developing. An Indian reservation of 1,500,000 acres has been thrown open to settlement within the last two years, and it is rapidly being settled.

I also realize the fact that the tonnage on this river and upon the Pend Orielle River is very small; that it is but little over 1,000 tons. But, Mr. Chairman, the fact is that the tonnage can not increase until the improvements are made; and it is also true that when the improvement is made there can be no doubt that the tonnage will largely increase.

Furthermore, this is the only way by which the people in this territory can get their products to market. The Okanogan River flows a distance of 87 miles from Canadian territory and empties into the Columbia River, and the only means these people have of getting their products down is to transport them down this river to the Columbia and thence to the line of the Great Northern. The same is true of the Pend Oreille River. There they have to transport their products 65 miles to get connection with the Great Northern. Where the improvements are being made in the Pend Oreille it is a total and absolute obstruction to the navigation of the river, and, as the engineer says, the improvements will amount to absolutely nothing until they are completed.

We ask that an amount be appropriated sufficient to complete this work in the near future. I know as a matter of fact that tons and hundreds of tons of ore are lying upon the dump in this country simply awaiting means of transportation. I realize the difficulties that the honorable chairman of this committee has undergone in preparing this bill. I know the great care with which he has looked after all these different items. I know that he would like to put these items upon this bill. I trust that he will now feel justified in doing it.

We believe that it will result, we know that it will result, in wonderful good to these people and to this section of the country, where there is no immediete prospect of any other means of communication. These people are struggling there to build up their homes; they have gone in there after these improvements were made; they were evidently encouraged by the fact that the Government had commenced them, and they hope and believe that the Government will furnish to them the means of getting their products to market; and I do hope that the chairman of this committee will feel justified in allowing this amendment to be adopted. I know that he would like to see it adopted, at any rate. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON. As the gentleman from Washington has said, it is not a question of what the committee would like to do, but what they can do. I presume $30,000, perhaps $60,000, could be advantageously expended upon those rivers. To a certain extent in our bill we have provided for the development of commerce where no commerce now exists, but in view of the limitations placed upon us, in view of the amounts beyond which we do not feel we ought to go, the majority of the provisions have been for places where commerce already exists.

Now, there is no project which in proportion to its importance receives more than these two rivers. I published in the RECORD of Tuesday morning a list of rivers and creeks having an inconsiderable tonnage. Some may call that a black list. I think, however, many of the streams included in that list are important. If anyone will examine it, he will notice that these two, if not showing the very least tonnage of any streams in that list, are, at least, very near to the bottom of it. One has a tonnage of only 1,733 and the other of 1,921.

Now, of course it can be said that this is because the work is not finished. You can say that, gentlemen of the committee, of 100 or 200 other projects in this bill—that the reason why there is not more commerce is because they are in an unfinished condition. These afford nothing exceptional, and in addition to that they make a very poor showing as regards present development. For that reason this amendment ought not to be sustained. The appropriation is certainly generous, considering their importance.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question being taken, on a division (called for by Mr. JONES of Washington) there were—ayes 14, noes 40.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For emergencies: To provide for the restoration of channels, or river and harbor improvements heretofore established or made by the Government, or herein provided for, where by reason of emergency occurring after the passage of this act the usual depth of such channels or customary use of such improvement can not be maintained and there is no sufficient fund available for such restoration, $200,000. The amount herein provided shall be allotted by the Secretary of War: Provided, That in no case shall such allotment be made unless recommended by the local engineer having such channel or improvement in charge, and by the Chief of Engineers, respectively: Provided further, That for no single channel or improvement shall a sum greater than $10,000 be allotted, and in spending any such allotment advertising for bids may be dispensed with on the recommendation of the local engineer.

Mr. ADAMS. I offer the following amendment, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "engineers," line 16, page 90, insert the following:

"Any person or persons, corporations, municipal or private, who desire to improve any navigable river, or any part thereof, at their or its own expense and risk may do so upon the approval of the plans and specifications of said proposed improvement by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers of the Army. The plan of said improvement must conform with the general plan of the Government improvements, must not impede navigation, and no tolls shall be imposed on account thereof, and said improvement shall at all times be under the control and supervision of the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment with the kind permission of the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and can state that it meets with his approval. I offer the amendment also at the suggestion of the Trades League of the City of Philadelphia, which represents all the business interests of that port. The reason and necessity for this amendment being made to the bill is that the committee in their wise discretion have deemed advisable not to make appropriations for those portions of rivers which are located within the geographical limits of cities and municipalities.

The object of this amendment is to empower those municipalities or corporations to make these improvements at their own expense for the benefit of the commerce of said port. The amendment has been carefully drawn. All these improvements must conform to the general plan of the Government for the improvement of the navigable streams; the specifications must be submitted to the Secretary of War and the Chief Engineer of the Army; the operations under this plan are to be under their supervision until completion; no obstruction must be placed to the navigation of these streams.

No tolls shall be allowed to be charged, and every provision that could possibly clash with the general improvement of the navigable waterways of our country has been provided against. As I say, this amendment meets with the approval of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and I submit it to the judgment of the House.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that amendment. I certainly should not object to the principle, and my colleague [Mr. REEVES] has examined it in detail and made some suggestions which have been incorporated in the amendment, particularly the one forbidding the charge of tolls.

I think this right exists now, but it is well to define it in this manner. I take it, the reason why the amendment was introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] is because in the city of Philadelphia they have, by municipal taxation or the issuance of bonds, raised a considerable amount to be applied in these improvements. The citizens of Philadelphia in the past have expended a considerable amount at that port, for which they are entitled to due credit.

I want to say that in my own city we have, during fifty or sixty years, expended the very large sum of $2,200,000 for improvements in navigable waters. I certainly think no harm can be done by this provision.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported by the Clerk.

The amendment was again read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of section 1.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Now, I ask to return to page 67, to the amendment which was withheld.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan now calls up the amendment which he offered yesterday, or which was considered pending, and an explanation of which was deferred until the reading of the first section had been completed.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out in line 18, page 67, after the word "as," the words "Plan A" and insert in lieu thereof "Plan C."

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, what is sought to be accomplished by this amendment is this: In the river and harbor bill of 1899 an authorization was made to survey the Detroit River for the purpose of ascertaining the best method for a through deep channel between Duluth and Lake Erie, which included a survey of the Detroit River.

At the point under consideration Grosse Ile lies in the Detroit River, and on the easterly side of this island is the Canadian shore and the Canadian channel. On the westerly side of this island is the American shore and the American channel. Between these two channels is Plan B, referred to by the report of that survey.

Mr. BURTON. Which plan do I understand the gentleman from Michigan to advocate?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Plan C, the American plan. Now, this committee, after receiving the preliminary report, which by its language and terms is said to be only a preliminary report, has decided in favor of expending between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000 in the blasting of solid limestone rock a distance of 12 miles to the width of 600 feet and to the depth of 8 feet, in addition to the channel which now exists. This blasting of rock and this improvement is all in Canadian water and on Canadian soil. The report of the preliminary survey approximates the cost of this channel to be something like $2,000,000.

Colonel Lydecker, who made the report, suggests in it that he has not sufficient information at hand to determine the relative cost of the channel on the American side; but from the preliminary investigation he concludes that it would cost about $10,000,000. Now, I want to submit to this committee that the matter of cost is not the thing to be considered. This same report says that this English channel will be a crooked channel, a dangerous channel, and not the best channel. Colonel Lydecker further says in his report that the Canadian land owners are making claims against this Government, and that we have received no concessions from the Canadian government to permit us to dig this channel on Canadian soil.

Now, from the opening of navigation in 1834 until 1874 all of the shipping coming from the south, coming from Lake Erie into the Detroit River, passed to the west, passed along the American shore, and that channel was found to be of sufficient depth and capacity to accommodate all of the commerce between the Great Lakes until the Canadian Southern Railway Company completed a railroad bridge at the southerly end of Grosse Ile, and obstructions came, and about that time the policy of the River and Harbor Committee changed.

Mr. BURTON. One word, Mr. Chairman. I do not really think this proposition worth serious consideration. The idea of it is plain enough. In the Detroit River, near to its junction with Lake Erie, there are three channels proposed. One of them is in Canadian waters, or the largest part of it. A great deal of money has been expended upon this one, and it is the one now used. Another, the central one, is partly in Canadian waters and partly in waters of the United States. There is a third channel, which is only in waters of the United States.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Will the gentleman permit me one question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. A Canadian engineer has stated in his report that which is to be excavated is in Canadian waters, has he not?

Mr. BURTON. That may be true. The greater part of the work on that has been done. This is a mere matter of sentiment. When a mariner sailing the Great Lakes starts out from Buffalo and Cleveland to Duluth, he does not stop and make his course according to the question of whether the prow of the boat goes into Canadian waters or waters of the United States; and it would be perfectly absurd for him to do so. He goes along for a distance in the waters of the United States and then in the waters of Canada.

Now, there are some people of a jingo disposition that think we ought to have the channels exclusively in our country. Why, an old swivel gun which they used before the war of 1812, entirely out of date now, would sweep all that traffic along the Detroit River; so what is the use of there being any point made whether it is in the Canadian channels and Canadian waters or in waters of the United States. Now, sir, what has been done? Up to date the money that has been expended has been in the channel to which commerce has adapted itself. That is the one on the Canadian side. To complete it will require $1,650,000. To complete the second one, partly in Canadian waters and partly in waters of the United States, would cost $8,000,000. To complete the one which the gentleman from Michigan advocates would cost $10,000,000. In other words, he asks us to spend $8,250,000 for sentiment! The price is too high.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the chairman of this committee I want to say that it is not a question of jingoism with our people up there and it is not a question of sentiment. It is a question of commercialism, a question of the protection of our people in the United States. At the time this channel was taken from the American to the Canadian side the little place of Trenton now was then the city of Trenton. There were three extensive shipbuilding yards, and there were factories all along the shores on the American side in my district.

A Canadian engineer, receiving American money, conceived the idea of changing this channel to go on the easterly side of this island, on the Canadian side of this island, instead of the American side. What has been the result? The boats passing to and fro by this island used to stop on the American side. They got their coal from there, they got their supplies from there, and Trenton grew as never a city grew; but the very minute that they changed this to the Canadian side, where the Canadian engineer lived, over in Amherstburg, and where his reports are dated and made, these boats stopped and there got their supplies, and the people of Amherstburg grew rich and thrived.

The very report of this engineer—one disinterested engineer says that there are a million tons of freight at Wyandotte and Trenton to-day fairly begging on its bended knees and asking these great boats to stop and take it away, and that these boats decline to do it, but hug the Canadian shore and let the American commerce go. Why, gentlemen——

Mr. BURTON. One minute. I do not want the gentleman to pause in such an eloquent passage, but does he know of a single boat of any draft such as would use this Canadian channel that ever stopped there? No stop was ever made there by any of these through boats.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I know that during the last year several boats were built at Wyandotte, one of the largest boats that could be built, and we had to get them out by lighters.

Mr. BURTON. I am not asking about shipbuilding.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Perhaps I misapprehended the gentleman's question. Now, I think that I apprehend what he meant. These boats do not stop, I know. But the $20,000,000 in the river and harbor bill charged to the State of Michigan is for the benefit of the four ports, Chicago, Duluth, Cleveland, and Buffalo, and between these terminals not one of these great freighters stop and not one pound of freight is left or one pound of freight taken. That is what we object to. The entire purpose of this bill, so far as Michigan is concerned, is not for the benefit of Michigan, but for the benefit of these great ports, and these great ports alone.

I desire, in addition to what I have said, to be a little more specific. In the first place, under the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, provision was made for a survey of the river from Detroit to Lake Erie, with plan and estimate of cost of such improvements as would secure a safe and convenient channel 21 feet deep between said points.

Up to this time no definite action had been taken, so far as I can learn, looking toward the permanent improvement and use of the Canadian channel or Plan "A," referred to in the item under consideration.

From 1837 until 1874 the American channel, as described in plan "C," referred to in the preliminary report on survey of Detroit River, above referred to, had been almost exclusively used. Extensive shipyards were at Trenton and other large manufacturing industries. The town was prosperous and strong and gave promise of becoming a great and thriving city, as I have before said. Indeed, it is referred to in the reports and documents as the city of Trenton. The records of Congress show that Senator Zachariah Chandler, who so ably and for so many years represented Michigan, continually and gallantly fought for the American channel.

From 1874 until 1892 the large vessels coming from the South and East out of Lake Erie naturally rounded near the Canadian shore, which shortened the distance some, but this was a rocky, narrow, and dangerous channel. But, upon the importunities of the owners of the larger boats, interested only in through traffic, improvements were made in the Canadian channel, and, regardless of its narrow, rocky, and dangerous condition, this committee has been persuaded to the belief that this channel and not the American channel should be improved and used.

It is plain that this Canadian channel serves only two interests—the through shipping, by lessening the distance and the time a trifle, and the little village of Amherstburg, in Canada. At the same time other interests on the American side have been seriously hurt. The shipyards and the factories at Trenton, before referred to, have been entirely destroyed, and this beautiful place, which gave such hope of a prosperous future, would have been almost destroyed except for the recent discovery of limestone rock and other products, which have given to it a new lease of life and a new prosperity.

If the old channel can be brought back and used, it will be rejuvenated into new life, and the old industries will be revived and new ones will come, and the day of prosperity will be at hand. The boats that pass up and down the lakes continuously throughout the seasons will stop here as of yore for supplies, and will be supplied with American goods from American stores, and the money will be kept in America. The dredging and the improvements of the channel will be carried on by Americans on the American side and Americans will reap the benefit.

Now all is changed. The lake boats stop at Amherstburg for coal and other supplies, and the little stores in that little village have become almost wholesale stores; the dredging and supplies are furnished by Canadian citizens, and the money is kept in Canada; and while Trenton perishes, Amherstburg grows almost beyond the power of Canadians to realize. Another thing: A million and a half tons of freight along the river front from Trenton to Ecorse would use this waterway if the American channel was improved, and boats would stop to get and leave freight which it is desirable to ship by water.

And since the investigation of the committee in December 1900, the Pennsylvania Salt Company has built a large plant, and many other factories and industries have been established along this river front, which, if properly aided and assisted, is destined to be one of the workshops of the world. A protective tariff has done much to build up this territory, and all it now needs to permit it to grow by leaps and bounds in the forward march in industry is better freight rates and shipping facilities than are now afforded. An improvement of the American channel will bring about the desired results.

Another thing: The aim and end of the improvements authorized by the committee is for the sole purpose of stimulating and assisting the boats engaged in the through business. We are told that nearly 26,000,000 tons of freight pass through the Detroit River annually. This is true; it passes through, but all the freight that originates along the Detroit River receives no benefit from this appropriation.

The Great Lake freighters, plying up and down the lakes, a fleet in comparison with which the fabled and imaginary fleets of the past were as nothing, these wonderful boats in which we take such a just pride, will not take on nor leave off one pound of freight except at the four ports heretofore named. The reports accompanying this bill show that 1,000,000 tons of freight would use this waterway every year if the channel were improved and these boats would take or deliver freight. They further show that the iron and other material used in the shipyards must be taken to Detroit and reshipped, because these boats can not pass directly into Wyandotte, and must pass beyond and then return, which would increase the distance nearly 2 miles.

In other words, these great boats have driven the smaller ones from the lakes, and now they will not accommodate the shippers. This is the logical result of combination and greed, of which I will speak further on.

I want to show that there are not sufficient facts, clear and definite, before Congress to permit this body to act intelligently and to choose with certainty which plan should be adopted, and I want also to show that this Government has obtained no right to place this channel in Canadian waters, and that serious damage may result.

Gen. John M. Wilson, Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, in transmitting to the Secretary of War his preliminary report on the survey of the Detroit River, before referred to, recognizes the fact that the information to enable him or the Congress to come to a right conclusion is not at hand. He says:

Lieutenant-Colonel Lydecker presents three plans, designated as "A," "B," and "C," and while he believes that plans "A" or "B," or a combination of them, are the only ones calling for serious consideration, neither time nor data now available permits a conclusive discussion of the matter at present. It is proposed to make further surveys during the present season in relation to these plans, and it is expected that final report, with detailed plans and estimates, will be submitted in time for consideration by Congress at its next session.

And Colonel Lydecker, in his report of May 29, 1900, referred to by General Wilson, bears out this conclusion, wherein, after reciting the facts, he said:

It is therefore requested that this report be regarded as a preliminary one outlining the controlling features of the situation and suggesting three plans of improvement.

He further says:

It was necessary to direct operations so as to meet pressing emergencies in the shortest time possible, instead of following a comprehensible plan of improvement that would bring about the best final results.

Speaking of the Canadian channel, which is all in Canadian waters by the boundary line established under the treaty of August 9, 1842, he says:

In its present condition the channel is neither a safe nor convenient one for the enormous commerce passing through it.

Speaking of plan "A," he says:

Approximate estimates of the amount of excavating indicates that the cost of this plan would be from one and three-quarters to two millions of dollars. * * * This channel would continue to be wholly in Canadian waters, and its construction would probably be attended with some complications resulting from claims for damages by property owners on the main shore of Canada in the vicinity of Amherstburg, such action having been threatened in connection with operations heretofore undertaken in that locality.

Speaking of plan "B," he says:

It would make the straightest, safest, and most convenient channel possible in that locality.

Speaking of plan "C," he says that it would be wholly in American waters; that local interests along the Wyandotte-Trenton Channel have urged that due consideration be given to plans for a channel that shall be entirely in American territory, but that—

Neither time nor date now available permits a conclusive discussion of the matter at present; that no work beyond that now contemplated could be undertaken in this part of the channel (Canadian) without dangerously increasing the liability of damage to plant engaged in the work or to vessels engaged in traffic through the restricted channel.

And he concludes with this good advice:

It would therefore appear judicious to await a determination of the question of lake-level regulation before the final adoption of any local project that is independent of such regulation.

In the report of the Chief Engineer, Document No. 2, Fifty-seventh Congress, it is stated that this improvement of the Detroit River was commenced in 1874, under a project for excavating the channel through a reef of limestone bed rock, known as "Limekiln Crossing," and operations have been continued since that time; that this covers a distance of about 12 miles; that the channel is to be deepened from about 13 feet to 21 feet to a width of 600 feet in solid limestone rock, which is to be done by drilling, blasting, and dredging limestone bed rock.

It is further shown, on page 3191, that—

Extensive hydrographic surveys relating to improvements in progress or projects for future work were made, in which 162,536 located soundings were recorded, 54,525 of which were taken through the ice. All have been duly reduced, platted, and traced.

And yet these figures and the results are not placed before Congress, except in the report of Engineer Dixon, which is dated at Amherstburg, Ontario, July 1, 1901, and which was made on Canadian soil and which contains no details. He says, on page 3197:

A detailed report, giving results and estimates based on these surveys, was submitted under date of December 24, 1900.

Also—

That the office work of reducing the soundings taken when making these several surveys to the plane of reference and of platting the reduced soundings on tracing linen has been completed and the tracings transmitted.

Yet none of these facts are laid before the committee or before Congress.

The report of Colonel Lydecker, of Mr. Dixon, and of Mr. Muehle referred to I desire to quote from and place in the RECORD. Colonel Lydecker says:

This channel leaves the main channel of the Detroit River opposite the village of Ecorse, Mich., and enters Lake Erie at the foot of Grosse Isle, the distance from its head to deep water in the lake being about 15 miles. A railway bridge, with double swing draw, spans the channel just below the city of Trenton, about 8 miles below Ecorse. The general depth of channel down to the bridge is over 20 feet, and its width between contours of 20-foot depths ranges from 300 to 1,000 feet within these limits. Below the bridge the channel is obstructed by numerous shoals, and can be safely navigated only by light-draft vessels. For this reason the channel west of Grosse Isle is not used for through commerce, nor is there any place bordering on it having any considerable local commerce by water at present.

In the report of Mr. Muehle it is plainly shown why there is no lake commerce, for he states that the people are anxious to use this waterway, and would use it if they were permitted to do so, and that without doubt a million tons of freight would be shipped through this channel every year if the channel were used.

The report further shows that:

The total freight handled at Wyandotte annually is stated to be about 800,000 tons, the inshipments being mainly coal, stone, and structural steel and the outshipments finished products of the Alkali Works; that the daily output of the Sibley Stone Quarries, at Trenton, is 1,500 tons, and the freight handled at Trenton 500,000 tons a year; that two small steamers are engaged in local traffic, but that one of them does not come to Trenton.

He further says:

The depth of water in the channel west of Gross Isle is now ample for local commerce down to the railroad bridge. To obtain the same channel depth from the bridge to deep water in Lake Erie would be a work of great magnitude, and the cost would probably be several million dollars. The expenditure that would be needed to open up this line as a through channel of deep water, for local commerce only, is believed to be wholly inadmissible at present. The question of making it a through channel for general commerce was referred to in my report of May 29, 1900, in relation to securing a safe and convenient channel 21 feet deep from Lake Erie to Detroit, and will be further discussed in a more full and complete report that will probably be submitted for consideration during the next session of Congress.

I am of the opinion, for the reasons above indicated, that nothing relating to present or prospective local commerce will justify any deepening of this channel at this time. I also question the advisability of adopting it as a through line of interlake commerce, but, as hereinbefore indicated, this is a matter that will be dealt with in another report.

They also indicate that a deepening of the channel was not the real object sought by those who were active in having the item, to which this report refers, placed in the last river and harbor act; but that a more convenient connection with the through channel of Detroit River is what is desired, with special reference to providing a direct approach around the head of Gross Isle to the alkali works and shipyards at Wyandotte. Though no call has been made for report on such a project, I beg to state that existing commercial interests do not, in my opinion, justify any considerable expenditure for that purpose at present.

I desire to say in this connection that $10,000 is placed in this bill for this purpose, and to thank the committee for this, which will help our people much, and which they will appreciate.

And from Mr. Dixon's report, it appears that he was asked to find out the amount of shipping only, and not to make any suggestions as to the advisability of using the American channel, for he says in his report of October 10, 1900, that he has the honor to submit:

The following report as to the population, industries, and amount of freight handled at Wyandotte and Trenton, Mich., that would be affected by an improvement such as contemplated by the act of Congress dated June 6, 1900.

But at the end of the report, after speaking of the amount of freight, and that it is carried by railroads, he makes one plea for the American channel, and says:

If better facilities for shipping could be obtained, the greater part of this freight would be carried by vessels at a much less cost, and undoubtedly other industries would be located along this part of the Detroit River.

And Engineer Muehle makes a plea for this American river front. Speaking of the two plants of the Michigan Alkali Company, he says:

Both are located along the shore of the Detroit River and have superior facilities for shipping by water, yet the company is compelled to receive and ship nearly all materials and the products of their factories by rail, owing to the absence of a convenient and direct connection between the main channel of the Detroit River and the channel on the west side of Grosse Isle, along which the growing cities of Wyandotte and Trenton are situated.

He further says that the American channel width averages from 800 to 1,000 feet.

I want to say a word about this boat combine and, in connection therewith, of combines generally. Our people believe in progress and forward march generally. I believe that it is the duty of Government to assist the people and to better their commercial and financial welfare. But I do not believe that Government ought to cripple the weak to aid the strong, and I believe that when these combinations become so strong that they fairly defy the Government and refuse to serve the public, as these great shipping companies refuse to take the freight along this territory, as the chairman of this committee admits they do, that then they ought not to have the sole benefit of Government aid.

I recognize the fact that when a man gets little he desires more, and when he gets more he wants much; this is but natural. That when a farmer gets 40 acres of land he wants 80 acres, and when he gets 80 acres he wants 120 acres, and when he gets 120 acres he wants 160 acres, and when he gets 160 acres he wants to be a Republican, and wants a continuation of Republican Administration. But I do not want capital to endanger our liberties and confuse us socially. Capital is attracted by the thought that it may find a place where the markets and the output may be controlled, but these trusts are a gamble in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred.

The founders of the trust will get out, and the load will be carried by the "suckers." The gambling must wear out the gamblers in time, and the country will be strewn with trust wrecks. The trust is dealing with a hostile public, and must fail in time. This is the end of all fiat-value crazes. Destroy personality and the result is annihilation. Capital combines because it pays to combine. Labor combines because it pays to combine. People of like interests get together, and where their interests clash they fall apart. The salvation of the country lies in the salvation of the individual. The whole secret of relief lies in the application of the governmental principle of "special favors to none."

Now, in the face of these figures and conclusions, and with the danger that is liable to come to this Government by reason of placing this channel and blasting night and day with dynamite in Canadian waters and on Canadian soil, it is most imprudent to pursue this work. And certainly no further expenditures should be made on the Canadian side until definite facts and conclusive figures are placed before Congress showing to a certainty the relative cost of the three plans.

There never seems to have been any difficulty in using the American channel until the Canadian Southern Railroad bridge was built. And fair-minded and impartial men, familiar with the channel and the territory, insist that the bar near the bridge is sand and easily removed, and not solid rock, as that on the Canadian side. And among other arguments they show that this channel has become filled up by the river pouring sand into this channel.

In any event, even though it should cost more, and these great boats are hindered a few minutes in their onward way, and this great commerce is retarded for a minute, and the distance is a little greater, still, I submit, that it is far better that we spend American money on American soil, and that we build and use the American channel for American shipping, and that we plan and carry out our improvements for the American citizens on the American side, who pay taxes to support the Government of the United States and who will take up arms and make defense for the Stars and Stripes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was considered; and the amendment was lost.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the Cumberland River items on page 62 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to recur to the Cumberland River items on page 62 of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in looking over the RECORD this morning I find that no account is given of the consideration of the first item in this bill, which appropriates $185,000 for the Harpeth Shoals or Lock A in Cumberland River, Tennessee. You will find no report of it in the RECORD. The RECORD only refers to the item $105,000 for Lock No. 1 as considered. I would ask that the first item for $185,000 be read and considered by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not quite understand the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There is no report in the RECORD of the item for $185,000 for Lock B on Cumberland River having been considered yesterday by the committee. The item referring to the Upper Cumberland is reported in the RECORD as having been considered yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that it is not customary to publish in the RECORD that part of the bill to which there are no amendments, only to put in the RECORD the last paragraph that is read to which the amendment refers.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Very well, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to be sure about it. Now, I ask for the consideration of the following amendment to the amendment that was adopted yesterday with reference to Lock No. 1, which has already been considered by the committee. In other words, my amendment is to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after Mr. RICHARDSON'S amendment, on page 62:

"Provided further, That before leasing or licensing such water privileges, or issuing permits for the construction and operation of such canals, or otherwise disposing of any water power or privilege, the Secretary of War shall first advertise the same in one or more daily papers at Nashville, for sixty days immediately preceding, stating specifically the right or privilege proposed to be leased or conveyed, with its exact limitations, inviting bids for the same, and he may in his discretion then lease the same for a specific term of years at so much per year to be paid semiannually in cash into the Treasury, the proceeds to be used in reimbursement to the Treasury of the United States of funds heretofore expended in the improvement of the Cumberland River, or for future applications toward the maintenance and extension of said improvement."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will state that I called at the War Department this morning and submitted this amendment to General Gillespie and his assistant, Colonel Mackenzie. The wording and policy of the amendment was approved. The last part appropriating the proceeds for reimbursement of the Treasury or to appropriate it for the improvement of the Cumberland River hereafter, was drawn literally by General Gillespie himself.

Mr. BURTON. Is this done by agreement with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] or is there to be a controversy about the amendment?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The location of the dam is at my own home. It is within 2 miles of the capital. It is within a mile and three-quarters of my own door. The amendment that was presented yesterday and passed by the committee, I say, was handed to me by my colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] about two hours before it was passed upon by the committee. Since the House adjourned yesterday I have investigated, and for the first time, the matter. I had no time to do so yesterday.

I will state that I have never received a letter from a single individual in the Sixth Congressional district about such an improvement or such an amendment. Not a single individual has opened his mouth to me about it at any time, except, as I stated yesterday, about a year ago one of my constituents asked me who controlled the right to grant this privilege, and I told him Congress. The matter having passed entirely from my mind in the meantime, I thought no more about it.

I will state that Senator BATE, the senior Senator from Tennessee, who also lives at the city of Nashville, approves the amendment which I have had read to the committee, and he says that he has never heard one word from anybody about the amendment introduced by my colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] until I spoke to him about it last night.

Now, Mr. Chairman, General Gillespie said to me this morning that there was a great deal of electric machinery being planted all over the country, and the policy was being suggested of employing the waste water power of many of the locks and dams in giving power to the various electric plants and other like machinery throughout the country; that at the city of Nashville we could get 1,000 horsepower easily, and that it is "worth from $500 to $1,000 per horsepower," which, if correct, would produce enough money, I may add, not only to build the locks and dams below the city of Nashville, which will cost about $1,300,000, but to build every one of the 22 locks above the city of Nashville.

The honorable committee will remember that I have struggled hard and faithfully to get an appropriation to do this work, and that I have only received at the hands of this honorable committee an appropriation of $285,000 to finish Lock 1 at Harpeth Shoals, in territory contiguous to the city of Nashville, and Lock No. 1, just below Nashville. And, Mr. Chairman, I can not stand here in the presence of this honorable body, and in the presence of my own struggling and ambitious people, who expect me to represent them here and get this improvement accomplished, and see this valuable power, worth more than enough to the work on the entire Cumberland River which the Government has laid out to be done, and which we want done, given away to any man without protesting, whether it be my brother or my father, if living, or the best friend I have on earth—my country first, my friends next. Yet the amendment which was passed yesterday by this honorable committee provides for giving this invaluable right away for nothing. Such an act would be a "waste"—a travesty on my people's rights.

This work is at my home, yet I was not consulted about it. Not one word was said to me until my colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] spoke to me yesterday afternoon.

Why, sirs, three weeks ago the matter was brought to the attention of the assistant civil engineer, Mr. McKenzie, at the War Department, as he stated to me; and the amendment that was adopted yesterday was prepared at that time by General Gillespie and his assistant, Colonel McKenzie. So I say, with all due deference to my distinguished colleague, that in justice to me it seems to me I might have been consulted, so that I might at least have enlightened myself so as to make yesterday the explanation which I make to-day in sincerity and in earnestness, knowing exactly what I am talking about and feeling deeply the wrong about to be committed.

I got up early this morning, went to the War Department, and obtained the data which I have stated already—the proposition that this power be sold to the highest bidder, under direction of the War Department, and that the proceeds be put into the Treasury of the United States to reimburse the Government for the work already done, or, in the discretion of the honorable Secretary of War, to be done, in finishing up the locks and dams upon the Cumberland River which this honorable committee say should be done only in part now for want of funds. If this amendment of mine is adopted, at least I will have a chance made and saved to finish this work with little cost, if any, to the Government, and I appeal to the committee to unite with me and do so.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, there can be no controversy between my colleague [Mr. GAINES] and myself with respect to this proposition. I have no interest in it, except that a constituent of mine and a constituent of my colleague asked me last August to come to Washington City with them and go to the Secretary of War and ask for this privilege. I did so in connection with Senator CARMACK. My colleague was then out of the country, or I suppose he would have been invited to come. We went to the Secretary of War and presented the matter to him, and after a good deal of discussion, extending over several days, he stated, as I remember, that he preferred that Congress should act in the matter.

We called his attention to the fact that in several instances like privileges had been given, on the Upper Mississippi and other rivers of the country, and that was admitted. But it was thought best that Congress should give its consent. But we were not so informed until after we returned home. Then a letter came finally settling that question—that is, that the Secretary of War would decline to grant the request and would let Congress pass upon it. I heard no more and thought no more of it until, I suppose, two or three weeks ago, when I received a letter from my constituent, who is now temporarily in the district represented by my colleague, recalling the subject to my recollection and asking whether attention had been given to the matter of obtaining consent from Congress.

I could not give the exact date of that letter, but I went soon after that to the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. BURTON] and conferred with him about it. It was only a few days ago—not three weeks, as my colleague was informed—the chairman of that committee wrote me a letter and inclosed me the amendment which I offered yesterday, or substantially that amendment. I sent it at once to Nashville, and asked if that was satisfactory; and I received a reply, dated March 15, saying that that amendment or some similar amendment would be satisfactory. I then called to see the chairman of the committee, and, on account of the fact that he was occupied, he suggested that I see him the day before yesterday.

So only the day before yesterday, I believe it was—the chairman of the committee will correct me if I am mistaken—within the past three days, at any rate, the amendment was agreed upon. So that I could not until then have submitted it to my colleague. I had no objections to doing so. Three days or two days ago, when the amendment was finally agreed upon in the shape offered, I determined to submit it to my colleague. Yesterday morning I handed it to him and supposed it to be satisfactory. I did not suppose there would be any objection, because a like privilege had been granted, as I have stated, in other instances. When the Department suggested that there ought to be a charge for the privilege (which the chairman of the committee concurred in) I interposed no objection, and supposed that the Secretary of War would make a reasonable charge.

Now, beyond that I have no connection with the matter; and it is wholly immaterial to me except to do my duty to the gentleman who had asked me to come to Washington, and at whose expense I came here last August with the view of getting this privilege from the Department. That is all there is in it. I introduced the amendment in perfect good faith. It may be that it is worth what my colleague suggests. I do not know what it is worth, but the amendment leaves it optional with the Secretary of War to charge the full amount that the privilege may be worth.

It leaves it in the discretion of the Secretary of War to terminate it whenever he deems it is interfering with navigation and it reserves the right to Congress to repeal, alter, and amend it at any time. Now, that is about the whole of the case as far as I know, and beyond that I have no interest, and could have none, of course.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If necessary, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. My colleague is mistaken when he says that he showed me this amendment yesterday morning. It was yesterday afternoon, about 2.30 o'clock.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It was soon after we met.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. About half past 2 o'clock. I would state to the House I had no chance yesterday to look into the matter. I never heard of it before. You can see it is an almost invaluable right, and I was delighted and astonished yesterday evening when my colleague, Mr. MOON, stated he was offered and he has now in his pocket, or had yesterday, a proposition from one of the wealthiest concerns in New York, thoroughly reliable, to pay for the lock and dam at Chattanooga $895,000 cash, as he stated yesterday afternoon in his speech.

He is a lawyer, and he is a man of good judgment, as you all know. If this power at Chattanooga is worth to an electrical concern, or anybody else, that amount of money, then at Nashville, which is three times as large as Chattanooga, it will be worth nearly $3,000,000, which will more than pay for all the locks and dams that we want built on the Lower Cumberland, and the excess will help to pay the cost of the locks and dams—1 to 7—above the city of Nashville, which we desire to finish at once.

I would state, Mr. Chairman, that the honorable officers in the Engineering Department of the War Department this morning approved the amendment which I submitted to them and which has been read from the desk, and here is a pencil memorandum added to it by General Gillespie at the War Department. This Lock No. 1 is at my own home. It is in my own district. The Cumberland River does not touch the district of my colleague, and I do not understand that he opposes the amendment at all; he simply undertakes to explain what he offered yesterday. And in addition to that I will say to you another thing, that the amendment which was passed yesterday confined the right to lease to the abutting owners and no one else, which is wrong, I think. Let me read it to you:

> That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to grant leases or licenses to the owners of land abutting on said river at or near the lock or dam aforesaid, for the use of the water power created by said dam, at such a rate and on such conditions and for such periods of time as may seem to him expedient, etc.

Now, as I remember, the abutting owner on one side is the old race-horse association, and the other side is a turnpike running alongside of the river at this lock site. So you see, if the right of the Government to lease to the abutting owner, and no one else, is granted, why, then you can only lease to him, and if he does not want to lease it you can not lease to any person who is not an abutting owner.

The power, then, to lease becomes worthless. The abutter not wanting to lease this privilege or to sell his abutting property bars any proposed lessee unless he can reach it for public purposes by the power of eminent domain. Such an abutter would become autocratic and deprive the public of the benefit of this otherwise invaluable privilege. This morning General Gillespie said to me this power or franchise is valued at $500 to $1,000 per horsepower, and that at this lock, No. 1, we can get 1,000 horsepower; but still we are about to give it away.

Mr. BURTON. I see, Mr. Chairman, that this is liable to lead to a personal controversy.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Not at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Not at all.

Mr. BURTON. Is there a variance of opinion between the two gentlemen?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Not that I see.

Mr. BURTON. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] consent to this amendment?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not consent to it. If the committee see fit to adopt it, I have no objection to it.

Mr. BURTON. I thought, perhaps, we could bring this discussion to a close. I should like to make a brief statement myself before it is finished.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What I wanted to do was to call my colleague's attention to what has been done. Of course, he claims to state the facts. I have a statement from a constituent of his, Mr. Brandon, who says that he owns the land. I do not know who owns it, but Mr. C. H. Brandon——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not know who owns it. My colleague says it belongs to the race track.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is my recollection. I am not a race-horse man, but that is my recollection. Unless the gentleman from Ohio desires to say something, I call for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BURTON. Just a word, Mr. Chairman. I think this is primarily a matter for the gentlemen from Tennessee to settle. I think we should listen with the utmost respect at any rate to their arguments. I simply repeat what I said yesterday on the subject:

> This amendment proposes to grant the use of water power at Nashville. It is an amendment which has not been considered by our committee, but personally I have no objection to it.
> Permit me to say that any such privilege as this should be very carefully guarded, so that navigation may not be injured. I think the provision here is carefully guarded, and the sole question is whether such a right should be granted by Congress or not. Upon that question the members of this House are quite as competent to decide as any member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

I drew a form of amendment myself and gave it to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], but I think he chose that suggested by the War Department. I did not regard that as any slight upon myself. I think the form which he chose a little better, a little briefer. The question now before the committee is, shall we leave this to the Secretary of War for him to fix the compensation, or is that water privilege of such value that we ought to have competition upon it?

While it is probable that the Secretary of War would demand a reasonable sum, if it is thought by the gentleman representing that district that competitive bidding would bring a higher price, and if he regards it as a very valuable franchise, I should think we should adopt his amendment, because what we want is not to let this privilege get away without due compensation. There have been quite a number of instances where these permits have been granted by Congress, possibly some cases where a quasi permit has been granted by the War Department without. I want to make no objection, however, to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment? I want to ask him if there is any precedent for the Secretary of War leasing a privilege like this to the highest bidder after advertising?

Mr. BURTON. I am not aware that there is. The precedents are not numerous in any event.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They are not very numerous, but I think it has been done. I inquired about this at the War Department and Colonel Mackenzie gave me the names of the Green River and Barren River in Kentucky and the Muskingum River in Ohio, where the power is sold, and General Gillespie gave me the name of some other river I do not recall.

Mr. BURTON. I do not understand that in those cases it has been left to competitive bidding. I do not know of any such case.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; but they approve the amendment which I have offered, and it was read to them this morning, and the original of it was written by General Gillespie. The gentleman from Ohio can look at it, if he chooses. He thinks the bidding ought to be competitive, because there are valuable rights. He says there is 1,000 horsepower there and every horsepower is worth from five hundred to a thousand dollars per horsepower, which will more than do all the work that the Government wants to do on the Cumberland.

Mr. BURTON. I want to say in regard to the precedents, I think the cases of the Green River and Barren River and the Muskingum River were cases where water power was leased by the State, the State having first commenced the improvement of these rivers, and the improvement and public works on the rivers were at a later time transferred to the United States. In some of those cases there are water privileges which are embarrassing, because they were granted in perpetuity before they were turned over to the Government.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Several times we have had controversies before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in reference to water power in navigable streams. I should like to ask the gentleman's opinion as to whether the right to the water power is a right of the Government or a right of the owners of the adjoining property, and whether the interest of the Government is that of the owner of the water power or simply the controller of a navigable stream for the purposes of commerce?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, I think the rights clearly exist in the Government. The distinction is rather an academic one as to who is the owner. In my opinion the right exists in the Government to make these leases. There are a number of public works in the States of Ohio and Kentucky and elsewhere, where canals and locks have been built by the State through its board of public works or some other organization, and their rights to lease these privileges and receive compensation for them have been recognized very generally; I think I may say universally.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand this case is a case where they want the use of water power coming from locks?

Mr. BURTON. It flows from the river above the locks. It is carried around by races. It is a natural channel, a canalized river. These leases have been sustained, not only in the case of canals, but of rivers that were canalized, or furnished with locks and dams.

Mr. MANN. Is there not a distinction?

Mr. BURTON. I do not think so.

Mr. MANN. Is there not a distinction between leasing water power from canals or locks which the Government constructs and leasing water power on rivers where the Government only has control for navigable purposes?

Mr. BURTON. I do not think so. I have never given that subject very elaborate consideration, but I know these leases have been made where locks and dams were constructed on a river and prices paid by the lessees.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, of course I understand that the Government, having the power to permit the construction of a dam or to withhold that permission, can say to the adjoining property owners, "You must pay us before we will give the permission or we will refuse that permission." But the Government has no authority, as I understand it, to permit anybody to control the water power, except to permit the owners of adjoining properties to construct a dam. The Government does not own the water power.

Mr. BURTON. That question may cause some embarrassment in the matter of competitive bids. But I do not think it is necessary for us to go into that. I am very well satisfied that leases have been made where rivers have been canalized in this manner, and the right to use the water by individuals has been granted as if it were the property of the Government.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit me—would you consider a provision of that kind of any value to anyone except the person who owned the adjoining property? In other words, how could another party get any benefit from it if he did not own the land? How could he get to the water, or how could he get to the fore bay or dam built in connection with the Government dam? How could he use it unless he could get to it, and how could he get to it unless he owned the land?

Mr. BURTON. Of course there might be an embarrassing question in connection with that. Any corporation——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTON. I move to strike out that portion of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee that is in pencil. The words beginning with "the proceeds to be used."

Any corporation, municipal or otherwise, having the right of eminent domain could secure the course which the power canal should take.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is what I was about to state to my colleague. A public corporation, of course, under the right of eminent domain, could take the banks for a public purpose.

Mr. BURTON. I want to call attention to this——

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has such a large knowledge on the subject of rivers and harbors——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTON. I made a motion, if the Chair please.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, if the gentleman would like to be recognized——

Mr. BURTON. I offered an amendment to strike out a portion of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, beginning with "the proceeds to be used," etc., the latter part of the amendment.

Mr. MANN. The property right of the owner of the adjoining property to the river is not over the navigation, but as to the flow in the river.

Mr. BURTON. I suppose his riparian rights included the natural flow of the river. This would be the practical effect, however, in the construction of these locks on this river. The Government would have to acquire the property for a limited distance on both sides for the purpose of the improvement, and it could certainly prevent anyone else from enjoying this privilege, because at the place where the lock is to be built, where the water power is created, the Government would be the owner.

Mr. MANN. The reason why I ask is we have had the same sort of question. Here is a proposition, one to permit the Secretary of War to lease to the owners of adjoining property, and the other ordering the Secretary of War to advertise for bids. Now, I can not see, unless the gentleman can show, how the Secretary of War can advertise for bids to grant the right to anyone except the owner of the adjoining property.

Mr. BURTON. There is a question whether the bidders are not restricted in number.

Mr. MANN. Absolutely.

Mr. TONGUE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question in this connection?

Mr. BURTON. There is one portion of the argument on this amendment that I want to conclude, and then I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TONGUE. It is in connection with this that I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Is it necessary that the owner should be one person? Can not it be on both sides of the river and even above and below?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. TONGUE. So that the competition may be between the owners of the riparian rights and still be more than one.

Mr. BURTON. This latter portion of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee is certainly objectionable. It reads:

> The proceeds to be used in reimbursement to the Treasury of the United States or funds heretofore expended in the improvement of the Cumberland River, or for further applications toward the maintenance and extension of said improvement.

Will the gentleman from Tennessee withdraw that?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That was added at the Engineer's Office this morning by General Gillespie himself after we talked the matter over.

Mr. BURTON. That is a question for Congress to decide and not the engineers. This amendment would leave to the executive department the decision of the question how the money is to be expended which would be paid under the lease. Congress should not abdicate the right to decide the question how the money shall be expended.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentlemen will remember that the resolution is repealable at any time—that is, the original resolution to which this is an amendment.

Mr. BURTON. I do not think we should depend upon the possible repeal of a provision in the bill. We should make a proper provision now. So I move that the portion of the amendment referred to be stricken out. It is that portion of the amendment in pencil beginning with the words "The proceeds to be used in reimbursement to the Treasury of the United States or funds heretofore expended in the improvement of the Cumberland River, or for further applications toward the maintenance and extension of said improvement." As far as the disposition of the proceeds of the lease is concerned they would go to the Treasury without your ordering it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I regret very much to withdraw it, but if the gentleman raises objections to it, I accept his amendment and withdraw that portion of it. Now, Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the gentleman from Tennessee will be permitted to modify his amendment. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. Is there anything in his proposition that permits the Secretary of War to reject a bid? Do you not compel him to accept the bids that are made?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; it is within his discretion. The amendment reads "in the discretion of the Secretary of War," or words to that effect. In other words, if the bid is not what it should be, he can reject it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Tennessee withdraws that portion of the amendment which was in pencil at the end of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That has already been done. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee as modified by him with the unanimous consent of the committeee, in pursuance of the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CANDLER. Is there any objection to having the amendment again read?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is only to require the privilege to be put up to the highest bidder and sold.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I think there should be this addition at the end of the amendment, "and the Secretary of War shall have the right to reject any and all bids."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think that is included in the amendment, but I accept it. That is very proper.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee will be modified according to the suggestion which is made by the gentleman from Ohio.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee as modified by the unanimous consent of the committee.

The question was considered; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 55 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to return to page 55 of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON. To the item included in lines 12 to 16, inclusive. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 14, the word "thereof." The reason for that is this: There is just a little ambiguity whether this reference to $4,000 does not create an additional appropriation. The intent of the committee was to recommend the appropriation of $20,000 for the Tombigbee River, of which $4,000 might be expended on this upper portion.

The amendment was considered, and agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. There is a further provision in section 1 which was passed over—that referring to the water hyacinth, Florida and Alabama, page 53. I understand the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER] desired to have that section passed. At his request it was passed until the conclusion of the reading of section 1, at which time it was to be taken up again.

Mr. BALL of Texas. I think the chairman of the committee has made some agreement with the gentleman from Texas as to a change.

Mr. BURTON. This is another provision. This is in regard to the water hyacinth. The other was in regard to the Sabine Lake, where a change was made. I think I may take it for granted that the gentleman from Texas has abandoned his intention to amend the paragraph in regard to the water hyacinth. However, I will ask unanimous consent that it be passed over until the close of the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. There is another amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from Texas, on page 57.

Mr. BURTON. Yes. I will send up two amendments to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 57, strike out lines 12 to 18, inclusive, and to and including the word "canal," in line 19, and insert in place thereof:
> "Improving mouths of Sabine and Neches rivers, Texas, in accordance with House Document No. 299, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, by connecting the same with Sabine Pass by a channel 8 feet deep through Sabine Lake: Continuing improvement, $79,000. The amount herein appropriated shall not be expended in the construction of revetments, nor shall any plan be adopted which shall require the construction of revetments: Provided further, That in the discretion of the Secretary of War he may select a route at or near the west shore of said lake, and said channel may be connected with Port Arthur Canal."
> After line 21 insert:
> "In case funds shall be furnished by the citizens of Orange and Beaumont, or in any way to secure a channel along the route herein described of a greater depth than 8 feet, the amount herein appropriated may be expended in securing a greater depth than herein designated."

Mr. BURTON. I will say that that paragraph has been redrawn after consultation with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER], and I think it secures and protects the rights of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the situation as he understands it. This paragraph was passed over, leaving an amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER] pending. Is that to be withdrawn?

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the substitute offered by the chairman of the committee be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will first be on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER] on yesterday. If that is voted down the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio would be in order. The first question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER].

The question was considered; and the amendment was lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the two amendments as a substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was considered; and the amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to invite the Government of Great Britain to join in the formation of an international commission, to be composed of three members from the United States and three who shall represent the interests of the Dominion of Canada, whose duty it shall be to investigate and report upon the conditions and uses of the waters adjacent to the boundary lines between the United States and Canada, including all of the waters of the lakes and rivers whose natural outlet is by the River St. Lawrence to the Atlantic Ocean; also upon the maintenance and regulation of suitable levels; and also upon the effect upon the shores of these waters and the structures thereon, and upon the interests of navigation, by reason of their diversion from their natural flow; and, further, to report upon the necessary measures to regulate such diversion, and to make such recommendations for improvements and regulations as shall best subserve the interests of navigation in said waters. The said commissioners shall report upon the advisability of locating a dam at the outlet of Lake Erie, with a view to determining whether such dam will benefit navigation, and if such structure is deemed advisable, shall make recommendations to their respective Governments looking to an agreement or treaty which shall provide for the construction of the same, and they shall make an estimate of the probable cost thereof. The President, in selecting the three members of said commission who shall represent the United States, is authorized to appoint one officer of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, one civil engineer well versed in the hydraulics of the Great Lakes, and one lawyer of experience in questions of international and riparian law, and said commission shall be authorized to employ such persons as it may deem needful in the performance of the duties hereby imposed; and for the purpose of paying the expenses and salaries of said commission the Secretary of War is authorized to expend from the amounts heretofore appropriated for the St. Marys River at the falls, the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay that portion of the expenses of said commission chargeable to the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. If I can have the attention of the learned chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I should like to inquire as to the purpose or general theory upon which this proposition is based. What is the expectation in regard to raising the level of the waters in Lake Erie?

Mr. BURTON. As I stated somewhat fully in my opening remarks, Lake Erie at its outlet has several times been obstructed by an ice jam, which has caused the level of the lake to rise. It is a matter of experience that such a rise in the level affects not merely the lower portion, but the whole lake alike. There seems to be no slope in the water, so that if there is an increase of 16 inches at Buffalo there is the same at Toledo. In view of that fact and the further fact that for some years the level of the lake has been very much lower than the ordinary mean level, it is thought best to consider whether it would not be well to locate a dam at that place, which would raise the depth of water in the respective harbors on the lake.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, that is a matter that would require international agreement.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to inform us whether there is any likelihood that the Canadian or British Government will accede to this agreement?

Mr. BURTON. So far as we have information, it is favorable to such a result. The navigation interests in Canada are equally anxious that something of this kind should be done.

Mr. MANN. One reason I have asked this question is because I have been informed that the Canadian people or the Canadian government have in serious contemplation the construction of a canal from Georgian Bay, or the rivers flowing into it, to connect eventually with the Ottawa River, with the view of carrying the commerce of the Western lakes by way of Montreal without going through Lake Erie at all.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, that is a project which has been under consideration for years. I will say to the gentleman that it is quite probable such a canal will be built. But even if it were, it would very slightly affect the traffic of the lower lakes. There is no vessel man who has any apprehension from the construction of that canal. It might perhaps diminish his profits somewhat; but if it were built the great majority of the freight now carried to the lower lakes would still be carried.

Mr. MANN. If a canal like that were built, would it not make quite a difference in the transportation of grain intended for export? It would undoubtedly shorten very considerably the route.

Mr. BURTON. No doubt a considerable amount of grain and other articles would go through this proposed canal from Georgian Bay. But there is another factor to be considered—one which the gentleman knows more about than I do.

Mr. MANN. If there is any one thing that I know more about than the gentleman does, I congratulate myself.

Mr. BURTON. That is a very friendly expression on the part of the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. A sincere one.

Mr. BURTON. I take it certainly as very friendly, but it is one of those statements which are not to be put down in the book as true. [Laughter.]

Some months ago a boat line was established to run from Chicago through to European ports; but it was found that the insurance rate was so high for boats going below Montreal and Quebec that the line could not be run profitably. For a considerable portion of the year that route is almost impracticable, and it is not at all likely that the quantity of freight—certainly not of iron ore or coal—on Lake Erie, will be at all diminished. Nor is it probable that the quantity of grain would be very greatly diminished, even if this canal should be constructed.

What happens so often in the case of railroads would probably happen in this case. When a railroad is built to parallel or compete with another already in the field some people think that the effect must be to cut the traffic right in two, and that neither road will be able to live. But usually the new road is built in response to a demand for increased facilities, and in a few years each does quite as much business as the first one did before.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent to occupy five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to make a speech on this question, but simply to elicit information for my own benefit.

I had never anticipated that there would be a boat line which would run by this proposed Canadian canal to European ports. I never anticipated that the boat line, which was originally started to run from Chicago to England, could possibly succeed. I do not believe there is any chance that a vessel that is best suited for ocean navigation will be profitably used in lake navigation or canal navigation.

But it may become a very important matter, I may say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], to whom I defer in matters of judgment, particularly relating to rivers and harbors; it may become a very important question whether grain going from the Western ports can go on a direct route through a short canal in Canadian waters, or whether it shall go on the present very indirect route up to the north end of Lake Michigan and back again down through Detroit River and through Lake Erie to Buffalo, and then most of it run on a long route south to New York City.

It becomes of the greatest importance, in view of the proposition of the Canadians to construct this short line, that every facility shall be opened up for the transportation interests in this country, in order that this export may continue to go from American ports. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to offer an amendment, which I will send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 95, line 10, insert "the diversion of these waters from or change in."

Mr. BURTON. I think it states the object of the commission a little more clearly and meets the situation better.

The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That any regulations heretofore or hereafter prescribed by the Secretary of War in pursuance of the fourth and fifth sections of the river and harbor act of August 18, 1894, may be enforced as provided in section 17 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, the provisions whereof are hereby made applicable to the said regulations.

Mr. BURTON. I offer the following amendment to that.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7, page 97, after the word "ninety-four," insert "and any regulations hereafter prescribed in pursuance of the aforesaid section 4 as amended by section 11 of this act."

Mr. BURTON. I would state that this amendment is offered in anticipation of our passing section 11, and I suggest that we wait until that section is read and passed upon.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to extend the time of completion of any bridge, the construction of which has been or may hereafter be authorized under any law of Congress, whenever application to him shall be made before the expiration of the time limited, and the reason for such extension shall be deemed by him to be sufficient; and the provisions of section 9 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1891, are hereby made applicable alike to the completed and uncompleted portions of the Illinois and Mississippi Canal. Whenever the Secretary of War shall approve plans for a bridge to be built across said canal he may, in his discretion, and subject to such terms and conditions as in his judgment are equitable, expedient, and just to the public, grant to the person or corporation building and owning such bridge a right of way across the lands of the United States on either side of and adjacent to the said canal; also the privilege of occupying so much of said lands as may be necessary for the piers, abutments, and other portions of the bridge structure and approaches.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, in the earlier part of that section a question of jurisdiction arises between committees of this House, and as I recognize the necessity of comity in the bringing forward of all legislation, I ask the House to strike out the words in section 10 from the word "That," at the beginning of line 22 on page 98, to and including the word "and" at the beginning of line 3 on page 99, and also that the section be amended by changing, in line 3 of page 99, the letter "t" in the word "the" to a capital "T."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendments offered by the gentleman from Ohio will be considered together. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON. The remainder of the section pertains to the regulation of bridges across a navigable waterway for which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has recommended appropriations and for which appropriations have been made by Congress. Thus it would seem clear that jurisdiction of the subject-matter belongs to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendments offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendments agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to prescribe regulations to govern the speed and movement of vessels and other water craft in any public navigable channel which has been improved under authority of Congress whenever, in his judgment, the public necessity requires such regulations. Such regulations shall be posted in conspicuous and appropriate places for the information of the public; and every person and every corporation which shall knowingly and willfully violate such regulations shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500, or by imprisonment (in the case of a natural person) not exceeding six months, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That the said regulations may be enforced as provided in section 17 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, the provisions whereof are hereby made applicable thereto.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to offer an amendment to that section by substituting the following, which I will send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That section 4 of the river and harbor act of August 18, 1894, be and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to prescribe such rules and regulations for the use, administration, and navigation of any or all canals and similar works of navigation that now are, or that hereafter may be, owned, operated, or maintained by the United States as in his judgment the public necessity may require; and he is also authorized to prescribe regulations to govern the speed and movement of vessels and other water craft in any public navigable channel which has been improved under authority of Congress, whenever, in his judgment, such regulations are necessary to protect such improved channels from injury, or to prevent interference with the operations of the United States in improving navigable waters or injury to any plant that may be employed in such operations.

"Such rules and regulations shall be posted in conspicuous and appropriate places for the information of the public; and every person and every corporation which shall violate such rules and regulations shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, on conviction thereof in any district court in the United States within whose territorial jurisdiction such offense may have been committed, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment (in the case of a natural person) not exceeding six months, in the discretion of the court."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I will state briefly the reason for this amendment. When this bill was reported to the House I was not aware of the existence of another statute pertaining to canals. It is part of the river and harbor act of 1894. Section 4 of the river and harbor act of 1894 provides similar regulations and similar penalties in the use, administration, and navigation of any or all canals and similar works of navigation. It seemed desirable not to have two separate sections or statutes upon these two subjects so intimately connected, and therefore this section is redrawn so as to cover both canals and natural channels improved by the Government, thereby intending to include all navigable waters under improvement by the Government.

I want to say further that this does not conflict with the regulations that have been established or the statutes which have been passed giving to the Revenue-Cutter Service a certain amount of authority. Briefly speaking, the dividing line between those statutes and these is to this effect: Those pertain to the rules of the road on through navigation; these pertain to the movement of vessels in channels where there are artificial works or where there are improvements under way. The line of division is clearly drawn. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Channel from New Haven Harbor via Oyster Point to Kimberly avenue bridge on West River.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 104, after line 3, insert:

"DELAWARE.

"Delaware Bay, Harbor of Refuge, with a view to ascertaining what further protection is necessary."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Ohio if he correctly stated the place at which he desired the amendment to be inserted?

Mr. BURTON. It comes immediately after line 2. The word "Delaware" should be in capitals, as a designation of the State.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment stated "line 3." Without objection, it will be inserted as suggested.

Mr. BURTON. "After line 2" would designate it more accurately.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

ILLINOIS.

Mississippi River at Moline, with a view to the construction of a lock.
Rock River, from the mouth to Rockford.
Little Wabash River.

Mr. BURTON. I have some question whether this does not belong to a different section, but I will offer the amendment here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 105, in line 1, strike out "Little Wabash River" and insert "Ohio River, channels at or near Elizabethtown."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ohio River, below the mouth of Green River, with a view to the construction of a movable dam, so as to make a harbor at Henderson, Ky., and Evansville, Ind., and to give a depth of 6 feet on the lower miter sill on Lock No. 1, Green River.

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the words "Green River," at the end of line 8, page 105, add the following:

"Ohio River, below the mouth of Salt River, with a view to the construction of a movable dam, so as to make a harbor at New Albany, Ind., and Louisville, Ky., of an average depth of 6 feet below the Ohio Falls."

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Chairman, I presume it will not be questioned by any member of this House that the Ohio River is a very important waterway. The amendment which I have just had the honor to submit simply seeks to secure a preliminary survey of a point designated, at the mouth of Salt River, which is located about 20 miles below the Ohio Falls. The city of New Albany is located below the Ohio Falls, on the Indiana side, and contains a population of about 22,000. The city of Louisville, upon the Kentucky side, has a population of about 225,000 people. The waters below the Ohio Falls during the months of August, September, and October are usually so shallow that none of the large steamers that ply on the Ohio River can navigate them.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, the waters below the Ohio Falls in many places during those months scarcely afford sufficient depth of water to enable steamers of the smallest kind to navigate this part of the river, and during the lowest stages render it absolutely impossible for any but the smallest craft to ply upon that part of the river which carry only very small amounts of freight. There are no railroads paralleling this river below the Ohio Falls on either side, and with the exception of Westpoint, on the Kentucky side, and Cannelton, on the Indiana side, no railroad touches upon said river for more than 100 miles below the falls, and the farmers and people throughout this great section of country are entirely dependent upon river transportation. For want of proper facilities for transporting their products to market they suffer annually the loss of thousands of dollars in not being able to ship their fruits and other perishable products to the markets. They are at the mercy of Congress, and I earnestly beg of you to adopt this amendment and thus inaugurate this improvement in this part of the river.

Now, this is in pursuance of a system that has been adopted by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the establishment of a general system of improvements on this river. This system involves the construction of locks and movable dams for the purpose of creating a stage of water having an average depth of 6 feet. I venture the assertion that there is no point on the Ohio River which is more important. As suggested, for this great reach there are no railroads running parallel to the Ohio River, excepting the one which touches the river at the point mentioned.

From there on for a hundred miles below there is no railroad touching the river, so that, as already stated, the people living along the Ohio for more than a hundred miles below the Ohio Falls are absolutely dependent for transportation of their products to market upon the Ohio River. Large sections of this country grows fruit, and the farmers are interested in fruit culture. In my own county, bordering upon this river for 60 miles below the Ohio Falls, the people in the southern part of the county have no facilities of transportation other than this river, and during that part of the year—the latter part of the summer and early fall—just when they most need these facilities, when their apples, peaches, and other fruits are ripe and must be marketed, they are compelled in many instances to see it rot and perish in the orchards or at the wharves for want of facilities of shipment, all on account of the low water and scarcity of boats able to get through the channel of this river. Sometimes even these small and light-draft boats are hung up on sand bars and in shoal places for two or three or more days, at a great loss to freight and cargo.

I trust the chairman of the committee will consent, or at any rate will not object, to this amendment being adopted, for the reason that it involves no expenditure of money and is of the utmost importance to my people. It merely provides for a preliminary survey to ascertain the advisability of the establishment or location of a dam at this particular point. The last westerly point at which a dam has been located is Home City, immediately below Cincinnati, for the purpose of affording a harbor at the city of Cincinnati.

There is another consideration to which I wish to call attention in connection with this matter that makes it exceedingly important. If this dam is located at the mouth of or below Salt River it will afford navigable water up that river for perhaps 30 or 40 miles. I see that there is a provision in this bill authorizing a preliminary survey of the Salt River up to Shepherdsville.

Now, inasmuch as this involves no expenditure of money, and simply gives authority for this preliminary survey for this movable dam at this particular point, I trust that the members of this House will authorize the Secretary of War to make this preliminary survey for the purpose of ascertaining the feasibility of making that particular improvement.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, this proposition was not presented until after our bill was introduced in the House; in fact, not until yesterday. On examination of it I can not see that it has any merit.

Mr. ZENOR. Will the distinguished chairman allow me to make one suggestion?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. ZENOR. I desire to suggest to the chairman that the phraseology of the amendment which was handed to the chairman on yesterday is somewhat different to the amendment which I have just submitted and which has just been read by the Clerk.

Mr. BURTON. I do not think that makes a change, however, in the effect of the provision. A survey has been made of the Ohio River down as far as Cincinnati at great expense. In this bill there is a provision for surveys with a view to the construction of dams below the mouth of Green River and above the falls or at the head of the falls at Louisville. These two are certainly all that Congress ought to attempt for at least four years to come in that part of the river. There is a reason why Green River was selected rather than Salt River.

Green River is already improved and also affords a very considerable tonnage—600,000 to 800,000 tons. Salt River has not been improved. There is no development there, and we have included in this bill a provision for a survey to determine whether it is worth improving or not. When it has been surveyed and it has been determined to be worth improving, and Congress has taken up that improvement, there will be time to put in a provision for a survey for a dam below the mouth of Salt River. I would suggest another thing, that there is no reason for this survey for the dam below Salt River, which would not apply to the whole of the Ohio from Cincinnati to the mouth.

Mr. PALMER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there is no tonnage or traffic on Salt River?

Mr. BURTON. Well, there is a common saying sometimes applied to defeated candidates. It is to the effect that those is a duty on salt, but no duty on Salt River. I suppose there is not very much tonnage.

Mr. PALMER. I think, Mr. Chairman, the Democrats are tired of going up Salt River.

Mr. PIERCE. We are going to send you up Salt River this fall.

Mr. PALMER. You can not get any provision on the river and harbor bill to do that.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a few remarks upon this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure that this is a very important improvement, as stated by the gentleman from Indiana, whose district abuts the Ohio River at that point on one side, while mine abuts that part of the river on the opposite side. This proposition is indorsed by the Ohio Valley Improvement Company, that has given very considerable attention to it, and it is their deliberate judgment that a dam on the Ohio River at this point would give all the navigation that is asked for on Salt River.

Now on this bill the committee have given a survey to Salt River, which is eminently just and proper. It seems to me that it would be well to have at the same time a survey of the Ohio River and all the information that we can get as to the benefits that will be derived from the construction of a lock and dam on the Ohio River.

If it turns out upon the survey that a lock and dam at this point on the Ohio River will give the navigation that is desired on Salt River, then, of course, it would be better to have the lock and dam on the Ohio River, because it will give slack-water navigation the year round to twenty-odd miles of the Ohio River, a section of that river in which perhaps there have been more disasters to navigation than in any other section over the length of that whole stream. I fully concur in all that the gentleman from Indiana has said in behalf of this movement, and I hope this committee will authorize the survey.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ohio River, above the Falls at Louisville, with a view to the construction of a dam.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for that.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, lines 9 and 10, after the words "Ohio River," in line 9, erase the words "above the Falls at Louisville, with a view to the construction of a dam," and insert "at the head of the Falls at Louisville, with a view to the enlargement of the present dam or a construction of a new one."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Medomac River to the head of navigation.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 107, after line 20, insert the words "Maryland. Patapsco River, with a view to a deep channel from the main channel in said river to the drawbridge at the mouth of Bear Creek."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Weymouth Fore River.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 107, after line 25, insert "Weepecket Rock."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Marquette Harbor and vicinity, with a view to ascertaining whether further harbor of refuge facilities are needed, and if so, at what point.

Manistique Harbor.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 108, after line 17, insert "Charlevoix Harbor, with a view to obtaining a channel 18 feet in depth from Lake Michigan to Pine Lake."

The amendment was considered, and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Big Black River, from mouth to the Illinois Central Railroad bridge.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman, the chairman of the committee, a question. I see there is $5,000 appropriated for the Wabash River. I desire to ask him if there is $15,000 in addition to that appropriation.

Mr. BURTON. I think there is at least that amount. At the last report there was about $20,000, I think, for the portion below Vincennes. There has been an addition to the provision for the survey, so that it now includes the Little Wabash and the Wabash above Vincennes, but it is thought that the amount appropriated, with that on hand, will be amply sufficient. After examination I see that the amount is $15,320 at the date of the last report; but that, with the $5,000 appropriated herein, will be amply sufficient.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman thinks that will be a sufficient amount?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; with the $5,000. Mr. Chairman, I would like to return for a minute to the amendment proposed to section 6, which was passed over because it was dependent upon the adoption of section 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to return to section 6. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON. I will state that section 11 having been adopted, the amendment offered to section 6 is now in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 97, section 6, line 7, after the word "ninety-four," insert "and any regulation hereafter prescribed in pursuance of the aforesaid section 4 is amended by section 11 of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURTON. I take it that section 6 has been matured by the reading, and that the section now stands as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands the situation.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISSOURI.

Missouri Chute, with a view to ascertaining whether the closing of the same is required in the interest of navigation.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "navigation," in line 16, page 109, the following:

"Provided, That if the improvement be deemed advisable and urgent the same may be immediately made and the cost thereof paid out of the amount appropriated for the improving of the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Ohio to and including the mouth of the Missouri River: Provided, The estimated cost of said improvement shall not exceed $25,000."

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman, that amendment does not call for any additional appropriation. It simply provides that if upon preliminary survey and examination the improvement is deemed urgent, then that not exceeding $25,000 taken from the amount appropriated for the improvement of the Mississippi River lying between the mouth of the Ohio and the Missouri may be used at this point and the work done immediately.

Now, the reason I offer the amendment is this: The river is cutting in there and is about to destroy a little town of between 200 and 300 population. It is not alone for the protection of the town, it also improves the river. It is not made absolute, but it is left, under that amendment, within the judgment of the engineers, the persons having the work in charge. If after making that survey and examination in their judgment it will not cost more than $25,000, and in their judgment the improvement should be made immediately, then under the amendment they are authorized to use this amount of that appropriation.

I hope the amendment will be adopted. I can not see any good reason why it should not be adopted. The committee has been kind in authorizing this survey. It was authorized at the last Congress, but the bill failed in the Senate. No doubt when the survey is made the report will be in favor of closing up the Missouri chute. It ought to have been closed up long ago, and I hope it will be closed up in the immediate future. If this amendment is adopted there will be no additional cost to the Government. It will not interfere with other appropriations to any considerable extent. It will protect the people interested and will improve the navigation of the river at that point.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman. I really think that if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROBB] had understood our rules he would not have made this motion. It is a proposition to do a thing that this committee, during my recollection, has never done. The rule is well established that a preliminary examination should first be ordered, and if on that preliminary examination there is a favorable report, a detailed survey and estimate of cost may, in the discretion of the the Secretary of War, be made.

So that there is no possibility—indeed such is the provision of a positive statute—of an appropriation for a project that is to be surveyed until a later bill is passed after the report upon the survey. Formerly the law was even stronger than that. It required first a preliminary examination, then a detailed survey by a later act, and not until still later the making of an appropriation by Congress, if it should be deemed proper. But the law in this particular was changed in 1899.

As I have said, I do not recall a single case where it has been provided that if a survey should result in a favorable report the Government should at once go on and spend money. Why, sir, if we should adopt the gentleman's amendment, why should we not make a similar provision to every item in this whole list of surveys? Why should we not add on in every case a provision carrying with it an appropriation? What else would the gentleman have us do, what else would be right, than that we should in each of these cases add a provision that if the result of the survey should be favorable, such and such an amount should be expended?

What is the object of having these preliminary examinations, anyway? The object is that we may have information, and that with such information before it Congress may act intelligently and deliberately. It would be a most unfortunate departure from the rule to adopt any such amendment as that of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ROBB. I will inquire of the gentleman whether, without any provision for a survey, a part of the appropriation of, I believe, $600,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi River from the Ohio to the Missouri might not be used in this way?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly, if the interests of navigation required it. We have been very careful, however, in regard to that matter in this bill. We have not provided for a single diversion of the appropriation on that stretch between the mouth of the Missouri and Cairo.

Mr. ROBB. All I ask is to make that certain which is now uncertain. It may be that——

Mr. BURTON. There are a great many other localities that would be glad to have that which is uncertain made certain—localities, too, that have very strong claims.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. ROBB, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Black Rock Harbor, with a view to obtaining a suitable channel for deep-draft vessels around the rapids and shoals at the head of the Niagara River.

Mr. BURTON. I offer the amendment which I sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 11, page 110, insert "Sheepshead Bay."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

NORTH CAROLINA.

Lockwoods Folly River.

Mr. BURTON. I have been requested to offer an amendment to insert at this point a provision for a survey of Livingston Creek, North Carolina. I would like to hear some statement from the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY] as to the necessity for such an amendment.

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Chairman, this item was included in the last river and harbor bill, but it has been omitted from this—I suppose by inadvertence. Livingston Creek is a stream that empties into the Cape Fear River some 15 or 20 miles above Wilmington. On that stream is located the town of Cronly, at which place is located a large fertilizer factory, known as Acme Factory. At the same place there is also a large brick-making establishment, which supplies to a great extent the city of Wilmington with the bricks used for building purposes. Frequently, flats loaded with bricks or produce, coming down that stream, are sunk by reason of the snags. It will cost very little to make this survey and have the improvement made.

Mr. BURTON. For how long a distance, probably, can this river be navigated?

Mr. BELLAMY. I suppose about 20 miles.

Mr. BURTON. By vessels of what draft?

Mr. BELLAMY. By vessels of, I suppose, from 8 to 10 feet—probably 12.

Mr. BURTON. Is there a farming territory bordering on the stream?

Mr. BELLAMY. Yes, sir; a very excellent farming territory.

Mr. BURTON. How many towns are there on this stream?

Mr. BELLAMY. There is the town of Cronly, at which the Acme fertilizer factory, of which I have just spoken, is situated. That is a considerable town.

Mr. BURTON. What is the population?

Mr. BELLAMY. About 1,500, I should say.

Mr. BURTON. Is there any navigation on that stream now?

Mr. BELLAMY. Yes, sir; it is used by flatboats and barges for the transportation of fertilizer and brick. Frequently the boats run upon snags and are sunk.

Mr. BURTON. I will say frankly I do not like to see placed upon this bill provisions for these minor streams. These applications are getting to be numerous. We have tried to eliminate a good many; but I am willing that the provision asked for by the gentleman from North Carolina be inserted. I send the amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert between lines 13 and 14, page 110, the words "Livingston Creek."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Indian Island Slough, from Pamlico River to mouth of South River, with a view of obtaining a depth of 7, 8, and 9 feet, respectively, and 100 feet wide, or as wide as may be necessary.

Carrot Island Slough, beginning at a point opposite Middle Marshes, and thence through Carrot Island Slough and Lewis Thoroughfare to the main channel in Newport River, with a view of obtaining a navigable depth of 7, 8, 9, and 10 feet at mean low water.

Neuse River, from Goldsboro to Newbern, with a view to securing a depth of 3 feet.

New River.

Mr. BURTON. I suggest to the gentleman who amended this that it is not in the proper form it should appear in the bill. I will introduce a pro forma amendment by moving to strike out the words "New River," and yield a few moments to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], and ask him to explain about the Perquimans River.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the Perquimans River is a considerable stream, and the town of Hertford is located on that river, a town of about 2,500 inhabitants. The principal industry there is the manufacture of lumber, and frequently that manufactured lumber in being sent out of the river by barges had to be lightered down the river in order to avoid certain obstructions to the navigation of that river just at or below the town of Hertford. There is plenty of depth of water, but the difficulties are these obstructions in the river. The cost of the survey will be very slight, and I can not conceive that the cost of the work, if there shall be a favorable report and it shall receive a favorable consideration of the House hereafter, will exceed $1,000.

Mr. BURTON. "The Perquimans River at and below Hertford?"

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Then I withdraw the pro forma amendment, and move to amend by inserting the words:

Perquimans River at and below Hertford.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PENNSYLVANIA.

Susquehanna River below Northumberland.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendments at this point.

The Clerk read the amendments, as follows:

Page 112, after line 18, "Susquehanna River, near Wilkesbarre, with a view to ascertaining the desirability of removing the two dikes constructed in said stream, and in case such removal is reported to be desirable the Secretary of War is authorized to allow the same to be done."

Also the following:

Page 112, lines 19 and 20, strike out the words "four, five, and seven" and insert "three, four, and five."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendments will be considered together. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the adoption of the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Monongahela River, Locks and Dams 1, 4, 5, and 7.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I would state that the amendments just adopted referred to the paragraph which the Clerk has just read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendments will be considered as applying to the paragraph just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beaver River, from the Ohio River to the northern end of Beaver Falls Borough, with a view to slackwater navigation.

Mr. BURTON. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 112, at the bottom of the page, strike out lines 23, 24, and 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Charleston Harbor, to ascertain the advisability of extending the piers with a view to providing a harbor of refuge.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment there which will not be necessary to send to the desk. It is as follows:

Strike out the word "piers" and insert the word "jetties" in line 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Edisto River.

Mr. BURTON. I move to amend; after the words "Edisto River" add the words "from the mouth to the Aiken and Edgefield line."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Elk River.

Mr. BURTON. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 113, after line 22, add the words "Big Hatchie River from its mouth to Rialto."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. Also the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 113, strike out lines 23 and 24 and insert "Obion and Forked Deer rivers."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 113, at the end of line 20, amend by adding "Wateree River from its mouth to Camden."

Mr. BURTON. I have no objection if there be entered this proviso:

Provided, That no amount shall be expended for the improvement of said river until further order of Congress.

Mr. FINLEY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment which I just offered and offer the following, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend on page 113, at the end of line 20, by adding "Wateree River from its mouth up to Camden, and until further action by Congress improvement on said river is suspended."

Mr. BURTON. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

VIRGINIA.

Oyster Harbor.
Alexandria Harbor.

Mr. BURTON. I move that the words "Alexandria Harbor," in line 8, be stricken out. The following item includes all that is intended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alexandria Harbor, with a view to improving the channel in Hunting Creek and across the Potomac to Maryland.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment after line 10.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 115, after line 10, insert the words:

"WASHINGTON.

"Duncan Rocks, Straits of Juan De Fuca, with a view to the removal of the same."

After the above:

"Columbia River, between Vancouver and the mouth of the Willamette, with a view to ascertaining the effect of the dikes and other works between the points named."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

WEST VIRGINIA.

Little Kanawha River, with a view of continuing the improvement thereof to Burnsville.
Cheat River.
New River at its confluence with the Green Brier River.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 115, after line 15, insert:
"Big Kanawha River, from Lock 2 to the falls.
"Elk River, with a view to open river navigation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, one or two minor points. On page 115, in line 15, I am told that the word "Greenbrier" is a single word. I ask unanimous consent that that correction be made, consolidating the two words and changing the capital B to a small b.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTON. In the amendment as finally adopted on page 62 there is a sentence reading:

The Secretary of War shall reserve—reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Or—

I ask unanimous consent that that be made to read:

The Secretary of War shall reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the amendment heretofore adopted be changed in accordance with the suggestion he has just made. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER] is now present. Does he desire to be heard?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, consent was given yesterday that the provision of the bill making an appropriation for the destruction of the water hyacinth be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman an amendment pending?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I intended to offer an amendment giving to Texas the same benefits and opportunities that Louisiana and Florida have for the destruction of this plant; but I propose to refrain now from offering the amendment, with this explanation: I am told by those in charge of this bill that this appropriation was only for the purpose of experimenting with the destrution of the water hyacinth.

The provision says it is for their destruction. I think Texas
